—Two little children of Clyde Woodcox at the Junction are down with diphtheria. Frank Boyle was up town yesterday afternoon looking for a nurse to help care for them.

—The length of life may be increased by lessening its dangers. The majority of people die from lung troubles. These may be averted by promptly using One Minute Cough Cure, Davenport the druggist.

—Senator W. H. Nusbaum, Representative C. M. Brown and Auditor F. A. Borst returned this afternoon from Indianapolis where they were on a little business matter.

—The farmers are disposing of a large quantity of their hay. It is being baled and shipped. The Lake Shore and Wabash depots are busy places, there being several loads of hay in waiting for cars.

Marriage licenses have been issued to Orvelle Robbins and Minnie Cabi, Chas Brown and Maude Galloway, Chas Moses and Arvilla M. Hollopeter, John Zimmer and Valeria Case, Thos. S. Colby and Sarah Bowman, Delmer J. Jenners and Flora Bachtel.

—Our two young Smithfield friends Geo. B. Duncan and B. F. Duncan, sons of the late Commissioner, Geo. H. Duncan, made us a brief business call today. The boys have grown to bright young business men and we are glad to renew their acquaintance. We might add, they paid the old Reliable COURIER way over into '98.

The wife of Mr. D. Robison, a prominent lumberman of Hartwick, N. Y., was sick with rheumatism for five months. In speaking of it Mr. Robinson says: "Chamberlain's Pain Balm is the only thing that gave her any rest from pain. For the relief of pain it cannot be beat." Many very bad cases of rheumatism have been cured by it. For sale at 50 cents per bottle by Davenport the Druggist. 52

—There is no law, says an exchange by which tariff taxes can be required to be paid in gold. On the average about 30 per cent. of tariff taxes were paid in gold in 1893, 25 per cent. in January, 1894, less than 1 per cent. of the tariff taxes have been paid in gold. They have been paid chiefly in silver certificates, greenbacks and coin notes of 1890, all of which are by law legal tenders for tariff dues. And it is this use by government that keeps and will keep all these kinds of money at par.

In 1892 Mr. A. L. Goldwater, who own s three retail drug stores in New York City, having learned of the great value of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for colds, croup and whooping cough, ordered a supply for his customers. It met with so much favor that he soon found it necessary to order more, and during the winter sold over two gross of the remedy. He says it gives the best satisfaction of any cough cure he has ever handled. For sale at 25 and 50 cts. per bottle by Davenport the Druggist. 52

—There is one matter wherein the country newspaper labors at a disadvantage in time of money stringency as compared with the manufacturer. The publisher never finds a time when he can shut down his plant and lay off his employes, excepting when he reaches a point where he becomes a "busted commodity," so to speak. The paper must be turned out every week and the expenses continue right on just the same as when money was plentiful.

When most needed it is not unusual for the family physician to be away from home. Such was the experience of Mr J. Y. Schenck, editor of the Caddo, Ind. Ter., Banner, when his little girl, two years of age was threatened with a severe attack of croup He says: "My wife insisted that I go for the doctor, but as our family physician was out of town I purchased a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, which relieved her immediately. I will not be without it in the future." 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by, Davenport, the druggist. 52

—According to the ruling of Judge Oliver, in the District Court at Rock Rapids, Iowa, a man and his wife are both liable for the payment of a newspaper taken and read by the family. A judgment was given by Judge Oliver to the Germania Publishing Co., for a subscription bill of $20, on the ground that a newspaper is a household necessity. Of course it is.

—M E. Garrett has lately added a new pair of computing scales. They are greatly improved over the scales that have been in use by some of our merchants, in fact in a moment's time you can show what 17 pounds of butter would cost at 12½ cents a pounds, etc. The scales are absolutely correct. His customers will receive just as many pounds as they pay for and Mr. Garrett will lose nothing by giving overweight, as is often the case on the ordinary scales. These improvements cost money, but will give both Mr. Garrett and his customers correct weight.

—Misses Olive Hough and Clara Harris returned Saturday from Hicksville where they spent a few days visiting relatives.

Friday's Daily.

—Mrs. R. Blum, of Garrett, was over her to-day, to do some shopping.

—Mrs. Reuben Loockwood who has been quite sick is now improving.

—Conrad Myers, of Fort Wayne, is the guest of his niece Mrs. Sophia Snell.

—W. W. Lanning is one of the latest new recruits to the WEEKLY list. And still there is room.

—Mrs. Sophia Snell has been having some repairs made on her fine residence property on South Main street.

—The City of Washington is to have a union station which will be used by all railroads that enter that city, except the B. & O. which will continue to use its own station.

—Mrs. S. S. Potter went down to LaOtto this morning to attend the funeral of Mrs. Isabel Potter the latter being an aunt to S. S. Potter. Mrs. Potter died very suddenly from old age.

—Great bargains in Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silverware, Gold Spectacles, Gold Pens at Yesbera's Jewelry store, from now until Jan. 1, '97.

—Capitalists are locating a new industry in Chicago. They own all the available mines of pumice stone in the United States, These mines are chiefly at Salt Lake, Utah with less important ones in Southern Nebraske.

—We were pleasantly surprised this afternoon by a call from two tall young men, neither of whom we could at first recall. They were Harry McBride son of J. N. McBride. of Waterloo, and Bert McBride, second son of Judge R. Wes McBride, of Indianapolis. Bert is now in Cincinnati and in the employe of the Central States Dispatch and another transportation line, the Continental. We always glad to see our young friends, and to hear as to their welfare.

—Large stock of Christmas candie at John Kruger's.

—Mrs. E. L. Siver, of Fort Wayne, daughter of C. A. O. and Mrs. McClellan will have on exhibibition and for sale at the Root & Co. store at that city next Saturday, 250 of her hand-painted Pin Trays. Mrs. Siver has a national reputation as a painter. and no doubt that store will be crowded with ladies anxious to buy this pretty ware.

—Don't let you best girl go without a Christmas present when you can get a Solid Gold Ring at Yesbera's jewelry store for $100.

—Some of our merchants are decorating their stores for the Holidays. The usual hankerchief decoration may be seen in Bishop & Lackey's store, and at Olds Bros you will find the genuine Santa Clause headquarters. Here the decorations are lovely and the many new toys bought for this season are just being brought out. Watch for their opening announcement in tomorrow's DAILY.

—Clerk Long has issued marriage license to John Knavel and Rhoda Squires, Aaron Capeland and Vila Nodine.

Monday's Daily.

—George Draggoo of Concord died Saturday.

—The Angola Bryan League has fitted up permanent quater's and keep up the the good work.

—Venezuela will hold a presidential election in October of next year and already there are four candidates in the field.

—It is the season of trading and buying that is now upon us. The people are looking for bargains and the dealers are no doubt desirous of disposing of their goods. The window displays are attractive and the stocks are large and of excellent quality. The time is therefore ripe for business. Those desiring goods and those having goods for sale are of the same mind. All that is necessary is for one class to keep the other fully informed as to goods and bargains. The best and surest way to do this is through the columns of the newspaper that are carefully scanned by the people.

—Alabama has produced a new woman, aged fifteen, who edits a newspaper at Atlanta, and who publicly horsewhipped a male rival of three times her age for casting slurs upon her father's character.

—Fort Wayne Sentinel:—Charles Sheets, of Auburn, is the guest of his brother, Herman Sheets. He says the diphtheria scourge in Auburn is abateing, He had the misfortune to lose by this disease three of his children in one week, their ages being four, nine and eleven years.

—Straight Loans on Business property in Auburn, long time, $1000 up, at 6 per cent by Walter C. Hartman, Real Estate Dealer.

—Will Clarke, who recently returned from Conesville, Iowa, is the latest new subscriber to the WEEKLY. He got so attached to the old home paper while he was in the west, that he proposes to keep it up. Correct.

—The parade starts from the Opera House at 11:30 Saturday noon of the South Before the War Company.

—Whenever you want a favor, just ask your home paper for it. Don't make any difference whether you are a patron or not. Then when you have a little job of printing to do, in which there is a few cents for the the printer, send it away to some other town. It's not very good business judgment, but it is enterprising and cheeky. The newspaper man will not care, for he may get to write your obituary some day. He hopes he will, at least, and rest assured he will do it to a "Queen's taste," as the saying goes.

Tuesday's Daily.

—A. J. Price, of Butler, was in town yesterday forenoon on some business matter.

E. Case, of Spencerville was in town yesterday, and made his final settlement with the county commissioners in the gravel road matter at St. Joe. He was appointed to superintend the work. The road is all completed.

—Mrs. C. M. Merica left this morning for Fort Wayne where she will visit a few days with relatives.

—Mrs. J. H. Wagoner and two sons of Hudson, were guests over Sunday of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Ensley. The ladies are sisters.

—Silas Nugen, Frank Provines and Aaron Osbun returned to-day from Buffalo where they were a few days, having gone down with a load of stock.

—M. E. Gardner of the Butler Herald was here yesterday and reported a bad accident suffered by his wife on Friday. She was at Princeton, Ill., and accidentally fell breaking one bone of her leg just above the ankle. Mr. Gardner has gone out there.

—Mrs. C. W. Reesh of Garrett was here yesterday and again went on our list of subscribers. She used to reside here and of course wants to hear the Auburn news.

CORRESPONDENCE

BUTLER.

Christopher Keller remains rather poorly, but is said to be improving.

Ben Kelsey of Indianapolis assisted J. A. Campbell in the adjustment of a loss at Edon, Ohio last week.

Isaac Stiefel and Brother Leopold, who has just returned from Germany are about to open a new dry goods store in town.

The Farmers Institute of last week was a grand success in every way. The attendance was all that could have been desired. The interest manifested was unabated to the close. Too much praise cannot be expressed for the able manner in which ideal farm was portrayed by Mr. Judd of Ohio, Mr. Babcock of Lagrange, Ind., Mrs. Mederith of Southern Ind, and many others

Last but not least was the successful venture of the ladies of the M. E. church at which place the Institute was held, who played "keeping hotel" in the basement of the church, realizing about forty dollars therefrom.

Charles W. Campbell was home from school at Angola.

The churches are making arrangements for Christmas festivities.

A few children about town are still suffering from sore throats, but no acute cases are reported.

John Cleckner, of near Pleasant Lake visited with R. C. Cempbell last Sunday.

Hamilton was visited by a small fire last week. A dwelling owned by Wm. Miller, caught from clothing coming in contact with a stove pipe. A vigorous application of water, and a juditious use of fire extinguishers saved the place from a serious conflagration.

Her Love Letter

We have been handed a letter written by a little school girl to a little boy,—not so very little. It treats mostly of love and sich. If she could hear us read it aloud she would blush and feel awful green and still. And then she would resolve never to write another love letter, at least not till she is 'steen years old. Little one, you can have the letter by calling at this office. It will easy to prove property as your name at the bottom is quite nicely written.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

PURELY VEGETABLE.

The cheapest, purest and best family medicine in the world! An effectual specific for all diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Spleen. Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common, as a bad breath; and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your appetite, complexion and general health.

CONSTIPATION

should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact, nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache, for the relief of which take Simmons Liver Regulator.

A Gone Deer.

SEVERAL ESCAPE AND ONE IS STILL AT LARGE.

Last Sunday five deer escaped from the Bass farm near Ft. Wayne. The gate was left open and all escaped. Two returned to the enclosure, another was shot near Lindenwood cemetery and another was Monday, killed by dogs near Sheldon. The remaining animal is still at large.

Sprained Ankle

Squire Walborn came out this morning with two crutches, made necessary by a badly sprained ankle. He was coming out of the court house yesterday, and in coming down the stone steps at the front, he happened to step into the wide crack between the two long stones that have been sliding apart for a long time. The crack was just big enough to catch his heel and fasten it and his ankle was badly wrenched. It will be some time before he can use it freely and it is very painful.

Puss' Toothache.

Yesterday, Dr. Edwards had a new experience in dentistry. It may be called an experience in comparative dentistry, for a cat was the subject. The Dispatch has an office cat that is quite a pet, but yesterday it was wild with pain of some sort, and finally it began clawing at one side of its face. This kept up till its cheek was raw and bleeding. It was a plain case of toothache. So to try what could be done,

BEFORE.

Dr. Edwards was called in. The cat was held tightly, and a pencil inserted in its month to keep it from biting, and an examinattion made. It had a tooth broken in such a way as to expose the nerve, and was no doubt suffering terribly. It was pulled out and the cat made happy. The accompanying snap shots for the COURIER will illustrate the case.

People who aim to keep others humble by exposing their weaknesses are apt to become proud of their ignoble task.

The only way for a rich man to be healthy is by exercise and abstinence, to live as if he was poor; which are esteemed the worst parts of poverty.

No one ever acquired skill in any occupation by a struggle of the will, but by continual hard and earnest work, conquering difficulties one after another by daily toil.

It is reported that the battleship Texas is nearly ready to spring another leak on the public. It would be less expensive to put this boat on wheels. Having done everything else it might even develop an ability to fly.

A chemist who recently analyzed a glass of beer in New York found in it picric acid, glucose, glycerin, corn meal, resin and aloes. His analysis isn't to be relied upon if it didn't also show a fair percentage of headache.

At a meting of mothers in Chicago the other day the chief topic of discussion was a paper on "The Boy—Shall We Whip Him?" It depends on the boy; if he is playing full back on the university foot-ball team we should say not.

The Hudson-Kimberly Printing Company, in the persons of its president, treasurer and secretary, has been indicted at Kansas City for distributing advertising cards on which had been stamped the imprint of a $20 gold piece. The jury held that this constituted a serious offense against the Federal laws regulating counterfeiting.

E. L. Godkin tells the New York schoolmasters that the Chimmie Fadden vernacular is making altogether too great a havoc in the language of the day. He deplores it, but he allows that it is catching and frequently impressive. He mentions the fact that there are lawyers who purposely use bad grammar and bad rhetoric for their greater effect on juries.

A leading French paper sees blood on the moon in the fancied investment of the United States with "the right to interfere in all territorial quarrels of European powers with the New World States." The vision is mistaken. The United States claims no such right. Nor, indeed, is there likely to be any further occasion for the claiming of it. European holdings in America are few, and their boundaries are now so well defined that no further disputes of a serious nature are to be apprehended.

It has been the habit of the holders of upper and lower sleeping car berths in the same section to amicably settle who shall occupy the seat facing the engine in the daytime, and usually it is "first come, first served," but recently a dispute arose over this alleged privilege, and the company was appealed to. It was decided that there was no choice in the matter and that the holder of the upper berth was entitled to the coveted place quite as much as he who bought the lower. It would seem that if there is any advantage in facing the engine during the day the upper berth's occupant is entitled to it in compensation for his discomfort at night.

Chicago Tribune: An occupant of the jail at Brazil, Ind., has spread consternation among the officials by proving his ability to get out of any cell on five minutes' notice. He does not appear to wish to escape and seems to be enjoying the sensation he is causing. He insisted on being left alone when the tests were made, and will not reveal the secret of his unique power. In the estimation of the correspondent the case is enveloped in absolute mystery. The chief value of the incident is that it marks the first appearance of Brazil as a rival of Winamac and other famous Indiana towns. It is a somewhat mild beginning, but it shows signs of a latent ability to furnish something really admirable.

It is gratifying to the sense of justice to note that a certain railroad conductor who was discharged because he removed the foot of the Governor of Kentucky from a seat in the car is to be reinstated. The conductor, it appears, told the Governor to obey the rules and keep his feet off the seats. The Governor retorted that he didn't give—some trivial thing—for the rules and pushed his foot further forward on the seat. Then the conductor grabbed the offending member of the Governor and placed it gently on the floor and subsequently lost his position for this Spartan-like devotion to duty. It is not stated who is responsible for the reinstatement of the conductor, but let us hope it was the Governor himself, and that the offense to his dignity was not proof against his appreciation of the merits of a conscientious official.

John Hardcastle Hall, of Mankato and Oshkosh, has forgotten who he is and wants somebody to tell him. One man knows, because he trusted him with several thousand dollars, with which John Hardcastle Hall was to run a mill. He falsified the books, ran in debt and then went away and forgot. It seems easy, almost idyllic, and any man with an over-developed and chronic memory may well envy him. Hardcastle Hall went to Minneapolis and called on a clergyman, telling him he had forgotten who he was and asking the reverend gentleman to help him in the identification. It seemed hardly worth while, all things considered, but as the business of the clergyman is largely to concern himself with human refuse he endeavored to help the man to a label. Physicians and psychics and newspaper men called on him and flattered his already diseased vanity with investigating him. They tunneled in his mentality, so to speak, burrowed in his brain, made excavations in his memory and, no doubt, got up a lot of unsightly material. One day Hall remembered the name of the man he had wronged and sent him this note: "I am in Mankato and have lost my memory. Your name came to my mind to-day. It seems as if we had been associated together in some way and I have ventured to write to you and see if you cannot establish my identity." The man could establish it all right enough and Hall seemed grateful to find out his name again, but when it came to the depredations committed against the man who trusted him he forgot again—forgot all. Ah, the perfect pulchritude of such a memory! What envy does it not awaken in those who have merely the common, everyday memories which so afflict suffering mankind! The duality of the mind is a recognized phenomenon, but it is rare as a white blackbird. There is a good deal more nonsense than marvel about such forgettings and to one sufferer will be found a dozen malingerers.

The average yield of potatoes per acre in the United States is from sixty to ninety bushels. In the Island of Jersey—that tight little island of fine cows and superfine potatoes—the average yield of the latter is 333 bushels an acre, with instances not a few of yields of 500 to 600 bushels to the acre. Of course, the area of land is small in Jersey, for the whole island contains less than 28,000 acres, with about 19,000 acres arable, and farms are very small, many of them containing three acres or less and the largest has but forty acres. This makes the most intensive farming necessary, hence the yield of potatoes noted. Such results and such conditions prove that large farms are not necessary, and that, in fact, they may be of the greatest disadvantage, particularly where not thoroughly cultivated. "Ten acres enough" is not so absurd a proposition as is generally supposed.

Presence of mind is a quality much talked of, much honored, and little cultivated, yet, like most other good things in this world, it requires cultivation to bring it to any degree of perfection, for in very few cases is it a natural gift. Some people there are, doubtless, to whom it comes naturally and by instinct to do the right thing at the right time and place; but they are few in number. Then, again, some people are by nature cooler-headed than their neighbors, and do not shout or otherwise become useless just when their services are required. But this quiet composure, though very valuable, is not quite the same thing as presence of mind. The latter consists not only in having your wits ready for use, but in knowing how to use them, and being sufficiently calm and steady in mind to remember and turn to account that knowledge. From the earliest possible age children should be taught self-control and the instinct of trying to remedy any mistake or accident they may encounter.

At last the name of one of New York's greatest citizens is to have a fitting memorial. Workmen are busy in the small oval park in the rear of Cooper Union, laying the foundations of Augustus St. Gaudens' statue of Peter Cooper. It is more than thirteen years since the great philanthropist died. A few days after his death, April 4, 1883, the Board of Aldermen passed a resolution to erect a monument. Boxes were placed in public places, at the ferries, in the public buildings, and the poor who had benefitted by the dead man's charities showered their pennies into them, till thousands of dollars had been raisd. The committee selected to take charge of the work decided upon a sculptor. He was several years in finishing the statue, and then ex-Mayor Edward Cooper, the son of the philanthropist, who was one of the committee, did not like the sculptor's conception of his father, and the committee refused to accept it. The work then was placed in the hands of St. Gaudens. He finished the statue several months ago. It is now in his workshop in West Thirty-sixth street. The sculptor refuses to let any one but the committee see it until the time comes for its unveiling.

Untold Lies.

The art of telling a lie by telling the truth, but less than the whole of it, is cultivated by some people; and when their trick of concealment is by some chance found out, they are never quite believed afterward.

A person of this type was once relating certain circumstances to an acquaintance, who appeared, perhaps, a trifle incredulous.

"What!" exclaimed the narrator; "do you suspect what I tell you?"

"Oh, no," answered the other; "but I suspect what you don't tell me!"

The remark was an apt one, and ought to have been a warning to the speaker. But inasmuch as this person was grown to years of discretion, and still kept back a part of the truth, it is doubtful if any experience could teach him to be really truthful. There is a great deal of untruthfulness latent somewhere in human nature, and unless one is "brought up to tell the truth," and taught in childhood to abhor a lie in any shape, there is very little hope that such a person will become outspoken and candid.

Prelates Who Liked Each Other.

The late Archbishop Benson, of Canterbury, and Cardinal Manning used to meet frequently at the Athenaeum Club, and were good friends, though Manning thought that Benson was not rugged enough in his policy. A correspondent of the archbishop, who was also a friend of the cardinal, received from Lambeth Palace in 1886 a letter in which the Anglican primate said of the Roman cardinal: "You are not mistaken in thinking that I highly regard his person and his life and value the goodness of Cardinal Manning's heart toward me," with more to the same purpose. The correspondent showed the letter at the time to Cardinal Manning, who read it with evident pleasure. "And I, too," he said, as he put it down, "have a great liking for my dear sister of Canterbury."

The four great tunnels of the world are cited as an illustration of the marked diminution of the cost of engineering works during the past quarter of a century. The Hoosac tunnel, the oldest of the four, cost $500 a foot; the Mount Cenis, the next in date, $475; the St. Gothard, $365; and the Arlberg, the most recent, only $200.

A NEGRO CAMP MEETING IN THE SUNNY SOUTH

PERHAPS there is no annual event looked forward to with greater pleasure than camp meeting time in the South, in which part of the country they are conducted on entirely original and unique plans, says a writer in the Globe-Democrat.

Those who have never attended one of these open-air meetings can form no idea of how they are carried on, and the many curious and peculiar things to be seen and heard. Camp meetings have been handed down from generation to generation, and may properly be called a Methodist invention. Camp meetings are sometimes regarded as sensational, but there can be no doubt that they do a world of good in redeeming and saving those hardened in sin. Whatever the merits of "city preaching," there is a distinctiveness about camp meeting services arising from the very nature of the case. They are a direct appeal to the popular heart, and derive no small measure of their inspiration and effectiveness not alone from the comparative informalities of the service, but from the hospitality which creates a community of good feeling amid parties present; the sense of worshiping in "the groves, which are God's first temples," operating in the meantime an abiding element of interest and devotion. Rightly considered, the camp meeting is the school of a host of virtues, and it is not too much to say that its history, though an old, old story, has never been adequately told.

To get squarely down to the enjoyment of camp meeting it is necessary to attend one held in the mountains of North Georgia or South Carolina. Those nearer the cities have too many frills to be really enjoyed. The tent holders are always hospitable and kind, and no one need go with a feeling of goneness in the gastric regions. And such eating! Fried yellow-leg chicken, big fat chicken pie, baked turkey and—everything good. To a hungry soul the invitation, "Turn up yer plate and help yerself," is generally accepted without further ceremony. The good people want you to eat, and eat plenty. This is always a part of the program that is seldom neglected.

THEY OCCASIONALLY GET WORKED UP TO A VERY HIGH PITCH.

Frequently some bold and daredevil mountaineer, without the love of the Lord or the fear of revenue officers in his heart, will open up a blind tiger a short distance from the ground, where mountain dew of illicit make is sold to his neighbors, or to any one else with the necessary price. Occasionally these blind tigers get their neighbors into trouble, but not often, as the mountain people have a way peculiarly their own of standing by each other in all matters relating to the liquor question. Many of them regard a little spirits as necessary, even at a camp meeting.

At a camp meeting in Lumpkin County a few years ago the writer heard a former dispenser of corn juice give his experience. He said:

"I came through just seven years ago, if I'm spared to see Septemoer comin', just erbout sundown at Bald Knob. Preachers could preach in them days. I had laid by my crap, an' had nothin' special to do, an', thinks I, I'll go to camp meeting an' sell er few pints er licker. But I soon seed I was lost accordin' ter Scripter, an' somehow or somehow else I felt powerful pestered. I just hauled down my colors an' give right up, an' I hain't sold no licker sense. I done fergive everybody, even old Brother Latham, who owes fer two quarts er licker bought at camp meetin' eight years ago."

At this point "Brother Latham" thought it time for a change in program, and asked that all unite in prayer, while a large number of the young people made for the spring.

Young folks can get mighty thirsty at camp meeting. Frequent trips are made to the spring by the belles and beaux, and it is also a noticeable fact that some of the couples had "pressing" business which caused them to remain away from the arbor, but those interested in their souls' salvation usually returned to the arbor in time to fall into line when the parson extended the invitation for penitents to come to the anxious bench.

Services are held almost continually during the day and late into the evening, and when the pine knot lights on the platforms covered with dirt around the arbor begin to flick and flare and cease to cast their shadows the older people retire to their beds within the tents, while the younger set are given an opportunity to make love and say sweet nothings while they chew sweet gum gathered from the trees near the springs.

To those reared amid the refining influences of cultivated society such decorum may seem strange, but when the environments and isolating circumstances surrounding these people are taken into consideration it is altogether excusable. No class of people on earth have a higher regard for truth, virtue and the Christian religion, and they are happy in the ignorance of the gay and frivolous ways of the upper crust of the world. They know little and care less about the outside world. They are true-hearted and stand by each other. They are truly the children of nature and love the bright sunshine and mountain wildness. Liberty and freedom go hand in hand with them, and this is second only to the love they feel for their God.

Near Gainesville there is a colored camp ground. The meeting here usually lasts from one to three weeks, according to the outpouring of the spirit and the tenacity of the provision crop. The preaching, shouting, singing and "trancing" of these people are somewhat novel. They occasionally get worked up to a very high pitch and become frantic when the grace of the Lord touches them, and sometimes one of them will go off in a trance and remain motionless for hours. After "reviving" they will tell wonderful stories of their visit to the heavenly land. Some of these stories are entirely unreasonable, but while they are being narrated the good members will stand by and groan "Amen!"

It was noticed, however, that, no matter how badly one of the sisters wanted to shout, she would always take the precaution to hand her hat to some good sister with the remark, "Hold my hat while I shout."

This is one of the few of the colored camp meetings of the original pattern left, and this gives it an interest that it would not otherwise have. The collection basket is not passed around, but those desiring to contribute walk up and place their coin on the altar where the hymns are sung, and some of them walk forward with as much pomp as if they were taking part in a cake walk. They glory in this manner of contributing. The meetings are not run for revenue only, and small collections do not lessen their zeal one whit. They get all there is to be got from such a meeting. The feature of the camp is the singing, and when sinners are called to the anxious bench the congregation sings snatches of hymns, occasionally ringing in a made-for-the-occasion line or two and always winding up with a refrain. There was never more touching music than these people make. It is weird and grand, and is sung like every word came from the very depths of their hearts.

One of their hymns ran something like this:

De Lord seed er sinner er cryin' an' prayin'—
Keep er prayin', sinner!
An' de devil was a-swayin' an' swayin'—
Keep er prayin', sinner!

Den de sinner got 'ligion an' gwine ter git more—
Keep er prayin', sinner!
He'll lan' himself on de happy shore—
Keep er prayin', sinner!

'Postle Peter is standin' at de gate—
Keep er prayin', sinner!
Not long fer dis sinner ter wait—
Keep er prayin', sinner!

Dem heabenly lamps, dey burn so bright—
Keep er prayin', sinner!
Dey seem so glor'us ter my sight—
Keep er prayin', sinner!

Abraham's bosom is safe an' wide—
Keep er prayin', sinner!
Dat am whar I'm er gwine ter hide—
Keep er prayin', sinner!

SCHOOL CHILDREN'S SPORTS.

Snowball and Catball Superseded by the Diamond and Gridiron.

Have you ever noticed how regularly school children revert year after year to certain games and pastimes? One morning there is not a marble to be seen on the streets, the next day every lad almost comes out and is ready for a game of "bunk up" or "bull ring." School children's games have their regular seasons. To introduce any of them out of their fixed dates is to doom them to ignoble failure. The boys will not take them up. Football is invariably taken up in the fall term. It reaches its climax at Thanksgiving. In the same manner baseball comes up in the spring time. Top spinning is never more popular than during the crisp, cool, bracing October weather, but marbles are played in the early spring months, beginning during the bright days of March, after the snows have disappeared, and lasting sometimes as late as early June. Even the girls follow this unwritten law. Hop scotch, the greatest of all favorite outdoor pastimes, is played in the spring, as is the rope jumping and hoop rolling, but jack stones are played in the fall. The old game of three-old-cat is to-day out of date. School children have almost given it up. In its place the regular baseball nine has been substituted.

HOP SCOTCH.

Such are the games of the school children of to-day. There are few novelties because young America rather prefers to imitate his elders than to think out new pastimes. That is also the reason why youngsters have taken so readily to football in the fall and baseball in the spring. To have a match game with another school is productive of more real pleasure to them than an individual game of marbles. Their vanity, too, is touched, for to be in a football or baseball team is a greater honor to them than the winning of a pocketful of marbles, for they receive the plaudits of their fellows and not infrequently that of their elders.

MARBLES.

Wanted to Be Flogged.

Gen. Osborn Wilkinson, of the British army, after describing his experience when as a schoolboy he was "birched" at Eton—and a decidedly painful experience he makes it out to have been—proceeds to tell a singular story of another Etonian, who sought the switch in vain.

This boy was sentenced to be flogged for some misdemeanor, but fortified by the knowledge that his father was greatly opposed to the system of corporal punishment, refused to submit. He was at once expelled, and went home and reported what had taken place.

"Well, well," said his father, "this is most unfortunate. I have just succeeded in securing for you a commission in the Guards, and now, being expelled from Eton, you will no longer be eligible to her majesty's service."

The boy was distracted. His whole heart was set upon a military career. Seeing his son's grief, the father advised him to hasten back to school and beg leave to be flogged and reinstated.

The young fellow set off at once; but alas! vacation had begun, and the master had gone to the continent. Not to be balked, the boy followed, and having overtaken him in Paris, explained the situation and begged a flogging.

"But I can't do it," said the master. "I'm sorry for you, but it would be too irregular, and beside I have nothing with which to do it."

The boy had provided for that emergency, and when he produced a birch rod the master, seeing his sincerity, declined to use the switch, but rescinded the sentence of expulsion, and the boy was able to accept the desired commission.

THE "sacred bonds of matrimony" are being broken by the courts of this and other countries at an alarming rate. In this country, according to recent statistics, 20 per cent. of marriages now terminate in divorces, and 50 per cent. of divorces are granted on grounds that cannot be regarded as preservative of the home and society. From all of which it would appear that a large percentage of divorces are obtained simply because of the ease with which they are obtained. In this phase of the matter lies the source of alarm. For many years the National Divorce League has been trying to obtain uniform divorce laws in all the States. While uniformity of law would do much to lessen the number of divorces, it would seem that there should be a Marriage Reform League seeking to rehabilitate in the public mind the idea regarding matrimonial compacts, once predominating. Such a league cooperating with the former might accomplish much to benefit society. Marriage has been divested of much of its religious character; indeed, has become more of a civic contract. It was once protected by the church, it is now protected by law, and pretty loose law in some States of this Union. In about such proportion as the church has relinquished protection of marriages, have divorces multiplied, and in about such proportion as lawyers have made divorce laws, divorces have been rendered easily obtainable. Putting two and two together, it would seem that as respect for marriage vows has decreased, divorces have increased. Respect for marriage vows is the only guarantee of the home. Perpetuity of the home is the only safety of society. The rapid increase of divorces should therefore be a matter of deep concern, should be a matter for prompt and wise action regarding marriage in the first instance, and divorces in the second. Unless this great question is tackled at both ends, it never can be satisfactorily solved. This is the sum and substance of the matter.

FOOTBALL PARAPHERNALIA.

How the Punter Protects Himself While Playing.

To the spectator who watches the hard-fought battles on the football field nowadays, it appears as though the players are so well protected from injuries that there are not nearly so many risks to be run as there were twelve years ago. Who would have worn boots of a double thickness and padded with thick felt twelve years ago? And yet many of the best players to-day wear them to protect the small bones in their feet and to avoid sprained ankles. If the old-timers had been asked to wear shin guards they would undoubtedly have spurned them, but nobody is without them now. From the light canvas or cloth trousers of former years we have heavily padded moleskins, with bulging knees a foot thick, solid paniers over the hips, and leather protectors for the stomach and kidneys. Canvas jackets are not so popular now, but heavily padded jerseys are considered the right idea instead. Chadwick, of Yale, has, perhaps, the most novel-looking jersey. Around the wrists are leather bands, and on each elbow is a leather pad the size of a loaf of bread. On each shoulder is a leather protector which is half the size of an ordinary saddle and must weigh three or four pounds. The inside of the jersey is lined with some strong texture.

FOOTBALL OUTFIT.

Modern football players believe in protecting their heads. Twelve years ago there were very few "long-haired" experts, but the craze for letting one's locks grow has become universal, so that a football man with short hair is looked down upon. The rubber nose mask, which covers the mouth as well, and the leather helmet are devices that seem almost indispensable. The helmet that is in use now not only covers the top of the head with a cap of hard leather, but protects the ears with two big muffs made of thick felt, through which are small holes, so that the wearer can hear the instructions of his captain. It is estimated that with all of his football togs on a player can tip the scales at thirty pounds above his actual weight. Somebody has suggested steel masks and coats of mail, but fortunately the rules prohibit any such warlike accessories.

It is rather expensive to own a complete outfit, the big 'varsity teams having to pay about $40 per man for the various articles needed in a gridiron battle. But as college elevens have plenty of money at their command, nothing is thought of such an outlay.

OVER 30 YEARS IN CONGRESS.

Holman, of Indiana, Returned After Two Years' Absence.

Among the Democratic veterans in congressional service, retired by the Republican landslide of two years ago, who are this year returned to the House is William S. Holman, of Indiana, the apostle of economy, who is familiarly known as "the watchdog of the treasury." Holman is often called the "great objector."

Born in a pioneer homestead in Indiana 74 years ago, he received a college education, taught school and then became a lawyer. In the 40's he was probate judge and a prosecuting attorney and the next decade went to the Legislature and was subsequently given a seat on the highest court in his State. In 1858 he was elected to Congress and was a member of the House from that time until 1895, with the exception of four years.

WILLIAM S. HOLMAN.

Only Lovesick.

It is not long since the emperor of Austria definitely settled the succession to the throne on his nephew, Archduke Otto, passing over the latter's elder brother, Francis Ferdinand, because he was on the point of death from consumption. Francis is apparently recovering his health, however, and it is hinted that he was not suffering so much from consumption as from blighted affection. He has long wished to marry the Archduchess Stephanie, the widow of Crown Prince Rudolph, whose tragic death at Meyerling a few years ago will be recalled, and he was constitutionally debarred from doing so while he remained in the direct line of succession to the throne.

INDIANA INCIDENTS.

RECORD OF EVENTS OF THE PAST WEEK.

Probable Defeat of the Plan to Erect a $1,000,000 Centennial Building at Indianapolis—Outlaw Bill Wood May Recover—Nursery in a Church.

Indiana's Centennial Project.

The scheme to expend $1,000,000 in the erection of a centennial building in Indianapolis in connection with the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of Indiana's organization as a territory is meeting with bitter opposition in all parts of the State, and there now seems little doubt that the coming Legislature will refuse to give the project encouragement. The objection urged by the outside counties is that Indianapolis is seeking to secure a permanent museum at the expense of the other counties, and, that the State being already some $8,000,000 in debt, it would be folly to add to this debt by holding an exhibition that would place an additional burden upon the people. The subject was canvassed by the last Legislature and an act passed for the appointment of a commission by the Governor to consider the feasibility of a centennial exposition and report to the coming session some plan or plans for the same. The commission was appointed and will meet in a few days to prepare its report. The members of the commission are aware of the feeling that has developed against the project, but they propose to submit a plan that would be creditable to the State on such an occasion, regardless of the fate that may overtake it. They say that anything that does not involve a large expenditure of money would not be creditable to the people, and it would be better to abandon the matter entirely than to have such an exhibit as would detract from rather than add to the good name of the State. It is proposed to have the exposition open from three to six months, and, in order to meet the plans designed by the commission, a permanent building should be erected. At the close of the exposition it is proposed to seek donations of the exhibits and convert the building into a permanent museum. The proposed exposition would be confined to Indiana, but would embrace displays showing every stage of her progress from her organization as a territory in 1800. The present temper of the people outside of the capital city does not promise well for the project, however, and the chances are that it will be coldly treated by the Legislature.

All Over the State.

The flour mill of Franklin, Malony & Co., at Yorktown, was destroyed Saturday morning by fire resulting from a gas explosion. Mr. Franklin was perhaps fatally burned. Loss $20,000, with little insurance.

A unique innovation has been inaugurated by the Northville Methodist Church. The Sabbath school room has been designated the nursery, and committees have been named to be on duty each Sunday to care for the babies brought to the church. The nursery is what the term implies, being supplied with nursing bottles, cabs and cradles, and the Sabbath discourse of the minister will henceforth be unbroken by crying babies.

For several days prominent women of Indianapolis were preparing for the charity ball, and a number of new dresses were made for the occasion. Monday one of these was delivered by a boy from the establishment, who met a colored man in the yard. The negro said he would take the package in, but the boy refused to deliver it to him. As soon as the boy left the negro rang the door bell and called for the dress, saying that the package was intended for another house. The dress was given to him and this was the last seen of him. At another house a negro answering the same description received a dress from the delivery boy, passed through the yard to the alley in the rear and disappeared. One of the dresses cost $50 and the other $75.

Bill Wood, the member of the Miller gang who was shot during a desperate fight with Lebanon officers and whose wounds were pronounced fatal by the attending physicians, seems to be improving, and there now seems a possibility of his recovery. His mother and sweetheart called on him at the jail. The meeting was a most affectionate one, and for the first time since the tragedy the prisoner exhibited some feeling. Jesse Miller and John Paragan, the other members of the gang, who were lodged in jail, were arraigned before Justice Perrill, charged with conspiring to commit murder. They were held to await the result of the Grand Jury's investigation. The streets around the jail were crowded when the prisoners were taken out, heavily guarded, but there was no attempt at violence. Fren Richardson, half brother to Wood, attempted to assault Officer Frost and was promptly lodged in jail.

Mrs. Susan Smith, of Hagerstown, has applied for a widow's pension. Eighteen years ago David Smith lived five miles northeast of town with his family. There were rumors of domestic infelicity, but violence in the family was not suspected. There came a time when David Smith was not seen about the place. His absence was unsatisfactorily explained by members of the family, and the neighbors searched the premises. His mutilated and putrefying body was found in an old well near the house, covered with broken fence rails, stones and dirt. The widow and two of the boys, Jake and Dan, were arrested for the murder. Jake was discharged before trail. Dan received a life sentence in the prison, north, which sentence he is now serving, and the widow was sentenced for life to the reformatory for women at Indianapolis. Two years ago she was pardoned from that institution, and she now applies for a pension as the widow of David Smith, a soldier of the civil war. A peculiar feature of the case is that public sentiment strongly favors the granting of the pension.

Burglars visited the residence of ex-President Harrison, in Indianapolis, Monday night. While Mr. Harrison and the members of the family were in the lower part of the house the thief or thieves nimbly climbed upon the porch and entered the library window. From there they went into Mrs. Harrison's room, where a gold watch and a small sum of money were secured. It is believed the thieves were frightened away because nothing in the other rooms was disturbed. The watch belonged to Mrs. Harrison's first husband, and was highly prized.

At Indianapolis Judge Woods in the United States Circuit Court granted the petition of Receiver McDoel, of the Monon Railway to borrow $200,000 at 6 per cent., which sum is to be expended in the betterment of that road. This will result in the force of the Lafayette shops being increased to 500 men on full time.

H. M. Wellman's daughter was burned to death Thursday near Wakeland. Her clothes ignited while she was building a fire. Mrs. John Teeters, only six months married, was fatally burned by falling into a fireplace. She carried almost a quarter of a mile to where her husband was gathering corn to receive relief.

Russia's New Flag.

Considerable importance is given by European newspapers to an order which they assert the Emperor of Russia has recently signed, making a flag of three horizontal bands, white, blue and red, with the white on top and the red at the bottom, the national flag of Russia. The white flag with the blue St. Andrew's cross is retained for the navy and the yellow flag with the black eagles as the imperial flag. In France this is regarded as the adoption of the French tri-color and a new assertion of the Franco-Russian alliance. As a matter of fact, however, there is nothing new in the flag described, for it has long been the regular Russia mercantile flag.

"WORN OUT."

A COMMON EXPRESSION USED BY AMERICAN WOMEN.

Many do not Realize the Full Significance of Those Two Words.

When a woman is nervous and irritable, head and back ache, feels tired all the time, loses sleep and appetite, has pains in groins, bearing-down sensation, whites and irregularities, she is not "worn out," but feels as if she were. Such symptoms tell her that a womb trouble is imminent, and she cannot act too promptly if she values her future comfort and happiness.

The experience and testimony of some of the most noted women of America, go to prove beyond a question that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will correct all such trouble at once by removing the cause and restoring the organs to a healthy and normal condition. If in doubt, write Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., as thousands of women do.

Here is a lady who says:—

"Let me add my name to your list of testimonials. For years I suffered with such a weakness of the back I could not stand straight. I had terrible pains in my womb. The doctor said an operation must be performed, as there was no other way to be cured. I was afraid to have the operation performed, and kept trying the medicines that I saw advertised. At last I tried yours. After taking three bottles I felt like a new woman. I recommend it to every woman, and cannot praise it enough, for it saved me from the surgeon's knife."—MRS. Chinese Tea Pickers.

The Chinese tea plant is a pretty evergreen from three to seven feet in height, covered in the winter months with fragrant white or yellowish blossoms, resembling those of the orange or blackberry. The first crop of tender, unexpanded leaf buds is gathered in May or June, and is the finest quality, being reserved for the use of the mandarins and other individuals of authority and selling at $8 a pound.

They are gathered by hand with the greatest care, and often with a rough sort of glove, while the pickers are forbidden to partake of any fish or strong-smelling substance, for fear of affecting the delicate flavor. Much depends also upon the exact time of picking, as a delay of even twenty-four hours may produce an inferior grade of tea. No less than five successive immersions may be made from these leaves, while the other crops supply but one or two.

The second and principal harvest is in early summer, the tea selling at $1.50 a pound, and the third and last crop is gathered in the autumn. This is what is usually exported, so that unless dealing with well known tea houses we seldom obtain the choicest brands.

Green tea is made by roasting the leaves over hot fires immediately after picking, but those intended for black tea are allowed to wilt and ferment for several days in the open air until they turn red, when they are "fired" over furnaces of burning charcoal.

The Hysons are most generally used of the green teas, and, like other brands of their class, are often stained by the Chinese with various mineral dyes, such as indigo and gypsum. All but the best teas are also subject to adulteration from the mixture of other kinds of leaves or of exhausted tea leaves recolored with black lead or logwood.

The greatest tea drinkers are said to be the Australians, and after them the English, who consume four times as much tea as coffee, while the people of the United States drink eight times as much coffee as tea.

A Criminal Lawyer's Dodge.

The late Colonel William B. Mann was fond of telling a good story at the expense of Charles Brooke, the well-known criminal lawyer of New York Colonel Mann, as district attorney, was prosecuting a murder case in which Mr. Brooke was counsel for the defense. Circumstantial evidence was strong against the prisoner. The district attorney produced in evidence a pair of boots of Scotch make, belonging to the prisoner, which it was proven fitted exactly the footprints left in the snow by the murderer near the scene of the crime. In submitting the boots in evidence, Mr. Mann called attention to the several odd features of their construction, and added that he had looked all over town for a pair like them, but without success. Mr. Brooke asked that he be allowed to keep one of the boots over night. He thought he could find a pair like them. The boot was turned over to him, and at the opening of court next day he produced another pair of boots identical in every way with those belonging to the prisoner. The man, however, was finally convicted. After it was all over Mann said to Brooke: "See here, Charlie, where did you find those boots? I called at all the big shops in town, but couldn't find them." "Neither could I," said Brooke, "so I had them made over night."—Philadelphia Record.

The Making of Birch-oil.

Connecticut farmers have found a comfortable side profit in gathering the twigs, branches, and saplings of black birch for the birch-oil distilleries. By protecting the young growth, crops are quickly raised. The birch-brush has brought from $1.50 to $3 a ton. The birch-oil has sold at $5 to $8 a pound, but now is less. One ton of birch yields four pounds of oil. Farmers can make the oil themselves. The distillery may be any rough building, and the machinery is inexpensive. The birch-twigs, not over two inches in diameter, are cut in lengths of five inches and thrown into water tight tanks with copper bottoms, in which are coils of steam pipes. Three feet of water is poured in, the tanks hermetically sealed, and steam turned into the pipes. The water is kept boiling six hours, and the steam passes into a pipe which runs in the form of a worm into a barrel of cold water constantly renewed. The steam is condensed in the worm and the oil drips from the end of the pipe into a pail. It was formerly clarified from a dull brown to a light green after this process. Now this is done by spreading a heavy woolen blanket over the birch-wood inside the tank, and the oil drips out pure and ready for market.

The Same Old Sarsaparilla.

That's Ayer's. The same old sarsaparilla as it was made and sold 50 years ago. In the laboratory it is different. There modern appliances lend speed to skill and experience. But the sarsaparilla is the same old sarsaparilla that made the record—50 years of cures. Why don't we better it? Well, we're much in the condition of the Bishop and the raspberry: "Doubtless," he said, "God might have made a better berry. But doubtless, also, He never did." Why don't we better the sarsaparilla? We can't. We are using the same old plant that cured the Indians and the Spaniards. It has not been bettered. And since we make sarsaparilla compound out of sarsaparilla plant, we see no way of improvement. Of course, if we were making some secret chemical compound, we might.... But we're not. We're making the same old sarsaparilla to cure the same old diseases. You can tell it's the same old sarsaparilla because it works the same old cures. It's the sovereign blood purifier, and —it's Ayer's.

"STAR ROUTE" DORSEY.

Now in California Trying to Recover His Lost Fortune.

Stephen W. Dorsey, once United States Senator from Arkansas, and noted for his connection with the great star route scandal many years ago, is now in southern California with a view to recovering his lost fortunes. Mr. Dorsey is interested in a mining property which, he believes, if properly worked, will pan out well. Dorsey was at one time one of the most prominent public men in the country. Before he was involved in the star route case and lost all his money he was said to have been a man that could make and unmake presidents. His first appearance on the political horizon was made in Arkansas after the war. A native of Vermont, he was 18 when the war broke out, and he served under Grant at Shiloh and took part in many of the big battles of the civil strife. When peace was restored he went to Arkansas and became a promoter of big enterprises. He organized a $1,000,000 cattle company in New Mexico and was in the very flush of his fortune when the storm of the star route scandal burst upon him and swept him off his feet. In defending himself in that celebrated case he spent all the wealth he had accumulated and emerged from the clouds of the storm wrecked in fortune and ruined in health. Of recent years he has made his home in Denver and has been casting about for means of rehabilitating himself. He has just been to London, where he secured capital enough to float his enterprise, and his prospects at the present time are bright. The mining property in which Dorsey is interested is located in Picacho, near Yuma. He will build a 100-stamp mill and a railroad to the Colorado river.

Arditi Was Identified.

Those who do not remember Arditi's face, certainly remember the back of his head, for no more characteristic bald spot has ever been turned toward an admiring audience than that of the famous orchestral leader. He once presented a check to be cashed at a certain bank, and the cashier refused to pay him because he was not sure of his identity. Arditi asked him if he had ever been to the opera. "Frequently," he replied. Then he turned his back to the cashier, took off his hat, and said: "Now, am I not Arditi?" The cashier recognized his baldness at once and cashed the check.

BOTH WANT M'KINLEY.

Two Washington Churches Contest for His Attendance.

Two Methodist churches at the National capital are engaged in a friendly contest for the privilege of securing President-elect McKinley as a worshiper. These churches are named Foundry and Metropolitan respectively, and both have an interesting history. Foundry Church was built in 1815 as a thank offering by Henry Foxhall, whose foundry near Washington was preserved from destruction by the British by a storm which destroyed the expedition sent against it. In the deed from Mr. Foxhall conveying the ground and building to the trustees of Foundry Church it was provided that a pew should always be set aside in the church for the use of the "President of the United States."

During the four score years of the existence of Foundry Church many Presidents of the United States have worshiped within its sacred precincts. Among them were Presidents Madison, Jackson, Polk, Buchanan, Lincoln, Johnson, and Hayes. Church sittings are free and the church has no income except the offerings of the congregations, $5,500 being annually required to meet current expenses.

The Metropolitan Church is famous from the fact that President Grant and his family attended worship there when Bishop John P. Newman was its pastor. It is nearly fifty years since the cornerstone of the Metropolitan was laid by Bishop Matthew Simpson, but it was not until February, 1869, that the sacred edifice was dedicated. This church is also noted for having the tallest spire of any church at the National capital. In this spire is the only chime of bells in Washington.

A Vegetable Pistol.

But the most remarkable instance of this method of scattering the seeds (shooting them from the pod), is afforded by Hura crepitans, a handsome tree, native of the forests of South America. The curious fruit of this tree is a somewhat flattened, deeply furrowed or fluted body, made up of a circle of many cells, each containing one seed. When the seeds are ripe the cells open, and expel them with a loud report, like the crack of a pistol. Hence the fruit is sometimes called the "monkeys' dinner-bell."

Stories have been told of Hura fruits being placed in desks and subsequently opening and discharging their seeds with such violence as to break ink-wells, and even to crack the wood of the desk.—St. Nicholas.

What Becomes of the Milk.

Trained nurses and their field of work were being discussed by a prominent club of this city a few days ago, and one of the ladies, in demonstrating the care of infants, held up a chamois model of a baby's stomach about as large as a good-sized oyster, and exclaimed for her climax: "Now, what becomes of all the quarts of milk that are poured into that little stomach?" There was a startled silence, broken by a young woman in a rear seat, who murmured, lugubriously: "Well, most of it goes into your lap."

Chinese Fish with Drugs.

The drug used by the Chinese in catching fish is coculus indicus, which is powdered and mixed with dough, and scattered broadcast over the water after the manner of sowing seed. The fish seize and devour it with avidity, and instantly become intoxicated and turn up hundreds on the top of the water. They are then gathered up and placed in vessels containing clear water.

A scientific writer tells how water can be boiled in a sheet of writing-paper. We don't doubt it. We have known a man to write a few lines on a sheet of writing-paper that kept him in hot water for three years.

To Train British Infantry.

Arrangements for the training of British infantry next winter are to be on a more elaborate scale than usual, and especial prominence is to be given to long-distance marching.

"What makes you say that women have more sense than men?" "Well, you haven't seen any woman riding around town on wheelbarrows since the election, have you?"—Chicago Record.

One of the sure fool tricks is reading continued stories.

Long Minutes.

Explorers of the canyons of the West may have daily adventures, if they will. Colonel J. W. Powell records a good number of his own. One, brief, but long enough, is thus described:

In my anxiety to reach a point where I could see the roaring cataract below, I went too far out upon the wall, and could neither advance nor retreat. I stood with one foot on a little projecting rock, and clung with my hand fixed in a crevice.

Finding myself caught, suspended four hundred feet above the river, into which I must fall if my footing fails, I call for help.

The men come and pass me a line, but I cannot let go of the rock long enough to take hold of it. Then they bring two or three of the largest oars. All this takes time which seems very precious to me; but at last they arrive. The blade of one of the oars is pushed into a little crevice in the rock beyond me in such a manner that the men can hold me pressed against the wall. Then another is fixed in such a way that I can step on it; and thus I am extricated.

Another Matter.

Circumstances alter cases, says a proverb, and sometimes the metamorphosis is accomplished with amazing suddenness.

Two amateur hunters in the Northern woods, not long ago, saw a deer, and both fired at once.

"That is my dear," said A, "I shot it."

"No, you didn't," hotly replied B. "It is my deer, because I killed it."

A third party was approaching from the opposite direction, with fury in his eye and a club in his hand.

"Which of you two rascals shot my cal?" roared the farmer.

"That fellow just told me he did it," said A.

And B, now thoroughly alarmed for his personal safety, answered:

"He lies. He shot it himself. I saw him do it, and I'll swear to it."—The Interior.

Hale and Hearty.

Is the condition in which every human being was undoubtedly intended to be, and whenever this is not the case there must be something wrong. Probably in a majority of cases the trouble is in the blood, which has become impoverished or impure by reason of hereditary scrofula taints or from some other cause. In case there is scrofula in the blood, there will frequently be eruptions on the skin, though some times the disease assumes a different form. In fact, a very large proportion of diseases are caused by this inherited taint. That the cause is in the blood is proved by the fact that scrofula, salt rheum, rheumatism, catarrh, and other like diseases are most readily cured by purifying the blood. No medicine has such a record of cures as Hood's Sarsaparilla, and yet Hood's Sarsaparilla is always advertised as a blood purifier. The way to keep hale and hearty is to keep the blood pure, and if it is not in a condition of purity and vitality there is no better remedy that can be used than this same great blood purifier and strength builder, Hood's Sarsaparilla.

An Optimist.

"Have any luck on your fishing trip?"

"Remarkable."

"Caught some beauties, eh?"

"I didn't get a nibble."

"But you said you were lucky."

"I was; I fell into the river and didn't get drowned."—Washington Star.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

The O'dest.

The oldest rose bush in the world is at Hildesheim, a small city in Hanover. Its roots are in the subsoil of a church in the cemetery, and although the primitive stem has been dead for a long time, the new stems have found their way through a crevice in the wall, and cover almost the whole church with their branches for a height and width of forty feet. According to tradition this rose tree was planted by Charlemagne in 833, and the church having been burnt down in the eleventh century, the root continued to grow in the subsoil. A book has been published recently giving the history of this venerable rose tree, which, casting tradition aside, is known to be at least three hundred years old, it having been mentioned in a book published in 1673, and in a poem bearing the date of 1690.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills, which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge, that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, laxatives or other remedies are then not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

Compresssed-Air Motors.

From Harper's Weekly.

We are all of us aware of the use of compressed air in the Zalinski dynamite gun, which is able to hurl a charges of explosive a mile and a half, sufficient to convert a whole régiment into unrecognizable pulp. It is another matter to learn of this same force cleaning carpets, dusting cushions, and painting cars and barns. And as we go a little further, we find this Protean force operating block signals on our railroads, and steering ships. running clocks, and furnishing cold air for refrigerators, loading guns and handling projectiles on our men-of-war, propelling sewing-machines, doing all sorts of hoisting-work, driving lathes and printing-presses, copying letters, and running summer fans. In Australia it is shearing sheep; in Kansas City beeves are slaughtered and the meat dressed mainly with compressed air. It is an excellent pump, especially for deep wells, and in particular for chemicals. With the same power you may dump a whole train of coal or dirt cars by the pressure of your thumb. It is carving beautiful statuary, and employed in all sorts of stone-work; it makes a good dredge; it raises and lowers railroad gates; it is a valuable agent in the sugar refinery and in the making of asphalt and rubber, and still again in the delicate manufacture of fine silk. In the coal mines it is running locomotives, bringing oxygen and life to the exhausted operative, and banishing the fear of deadly explosions. In England a hundred and fifty miles of pneumatic tubing facilitates the rapid transfer of mails, and the same system is in use in Philadelphia, and just recently between New York and Brooklyn. In England, again, employed in the dry docks, compressed air is made to lift huge vessels out of the water as if they were toys, and in the same way it will shortly be introduced on the Erie Canal in working the new quick-action high-lift locks. It is a good fire-extinguisher, and an excellent hoist for grain. It is used by physician and surgeon in many delicate operations. In the railroad shops of Jersey City and many other points it is every where running machinery, lifting huge loads, riveting bolts, driving hammers, and repairing cars. In Paris, under the famous Popp system, where it has had its widest application it is employed in almost every conceivable variety of work. When it is generated in large central stations, and distributed over the city in the same way that gas and water and electricity are now distributed, you may expect, madam, that it will clean house for you—beat your carpets and clean your walls—and take a general hand in your household affairs. It will lift up and set you down from floor to floor. It will be waiting for you at your door, and whisk you to the shopping districts. It may treadle the sewing machine, agitate the dish-washer, and smash your costliest china with all the dexterity and sang-froid of your most accomplished handmaiden. All this and much more it may do, if we are to believe some of those who are given to peering into the to-morrow of things.

Gave Quinine

A girl in Shelbyville, this state was entertaining her best fellow a few evening ago and he was suffering from a severe cold. She had heard that quinine would break up a cold. So she dosed him thoroughly for a quick cure, with the result that he came near dying, in fact is not yet out of danger. It would be well for people to understand that the most common of all drugs, is not necessarily the most harmless.

Poor Blood

When a horse is poor in flesh, a new harness won't give him strength. If a house is cold new furniture won't warm it. If your strength is easily exhausted; work a burden; nerves weak; digestion poor; muscles soft; if you are pale and worn out, the trouble is with the blood. It is not so much IMPURE blood as POOR blood. Pills won't make this blood rich; nor will bitters, nor iron tonics, any more than a new harness will give strength to the horse, or new furniture will make a house warm. For poor blood you want something that will make rich blood.

were designed to supply a model purgative to people who had so long injured themselves with griping medicines. Being carefully prepared and their ingredients adjusted to the exact necessities of the bowels and liver, their popularity was instantaneous. That this popularity has been maintained is well marked in the medal awarded these pills at the World's Fair 1893.

Willl Help All Lines

A Catechism on the Benefits Arising from Free Coinage.

Q.—How will the manufacturers be benefited?

A.—By the increased demand for their products. The surplus which the farmer and miner is able to save over his expenses on account of the higher prices which he will receive for products will be invested in manufactured articles.

Q.—How will this increase manufactured products and in turn be beneficial to the farmer and the miner?

A.—It will increase a demand for products—more wool, more cotton, more iron, etc, will be needed, and therefore the demand increased. Therefore the increased prosperity of all classes will demand a higher class of products, on which the farmer makes a greater profit. Instead of living on black bread, pork and beans, etc., the working man will buy more fruit and higher grades of food products, so that agriculture will be more diversified and profitable.

Q.—How will the wage-earner be benefited?

A.—By the increased demand for his services. Wages are controlled by the law of supply and demand just as surely as any product; also, all experience goes to show that price of wages is regulated by the price of labor's products.

Q.—How will the merchant profit?

A.—By increased trade on which to make his profit, prompter payment of bills and less demand for long credits on which there is more or less risk.

Q.—How will the railroads and transportation companies be benefited?

A.—The increased demand for merchandise will increase the quantity of freight. Also, when the people are prosperous they will travel more.—Western Rural.

To Get Even.

Ever since the Wilson tariff bill levied a small duty on German beet sugar, the government of that country has been continually showing an unfriendly feeling to us. Our pork, beef, grain and other products have been legislated against without cause, till our sales to Germany have been almost ruined. Now, we are trying to get even with them. In January, 1888, President Cleveland, acting by authority of a law recently passed by congress, issued a proclamation, stopping the collection of tonnage dues on German vessels entering our ports, as long as Germany did not discriminate against us. Now, however, he has just issued a proclamation putting these dues back on and requiring their collection, till such time as Germany may treat us and our products as well as they do other nations. This is what should have been done two years ago, and it would have been then, but we did not wish to show haste, and so time was taken to see if they would not come to terms. The tonnage dues, are only 6 cents on a ton, and can be collected only 5 times on the same vessel in each year. But even at this low figure it costs a good deal. A vessel of only 1000 tons capacity would cost $60 each time it entered port or $300 for a year. So, unless Germany comes down from her high horse, Uncle Sam may get a little revenue as well as revenge out of this trouble.

Selling Churches

In Michigan they tax churches as well as other property. A dispatch from Ishpeming says, that half the churches of that city are advertised for sale for delinquent taxes. At Flint the Baptist church will be sold for taxes due, unless the members raise it. It amounts to $121. All over the state, congregations are waking up to the fact that money must be had soon, or they will have no places to worship. The state will soon have control of the church buildings.

Compulsory Ed.

There is talk of passing a compulsory school law this legislature. We greatly doubt the wisdom of such a law. While there are many who ought to be compelled to attend school, it is very doubtful whether such a law would be enforced. In laws of this kind it is usually made the duty of constables to see that children are sent to school, but we apprehend it would not be easy to get an Auburn constable who would do this and do it thoroughly. We have too many good laws already that are not enforced, and are not likely to be.

A Big Scheme

THE DUNKARDS TRYING TO PURCHASE AN ENTIRE COUNTY.

Mr. C. E. Everett is Negotiating to Purchase All of Brown County for This Peculiar Religious Sect.

Fort Wayne Sentinel.

The peculiar religious society known as Dunkards, large numbers of whom have lived in northern Indiana for many years, are endeavoring to purchase the entire body of land comprised within Brown county to which they will emmigrate and establish a government according to their own peculiar notions.

C. E. Everett, of this city, is negotiating with many land owners in the county, and has already purchased 41,000 acres, to which 100 families will move in a few days and form the nucleus of the new settlement. The county contains a great deal of valuable land. and large quantities of building stone, and, as the Dunkar's are industrious people, it is expected that the county will become in time the garden spot of Indiana.

Mr. Everett thinks the sect will have no trouble in ultimately acquiring all the land in the county. and will put into practice their ideas of local government. The projectors of the scheme say that neither jail nor courthouse will be needed and that the election of local officers would be held only to comply with the law, as all property would be held in common.

Mr. Everett has devoted much of his time for a year past in purchasing this property, and last night returned from Brown county, where he had arranged for further purchases.

A Dandy Thing to Sell!

I have been doing so well this summer selling combination dippers that I think it is my duty to tell others about it. I have not made as much money as some I read about, but I never made less than $3 and often $5 a day; the dipper can be used as a fruit jar filler; a plain dipper; a fine strainer; a funnel; a strainer funnel; a sick room warming pan, and a pint measure. These eight different uses makes the dipper such a necessary article that it sells at nearly every house, as it is so cheap. You can get a sample by sending, as I did, 18 two-cent stamps to pay postage, etc., to W. H. Baird & Co., Station A, Pittsburg, Pa, and they will mail you a dipper, and you can go right to work. Any one can make $3 or $4 a day anywhere. READER. tf

A Chance to Make Money.

I have made $1,640 clear money in 87 days and attended to my household duties besides, and I think this is doing splendid for a woman inexperienced in business. Anyone can sell what everyone wants to buy, and every family wants a Dish Washer. I don't canvass at all; people come or send for the washer, and every washer that goes out sells two or three more, as they do the work to per minutes. I am going to devote my whole time to this business now and I am sure that I can clear $5,000 a year. My sister and brother have started in the business and are doing splendid. You can get complete instructions and hundreds of testimonials by addressing the Iron City Dish Washer Co., Station A. Pittsburg, Pa., and if you don't make lots of money it's your own fault. MRS. W. Happy Events.

THE REV F. U. COLVIN SOLEMNIZES TWO MARRIAGES LAST NIGHT.

At the rooms of the officiating clergyman in Mrs. Zora Shafer's house at 7:30 last night occurred the marriage of two of Auburn's well known young people, Mr. Jay Jenners to Miss Flora Bachtel. The wedding was a surprise to all, even the parents of the bride knowing nothing of the procedure until after the ceremony when the young couple repaired to the bride's home. Mr. and Mrs Jenners will be at home in rooms in the Central Hotel which the groom had previously nicely furnished. They are too well known to the COURIER readers to need any further comment. The COURIER extends congratulations and wishes them many years of prosperity.

COLBY-BOWMAN.

At eight o'clock last night a cab was driven up in front of the residence where Rev. F. C. Colvin rooms, which contained a matrimonial couple. They were Frank Colby and Mrs. Sarah Bowman. Rev. Colvin soon joined them in the bonds of holy matrimony and they departed, Mr. and Mrs. Colby are both well known by Auburn people. They have the best wishes of the COURIER.

ZIMMER-CASE.

At the residence of the bride's parents on the Avenue, Auburn, Dec. 3, 1896, at 10 a. m. Mr. John Zimmer and Miss Valleria Case, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Case. Rev. W. L. Meese officiating.

The ceremony was performed in the presence of the family and a number of invited guests, among the latter being Joseph Stafford and family, Eli Cochran and family, Mrs. J. E. Ensley, J. R. Steves and wife, and Mrs. Case all of Auburn. Elmer Case and family of Fairfield were also present.

After the ceremony, there was an elegant and abundant dinner, in several courses, which was highly enjoyed by all present The bride was attired in a lovely light colored silk dress, and the groom in the regulation black. Both are well know young people, and we extend congratulations and good wishes. They will visit friends a few days, we believe and will then, we suppose settle down to housekeeping in Auburn.

What a Woman Can Do.

Last week I cleared, after paying all expenses, $355,85, the month previous $260 and have at the same time attended to other duties. I believe any energetic person can do equally as well, as I havel had very little experience. The Dish Washer is just lovely and every family wants one, which makes selling very easy. I do no canvassing. People hear about the Dish Washer and come or send for one. It is strange that a good, cheap Dish Washer has never before been put on the market. Mound City Dish Washer fills this bill. With it you can wash and dry the dishes for a family of ten in two minutes without wetting your hands. As soon as people see the Washer work they want one. You can make more money and make it quicker than with any household article on the market. I feel convinced that any lady or gentleman can make from $10 to $14 per day around home. You can get full particulars by addressing The Mound City Dish Washer Co., St. Louis, Mo. They help you get started, then you can make money awful fast. A. L. C. 4

Gam Bid Distribution

Hicksville News.

Albert Brewer, of the State game and fish commission, reports that the commission is about to commence the distribution of Mongolian Ring Neck and English Pheasants, the finest game in the country, raised at the Van Wert pheasantry. The commission requests every one to see that they are not molested and offers a reward of $50 for information that will convict any one of shooting, killing or molesting them before Nov. 15, 1899. The state law provides a penalty of $50 for shooting them before that time.

Marry This Girl Quick.

I saw in your paper that a 18 year old boy made $1.25 the first hour he worked selling the Perfection Metal Tip Lamp wick. I ordered a sample and went to work and the first week I cleared $10, the second week I cleared $15. I expect to run it up to $25 a week in the near future, as the Perfection Metal Tip Lampwick makes such a beautiful white light and does away with smoky chimneys and bad oder and saves oil, it is easy to sell. If you wish to try it send 13 cent stamps to Miss A. M. Fritz, Station A. St. Louis, Mo, and she will send you sample outfit, this is a good way to make money around home. ft MISS TINA W.

St. Joe Items.

We clip the following items of interest from the St. Joe News of Dec. 3:

J. S. Jackman of Waterloo was in town last Saturday, interviewing Congressman Leighty in regard to the post-office matters.

Sneak thieves broke into Frank Barney's store house Tuesday night and stole several bushels of clover seed. Home talent is suspected and the guilty parties will be brought to justice if possible.

Miss Cora High who is attending the school at Auburn, was taken quite sick last week and the word came to her parents that she was very bad with diphtheria. They at once hastened to Auburn and found it to be a false alarm She was sick with a cold and very sore throat.

The teachers report a pleasant time at the meeting of the County Association held at Auburn last Friday and Saturday, although there was not much interest manifested by Auburn people outside of the teachers. The lecture by Dr. Henson on Friday evening was pronounced one of the best ever held in Auburn, The next meeting of the association will be held in Waterloo. H. G. Provines of this place was elected president for the ensuing year.

Ladies Who Suffer

From any complaint peculiar to their sex—such as Profuse, Painful, Suppressed or Irregular Menstruation, are soon restored to health by Bradfield's Female Regulator.

It is a combination of remedial agents which have been used with the greatest success for more than 25 years, and known to act specifically with and on the organs of Menstruation, and recommended for such complaints only. It never fails to give relief and restore the health of the suffering woman. It should be taken by the girl just budding into womanhood when Menstruation is Scant, Suppressed, Irregular or Painful, and all delicate women should use it, as its tonic properties have a wonderful influence in toning up and strengthening the system by driving through the proper channels all impurities.

"A daughter of one of my customers missed menstruation from exposure and cold, and on arriving at puberty her health was completely wrecked, until she was twenty-four years of age, when upon my recommendation, she used one bottle of Bradfield's Female Regulator, completely restoring her to health."

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

To the Congress of the United States: As representatives of the people in the legislative branch of their government, you have assembled at a time when the strength and excellence of our free institutions and the fitness of our citizens to enjoy popular rule have been again made manifest. A political contest involving momentous consequences fraught with apprehension, and creating aggressiveness so intense as to approach bitterness and passion, has been waged throughout our land, and determined by the decree of free and independent suffrage, without disturbance of our tranquillity or the least sign of weakness in our national structure.

When we consider these incidents, and contemplate the peaceful obedience and manly submission which have succeeded a heated clash of political opinions, we discover abundant evidence of a determination on the part of our countrymen to abide by every verdict of the popular will and to be controlled at all times by an abiding faith in the agencies established for the direction of the affairs of their government. Thus our people exhibit a patriotic disposition which entitles them to demand of those who undertake to make and execute their laws such faithful and unselfish service in their behalf as can only be prompted by a serious appreciation of the trust and confidence which the acceptance of public duty invites.

In obedience to a constitutional requirement I herein submit to the Congress certain information concerning national affairs with the suggestion of such legislation as in my judgment is necessary and expedient.

Outrages in Turkey.

At the outset of a reference to the more important matters affecting our relations with foreign powers it would afford me satisfaction if I could assure the Congress that the disturbed condition in Asiatic Turkey had during the last year assumed a less hideous aspect, and that either as a consequence of the awakening of the Turkish Government to the demand of humane civilization, or as the result of decisive action on the part of the concerted powers, the condition and features of the situation had been mitigated. Instead, however, of welcoming a softened disposition or protective intervention, we have been afflicted by continued and not infrequent reports of the wanton destruction of homes and the bloody butchery of men, women and children, made martyrs to their profession of Christian faith.

While none of our citizens in Turkey have thus far been killed or wounded, though often in the midst of dreadful scenes of danger, their safety in the future is by no means assured. Our government at home and our minister at Constantinople have left nothing undone to protect our missionaries in Ottoman territory, who constitute nearly all the individuals residing there who have a right to claim our protection on the score of American citizenship. Our efforts in this direction will not be relaxed, but the deep feeling and sympathy that have been aroused among our people ought not to so far blind their reason and judgment as to lead them to demand impossible things.

Several naval vessels are stationed in the Mediterranean as a measure of caution, and to furnish all possible relief and refuge in case of emergency, and we have made claims against the Turkish Government for the pillage and destruction of missionary property at Harpoot and Marash during uprisings at those places. A number of Armenian refugees having arrived at our ports, an order has lately been obtained from the Turkish Government permitting the wives and children of such refugees to join them here. I do not believe that the present somber prospect in Turkey will be long permitted to offend the sight of Christendom.

The Cuban Rebellion

The insurrection in Cuba still continues with all its perplexities. It is difficult to perceive that any progress has thus far been made towards the pacification of the island or that the situation of affairs as depicted in my last annual message has in the least improved. If Spain still holds Havana and the seaports and all the considerable towns, the insurgents still roam at will over at least two-thirds of the inland country. If the determination of Spain to put down the insurrection seems but to strengthen with the lapse of time, and is evinced by her unhesitating devotion of largely increased military and naval forces to the task, there is much reason to believe that the insurgents have gained in point of numbers and character and resources, and are none the less inflexible in their resolve not to succumb without practically securing the great objects for which they took up arms. If Spain has not yet reestablished her authority, neither have the insurgents yet made good their title to be regarded as an independent state. Indeed, as the contest has gone on, the pretense that civil government exists on the island except so far as Spain is able to maintain it, has been practically abandoned. Spain does keep on foot such a government, more or less imperfectly, in the large towns and their immediate suburbs, but, that exception being made, the entire country is either given over to anarchy or is subject to the military occupation of one or the other party. It is reported, indeed, on reliable authority, that, at the demand of the Commander-in-chief of the insurgent army, the putative Cuban Government has now given up all attempts to exercise its functions, leaving that government confessedly (what there is the best reason for supposing always to have been in fact) a government merely on paper. Were the Spanish armies able to meet their antagonists in the open or in pitched battle, prompt and decisive results might be looked for, but they are called upon to face a foe that shuns general engagements, that can choose, and does choose, its own ground, and it is obvious that there is hardly a limit to the time during which hostilities of this sort may be prolonged. Meanwhile, as in all cases of protracted civil strife, the passions of the combatants grow more and more inflamed, and excesses on both sides become more frequent and more deplorable.

The spectacle of the utter ruin of an adjoining country, by nature one of the most fertile and charming on the globe, would engage the serious attention of the government and the people of the United States in any circumstances. In point of fact, they have a concern which is by no means of a wholly sentimental or philanthropic character. It lies so near to us as to be hardly separated from our territory. Our actual pecuniary interest in it is second only to that of the people and government of Spain. It is reasonably estimated that at least from $30,000,000 to $50,000,000 of American capital are invested in plantations and in railroad, mining and other business enterprises on the island. The volume of trade between the United States and Cuba, which in 1889 amounted to about $64,000,000, rose in 1893 to about $103,000,000, and in 1894, the year before the present insurrection broke out, amounted to nearly $98,000,000. Besides this large pecuniary stake in the fortunes of Cuba, the United States finds itself inextricably involved in the present contest in other ways, both vexatious and costly. Many Cubans reside in this country and indirectly promote the insurrection through the press, by public meetings, by the purchase and shipment of arms, by the raising of funds and by other means, which the spirit of our institutions and the tenor of our laws do not permit to be made the subject of criminal prosecutions of a friendly power. It follows from the same causes that the United States is compelled to actively police a long line of seacoast against unlawful expeditions, the escape of which the utmost vigilance will not always suffice to prevent.

These inevitable entanglements of the United States with the rebellion in Cuba, the large American property interests affected and considerations of philanthropy and humanity in general have led to a vehement demand in various quarters for some sort of positive intervention on the part of the United States. It was at first proposed that belligerent rights should be accorded to the insurgents—a proposition no longer urged because untimely and in practical operation clearly perilous and injurious to our own interests. It has since been and is now sometimes contended that the independence of the insurgents should be recognized. But imperfect and restricted as the Spanish Government of the island may be, no other exists there—unless the will of the military officer in temporary command of a particular district can be dignified as a species of government. It is now also suggested that the United States should buy the island—a suggestion possibly worthy of consideration if there were any evidence of a desire or willingness on the part of Spain to entertain such a proposal. It is urged, finally, that, all other methods failing, the existing internecine strife in Cuba should be terminated by our intervention, even at the cost of a war between the United States and Spain—a war which its advocates consider would be a mere [illegible] United States has never sought or [illegible] maintain as a nation, which plainly dictates that right and not might should be the rule of its conduct.

It is in the assumed temper and disposition of the Spanish Government to remedy its grievances, fortified by indications of influential public opinion in Spain that this Government has hoped to discover the most promising and effective means of ending the present strife with honor and advantage to Spain and with the achievement of all the reasonable objects of the insurrection. It was intimated by this Government to the Government of Spain some months ago that if a satisfactory measure of home rule were tendered the Cuban insurgents and would be accepted by them upon a guaranty of its execution, the United States would endeavor to find a way not objectionable to Spain of furnishing such guaranty. While no definite response to this intimation has yet been received from the Spanish Government, it is believed to be not altogether unwelcome, while, as already suggested, no reason is perceived why it should not be approved by the insurgents. Whatever circumstances may arise, our policy and our interest would constrain us to object to the acquisition of the island or an interference with its control by any other power.

It should be added that it cannot be reasonably assumed that the hitherto expectant attitude of the United States will be indefinitely maintained. When the inability of Spain to deal successfully with the insurgents has become manifest and it is demonstrated that her sovereignty is extinct in Cuba for all purposes of its rightful existence, and when a hopeless struggle for its re-establishment has degenerated into a strife which means nothing more than the useless sacrifice of human life and the utter destruction of the very subject matter of the conflict, a situation will be presented in which our obligations to the sovereignty of Spain will be superceded by higher obligations, which we can hardly hesitate to recognize and discharge. Deferring the choice of ways and methods until the time for action arrives, we should make them depend upon the precise conditions then existing, and they should not be determined upon without giving careful heed to every consideration involving our honor and interest or the international duty we owe to Spain. A contemplation of emergencies that may arise should plainly lead us to avoid their creation, either through a careless disregard of present duty or even an undue stimulation and ill-timed expression of feeling. But I have deemed it not amiss to remind the Congress that a time may arise when a correct policy and care for our interests, as well as a regard for the interests of other nations and their citizens, joined by considerations of humanity and a desire to see a rich and fertile country, intimately related to us, saved from complete devastation, will constrain our Government to such action as will subserve the interests thus involved and at the same time promise to Cuba and its inhabitants an opportunity to enjoy the blessings of peace.

Other Foreign Matters.

Negotiations for a treaty of general arbitration for all differences between Great Britain and the United States are far advanced and promise to reach a successful consummation at an early date.

The scheme of examining applicants for certain consular positions, to test their competency and fitness, adopted under an executive order issued on Sept. 20, 1895, has fully demonstrated the usefulness of this innovation.

The inspection of consular offices provided for by an appropriation for that purpose at the last session of the Congress has been productive of such wholesale effects that I hope this important work will in the future be continued. I know of nothing that can be done with the same slight expense so improving to the service.

We have during the last year labored faithfully, and against unfavorable conditions, to secure better preservation of seal life in the Behring Sea. Both the United States and Great Britain have lately dispatched commissioners to these waters to study the habits and conditions of the seal herd and the causes of their rapid decrease. Upon the reports of these commissioners, soon to be submitted, and with the exercise of patience and good sense on the part of all interested parties, it is earnestly hoped that hearty cooperation may be secured for the protection against threatened extinction of seal life in the Northern Pacific and Behring Sea.

Treasury Information.

The Secretary of the Treasury reports that during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1896, the receipts of the Government from all sources amounted to $409,475,408.78. During the same period its expenditures were $434,678,054.48, the excess of expenditures over receipts thus amounting to $25,203,245.70. The ordinary expenses during the year were $4,015,8[illegible].21 less than during the preceding fiscal year. Of the receipts mentioned there was derived from customs the sum of $180,021,751.67, and from internal revenue $146,830,615.06. The receipts from customs show an increase of $7,863,134.2[illegible] over those from the same source for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and the receipts from internal revenue an increase of $3,584,537.91. The value of our imported dutiable merchandise during the last fiscal year was $363,757,470, and the value of free goods imported $409,967,470, being an increase of $[illegible],523,675 in the value of dutiable goods and $41,231,034 in the value of free goods over the preceding year. Our imports of merchandise, foreign and domestic amounted in value to $882,006,938, being an increase over the preceding year of $75,068,773. The average ad valorem duty paid on dutiable goods imported during the year was 39.94 per cent, and on free and dutiable goods taken together 20.55 per cent. The cost of collecting our internal revenue was 2.78 per cent., against 2.81 per cent. for the fiscal year ending June 20, 1895. The total production of distilled spirits, exclusive of fruit brandies, was 86,588,703 taxable gallons being an increase of 6,639,108 gallons over the preceding year. There was also an increase of 1,443,676 gallons of spirits produced from fruit as compared with the preceding year. The number of barrels of beer produced was 35,850,250, against 33,589,784 produced in the preceding fiscal year, being an increase of 2,260,466 barrels.

The total amount of gold exported during the last fiscal year was $112,400,947 and of silver $40,541,670, being an increase of $45,941,466 of gold and $13,246,284 of silver over the exportations of the preceding fiscal year. The imports of gold were $33,525,065 and of silver $28,777,186, being $2,859,095 less of gold and $8,566,007 more of silver than during the preceding year. The total stock of metallic money in the United States at the close of the last fiscal year ended the 30th day of June, 1896, was $1,228,326,637, of which $599,597,964 was in gold and $628,728,071 in silver. On the 1st day of November 1896, the total stock of money of all kinds in the country was $2,285,410,590 and the amount in circulation, not including that in the treasury holdings, was $1,627,055,641, being $22.63 per capita upon an estimated population of 71,992,000. The production of the precious metals in the United States during the calendar year 1895 is estimated to have been 2,254,930 fine ounces of gold, of the value of $46,600,000, and 63,[illegible] fine ounces of silver, of the value of [illegible]. During the same period there were [illegible] ounces of gold, amounting to $30,235,700 in value, and 109,188,240 fine ounces of silver, of the commercial value of $110,654,000, and of the coinage value of $218,738,100 according to our ratio. The coinage of these metals in the various countries of the world during the same calendar year amounted to $232,701,438 in gold and $121,995,219 in silver. The total coinage at the mints of the United States during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, amounted to $71,188,468.52, of which $58,878,490 was in gold coins and $12,309,978.52 in standard silver dollar, subsidiary coins and minor coins.

National Banks.

The number of national banks organized from the time the law authorizing their creation was passed, up to Oct. 31, was 5,051, and of this number 3,679 were at the date last mentioned in active operation, having authorized capital stock of $650,014,895, held by 288,902 shareholders, and circulating notes amounting to $21,412,620. The total outstanding circulating notes of all national banks Oct. 31, 1896, amounted to $234,553,807, including unredeemed but fully secured notes of banks insolvent and in process of liquidation. The increase in national bank circulation during the year ending on that day was $21,699,429. Oct. 6, 1896, when the condition of national banks was last reported, the total resources of the 3,679 active institutions was $3,263,085,313.83, which included $1,893,258,839.31 in loans and discounts and $392,165,733.85 in money of all kinds on hand. Of their liabilities $1,597,891,058.03 was due to individual depositors and $209,944,019 consisted of outstanding circulating notes.

There were organized during the year preceding the date last mentioned twenty-eight national banks, located in fifteen different States, of which twelve were organized in the Eastern States with a capital of $1,180,000, six in the Western States with a capital of $875,000 and ten in the Southern States with a capital of $1,190,000. During the year, however, thirty-seven banks voluntarily abandoned their franchises under the national law, and in the case of twenty-seven others it was found necessary to appoint receivers. Therefore, as compared with the year preceding, there was a decrease of thirty-six in the number of active banks. The number of existing banks organized under State laws is 5,708.

Immigration.

The number of immigrants arriving in the United States during the fiscal year was 343,267, of whom 340,468 were permitted to land and 2,799 were debarred on various grounds prescribed by law and returned to the countries whence they came at the expense of the steamship companies by which they were brought in. The increase in immigration over the preceding year amounted to 84,731. It is reported that with some exceptions the immigrants of the last year were of a hardy laboring class, accustomed and able to earn a support for themselves, and it is estimated that the money brought with them amounted to at least $5,000,000, though it was probably much in excess of that sum, since only those having less than $30 are required to disclose the exact amount, and it is known that many brought considerable sums of money to buy land and build homes.

Including all the immigrants arriving who are over 14 years of age, 26.01 per cent. were illiterate, as against 20.37 per cent. of those of that age arriving during the preceding year. The number of immigrants over 14 years old, the countries from which they came and the percentage of illiterates among them were as follows: Italy, 57,515, with 54.59 per cent.; Ireland, 37,496, with 7 per cent.; Russia, 35,188, with 41.14 per cent.; Austria-Hungary and provinces, 57,053, with 38.92 per cent.; Germany, 25,254, with 2.96 per cent.; Sweden, 18,821, with 1.16 per cent., while from Portugal there came 2,067, of whom 77.69 per cent. were illiterate. There arrived from Japan during the year only 1,110 immigrants, and it is the opinion of the immigration authorities that the apprehension heretofore existing to some extent of a large immigration from Japan to the United States is without any substantial foundation.

The War Department.

The report of the Secretary of War exhibits satisfactory conditions in the several branches of the public service intrusted to his charge. The limit of our military force as fixed by law is constantly and readily maintained. The present discipline and morale of our army are excellent, and marked progress and efficiency are apparent throughout its entire organization. With the exception of delicate duties in the suppression of slight Indian disturbances along our southwestern boundary, in which the Mexican troops co-operated, and the compulsory but peaceful return, with the consent of Great Britain, of a band of Cree Indians from Montana to British possessions, no active operations have been required of the army during the year past.

Sea Coast Defense.

During the last year rapid progress has been made toward the completion of the scheme adopted for the erection and armament of fortifications along our seacoast, while equal progress has been made in providing the material for submarine defense in connection with these works.

This improved situation is largely due to the recent generous response of Congress to the recommendations of the war department. Thus we shall soon have complete about one-fifth of the comprehensive system, the first step in which was noted in my message to the Congress of Dec. 4, 1893. When it is understood that a masonry emplacement not only furnishes a platform for the heavy modern high-power gun, but also in every particular serves the purpose and takes the place of the fort of former days, the importance of the work accomplished is better comprehended.

We should always keep in mind that of all forms of military preparation coast defense alone is essentially pacific in its nature. While it gives the sense of security due to a consciousness of strength, it is neither the purpose nor the effect of such permanent fortifications to involve us in foreign complications, but rather to guarantee us against them. They are not temptation to war, but security against it. Thus they are thoroughly in accord with all the traditions of our national diplomacy.

About National Prisons.

The Attorney General presents a detailed and interesting statement of the important work done under his supervision during the last fiscal year. The ownership and management by the Government of penitentiaries for the confinement of those convicted in United States courts of violations of Federal laws, which for many years has been a subject of executive recommendation, has at last, to a slight extent, been realized by the utilization of the abandoned military prison at Fort Leavenworth as a United States penitentiary. This is certainly a movement in the right direction; but it ought to be at once supplemented by the rebuilding or extensive enlargement of this improvised prison and the construction of at least one more, to be located in the Southern States. I am thoroughly convinced that economy, humanity and a proper sense of responsibility and duty toward those whom we imprison for are confined.

It appears that since the transfer of Fort Leavenworth military prison to its new uses the work previously done by prisoners confined there and for which expensive machinery has been provided has been discontinued. This work consisted of the manufacture of articles for army use now done elsewhere. On all grounds it is exceedingly desirable that the convicts confined in this penitentiary be allowed to resume work of this description.

Fees of Federal Officers.

It is most gratifying to note the satisfactory results that have followed the inauguration of the new system provided for by the act of May 28, 1896, under which certain Federal officials are compensated by salaries instead of fees. The new plan was put in operation on July 1, 1896, and already the great economy it enforces, its prevention of abuses, and its tendency to a better enforcement of the laws are strikingly apparent. Detailed evidence of the usefulness of this long-delayed but now happily accomplished reform will be found clearly set forth in the Attorney General's report.

The Postal Service.

Our Postoffice Department is in good condition, and the exhibit made of its operations during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1896, if allowance is made for imperfections in the laws applicable to it, is very satisfactory. The total receipts during the year were $82,499,208.40. The total expenditures were $90,026,296.84, exclusive of $1,559,898.27, which was earned by the Pacific Railroad for transportation and credited on their debt to the Government. There was an increase of receipts over the previous year of $5,516,080.21, or 7.1 per cent., and an increase of expenditures of $3,836,124.02, or 4.42 per cent. The deficit was $1,679,956.19 less than that of the preceding year.

Our postal service should meet the wants and even the conveniences of our people at a direct charge upon them so light as perhaps to exclude the idea of our postoffice department being a money-making concern; but in the face of a constantly recurring deficiency in its revenues and in view of the fact that we supply the best mail service in the world, it seems to me it is quite time to correct the abuses that swell enormously our annual deficit. I recommend that legislation be at once enacted to correct these abuses and introduce better business ideas in the regulation of our postal rates. This involves the following reforms, which I earnestly recommend:

The Navy.

The work of the Navy Department and its present condition are fully exhibited in the report of the Secretary. The construction of vessels for our new navy has been energetically prosecuted by the present administration upon the general lines previously adopted, the department having seen no necessity for radical changes in prior methods under which the work was found to be progressing in a manner highly satisfactory. It has been decided, however, to provide in every shipbuilding contract that the builder should pay all trial expenses, and it has also been determined to pay no speed premiums in future contracts. The premiums recently earned and some yet to be decided are features of the contracts made before this conclusion was reached.

Interior Affairs.

The report of the Secretary of the Interior presents a comprehensive and interesting exhibit of the numerous and important affairs committed to his supervision. I agree with the Secretary that the remainder of our public lands should be more carefully dealt with and their alienation guarded by better economy and greater prudence.

The Indians.

The total Indian population of the United States is 177,235, according to a census made in 1894, exclusive of those within the State of New York and those comprising the five civilized tribes. Of this number there are approximately 38,000 children of school age. During the year 22,392 of these were enrolled in schools. The progress which has attended recent efforts to extend Indian school facilities, and the anticipation of continued liberal appropriations to that end, cannot fail to afford the utmost satisfaction to those who believe that the education of Indian children is a prime factor in the accomplishment of Indian civilization. It may be said in general terms that in every particular the improvement of the Indians under Government care has been most marked and encouraging.

The Secretary, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the agents having charge of Indians to whom allotments have been made strongly urge the passage of a law prohibiting the sale of liquor to allottees who have taken their lands in severalty. I earnestly join in this recommendation.

The condition of affairs among the five civilized tribes, who occupy large tracts of land in the Indian Territory, and who have governments of their own, has assumed such an aspect as to render it almost indispensable that there should be an entire change in the relations of these Indians to the general government. A commission organized and empowered under several recent laws is now negotiating with these Indians for the relinquishment and the division of their common lands in severalty, and are aiding in the settlement of the troublesome question of tribal membership. The effort should be to save these Indians from the consequences of their own mistakes and improvidence, and to secure to the real Indian his rights as against intruders and professed friends who profit by his retrogression. As a sincere friend of the Indian I am exceedingly anxious that these reforms should be accomplished with the consent and aid of the tribes, and that no necessity may be presented for radical or drastic legislation.

The Pension Roll.

The diminution of our enormous pension roll and the decrease of pension expenditure, which have been so often confidently foretold, still fail in material realization. The number of pensioners on the rolls at the close of the fiscal year ended June 30, 1896, was 970,678. This is the largest number ever reported. The amount paid exclusively for pensions during the year was $138,214,761.94, a slight decrease from that of the preceding year, while the total expenditures on account of pensions, including the cost of maintaining the department and expenses attending the pension distribution, amounted to $142,206,550.59, or within a very small fraction of one-third of the entire expense of supporting the Government during the same year.

The number of new pension certificates issued was 90,646. Of these 40,374 represent original allowances of claims and 15,878 increases of existing pensions. The number of persons receiving pensions from the United States, but residing in foreign countries, at the close of the last fiscal year, was 3,781, and the amount paid to them during the year was $582,735.38. The sum appropriated for the payment of pensions for the current fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, is $140,000,000, and for the succeeding year it is estimated that the same amount will be necessary.

The Commissioner of Pensions reports that during the last fiscal year 339 indictments were found against violators of the pension laws. Upon these indictments 167 convictions resulted. In my opinion, based upon such statements as these and much other information and observation, the abuses which have been allowed to creep into our pension system have done incalculable harm in demoralizing our people and undermining good citizenship. I have endeavored within my sphere of official duty to protect our pension roll and make it what it should be, a roll of honor, containing the names of those disabled in their country's service and worthy of their country's affectionate remembrance. When I have seen those who pose as the soldiers' friends, active and alert in urging greater laxity and more reckless pension expenditure, while nursing selfish schemes, I have deprecated the approach of a situation where necessary retrenchment and enforced economy may lead to an attack upon pension abuses, so determined as to overlook the discrimination due to those who, worthy of a nation's care, ought to live and die under the protection of a nation's gratitude.

Pacific Railroads.

The Secretary calls attention to the public interests involved in an adjustment of the obligations of the Pacific railroads to the Government. I deem it to be an important duty to especially present this subject to the consideration of Congress. On Jan. 1, 1897, with the amount already matured, more than $13,000,000 of the principal of the subsidy bonds issued by the United States in aid of the construction of the roads has been paid or must on that day be paid by the Government. Without any reference to the application of the sinking fund now in the treasury this will create such a default on the part of these companies to the Government as will give it the right to at once institute proceedings to foreclose its mortgage lien. In addition to this indebtedness, which will be due Jan. 1, 1897, there will mature between that date and Jan. 1, 1899, the remaining principal of such subsidy bonds, which must also be met by the Government. These amount to more than $20,000,000, on account of the Union Pacific lines, and exceed $21,000,000 on account of the Central Pacific lines.

The situation of these roads and the condition of their indebtedness to the Government have been fully set forth in the reports of various committees to the present and prior Congresses. In view of the fact that the Congress has for a number of years almost constantly had under consideration various plans for dealing with the conditions existing between these roads and the Government, I have thus far felt justified in withholding action under the statute above mentioned. In the case of the Union Pacific Company, however, the situation has become especially and immediately urgent. Proceedings have been instituted to foreclose a first mortgage upon those side parts of the main lines upon which the Government holds a second and subordinate mortgage lien. In consequence of those proceedings and increasing complications added to the default occurring the 1st day of January, 1897, a condition will be presented at that date, so far as this company is concerned, that must emphasize the mandate of the act of 1887 and give to executive duty under its provisions a more imperative aspect. Therefore, unless Congress shall otherwise direct, or shall have previously determined upon a different solution of the problem, there will hardly appear to exist any reason for delaying beyond the date of the default above mentioned such executive action as will promise to subserve the public interests and save the Government from the loss threatened by further inaction.

Department of Agriculture.

The Department of Agriculture is so intimately related to the welfare of our people and the prosperity of our nation that it should constantly receive the care and encouragement of the Government. From small beginnings it has grown to be the center of agricultural intelligence and the source of aid and encouragement to agricultural efforts.

Under the present management of the department its usefulness has been enhanced in every direction, and at the same time strict economy has been enforced to the utmost extent permitted by congressional action. The Secretary reports that the value of our exports of farm products during the last fiscal year amounted to $670,000,000, an increase of $17,000,000 over those of the year immediately preceding. This statement is not the less welcome because of the fact that, notwithstanding such increase, the proportion of exported agricultural products of our total exports of all descriptions fell during the year. The benefits of an increase in agricultural exports being assured, the decrease in its proportion to our total exports is the more gratifying when we consider that it is owing to the fact that such total exports for the year increased more than $75,000,000.

In my opinion the gratuitous distribution of seeds by the department, as at present conducted, ought to be discontinued. The professed friends of the farmer, and certainly the farmers themselves, are naturally expected to be willing to rid a department devoted to the promotion of farming interests of a feature which tends so much to its discredit.

The weather bureau, now attached to the Department of Agriculture, has continued to extend its sphere of usefulness, and by an uninterrupted improvement in the accuracy of its forecasts has greatly increased its efficiency as an aid and protection to all whose occupations are related to weather conditions. Omitting further reference to the operations of the department, I commend the Secretary's report and the suggestions it contains to the careful consideration of Congress.

Civil Service Reform.

The progress made in civil-service reform furnishes a cause for the utmost congratulation. There are now in the competitive classified service upward of eighty-four thousand places. A most radical and sweeping extension was made by executive order dated the 6th day of May, 1896, and if the fourth-class postmasterships be not included in the statement it may be said that practically all positions contemplated by the civil-service law are now classified. Abundant reasons exist for including these postmasterships, based upon economy, improved service and the peace and quiet of neighborhoods. The civil-service rules, as amended during the last year, provide for a sensible and uniform method of promotion, basing eligibility to better positions upon demonstrated efficiency and faithfulness. The absence of fixed rules on this subject has been an infirmity in the system more and more apparent, as its other benefits have been better appreciated. Those who gain positions through the operation of civil service methods should be made to understand that the nonpartisan scheme through which they receive their appointments demands from them, by way of reciprocity, nonpartisan and faithful performance of duty under every administration, and cheerful fidelity to every chief. While they should be encouraged to decently exercise their rights of citizenship and to support through their suffrages the political beliefs they honestly profess, the noisy, pestilent and partisan employe, who loves political turmoil and contention, or who renders his and grudging service to an administration not representing his political views, should be promptly and fearlessly dealt with in such a way as to furnish a warning to others who may be likewise disposed.

National Finance and the Tariff.

I desire to recur to the statements elsewhere made concerning the Government's receipts and expenditures for the purpose of venturing upon some suggestions touching our present tariff law and its operation. This statute took effect on the 28th day of August, 1894. Whatever may be its shortcomings as a complete measure of tariff reform, it must be conceded that it has opened the way to a freer and greater exchange of commodities between us and other countries, and thus furnished a wider market for our products and manufacturing. The only entire fiscal year during which this law has been in force ended the 30th day of June, 1896. In that year our imports increased over those of the previous year more than $6,500,000, while the value of the domestic products we exported and which found markets abroad was nearly $70,000,000 more than during the preceding year.

The present law, during the only complete fiscal year of its operation, has yielded nearly $8,000,000 more revenue than was received from tariff duties in the preceding year. There was, nevertheless, a deficit between our receipts and expenditures of a little more than $25,000,000. This, however, was not unexpected. The situation was such in December last, seven months before the close of the fiscal year, that the Secretary of the Treasury foretold a deficiency of $17,000,000. The great and increasing apprehension and timidity in business circles and the depression in all activities intervening since that time resulting from causes perfectly well understood and entirely disconnected with our tariff law or its operation, seriously checked the imports we would have otherwise received and readily account for the difference between this estimate of the Secretary and the actual deficiency, as well as for a continued deficit. Indeed, it must be confessed that we could hardly have had a more unfavorable period than the last two years for the collection of tariff revenue. We cannot reasonably hope that our recuperation from this business depression will be sudden, but it has already set in, with a promise of acceleration and continuance.

I believe our present tariff law, if allowed a fair opportunity, will in the near future yield a revenue which, with reasonably economic expenditures, will overcome all deficiencies. Meantime no deficit that has occurred or may occur need excite or disturb us. To meet any such deficit we have in the treasury, in addition to a gold reserve of $100,000,000, a surplus of more than $128,000,000 applicable to the payment of the expenses of the Government, and which must, unless expended for that purpose, remain a useless hoard, or, if not extravagantly wasted, must in any event be perverted from the purpose of its exaction from our people. The payment, therefore, of any deficiency in the revenue from this fund is nothing nor than its proper and legitimate use.

It is immeasurably better to appropriate our surplus to the payment of justifiable expenses than to allow it to become an invitation to reckless appropriations and extravagant expenditures. I suppose it will not be denied that under the present law our people obtain the necessaries of a comfortable existence at a cheaper rate than formerly. This is a matter of supreme importance, since it is the palpable duty of every government to make the burdens of taxation as light as possible. The people should not be required to relinquish this privilege of cheap living except under the stress of their government's necessity made plainly manifest.

The Currency System.

I am more convinced than ever that we can have no assured financial peace and safety until the government currency obligations upon which gold may be demanded from the treasury are withdrawn from circulation and canceled. This well-known 33 greenbacks were thus retired, it is probable that the treasury notes issued in payment of silver purchases under the act of July 14, 1890, now paid in gold when demanded, would not create much disturbance, as they might from time to time when received in the treasury by redemption in gold or otherwise, be gradually and prudently replaced by silver coin.

In default of this plan, however, it would be a step in the right direction of currency obligations redeemable in gold, whenever so redeemed, should be canceled instead of being reissued.

National banks should redeem their own notes. They should be allowed to issue circulation to the par value of bonds deposited as security for its redemption, and the tax on their circulation should be reduced to one-fourth of 1 per cent.

In considering projects for the retirement of United States notes and treasury notes issued under the law of 1890, I am of the opinion that we have placed too much stress upon the danger of contracting the currency and have calculated too little upon the gold that would be added to our circulation if invited to us by better and safer financial methods. It is not so much a contraction of our currency that should be avoided as such unequal distribution. This might be obviated, and any fear of harmful contraction at the same time removed, by allowing the organization of smaller banks and in less populous communities than are now permitted, and authorizing banks to establish branches in small communities under proper restrictions.

The entire case may be presented by the statement that the day of sensible and sound financial methods will not dawn upon us until our government abandons the banking business and the accumulation of funds, and confines its monetary operations to the receipts of the money contributed by the people for its support, and to the expenditure of such amount of it as the people's benefit.

Our business interests and all good citizens long for rest from feverish agitation, and the inauguration by the Government of a reformed financial policy, which will encourage enterprise and make certain the rewards of labor and industry.

Roast for the Trusts.

Another topic in which our people rightfully take a deep interest may here be briefly considered. I refer to the existence of trusts and other huge aggregations of capital, the object of which is to secure the monopoly of some particular branch of trade, industry, or commerce and so stifle wholesome competition. When these are defended it is usually on the ground that though they increase profits they also reduce prices and thus may benefit the public. It must be remembered, however, that a reduction of prices to the people is not one of the real objects of these organizations, nor is their tendency necessarily in that direction. Their tendency is to crush out individual independence and to hinder or prevent the free use of human faculties and the full development of human character. Through them the farmer, the artisan, and the small trader is in danger of dislodgment from the proud position of being his own master, watchful of all that touches his country's prosperity, in which he has an individual lot, and interested in all that affects the advantages of business of which he is a factor, to be relegated to the level of a mere appurtenance to a great machine, with little free will, with no duty but of passive obedience, and with little hope or opportunity of rising in the scale of responsible and helpful citizenship.

Though Congress has attempted to deal with this matter by legislation the laws passed for that purpose thus far have proved ineffective. The decision of our highest court renders it quite doubtful whether the evils of trusts and monopolies can be adequately treated through federal action—unless they seek directly and purposely to include in their objects transportation or intercourse between States or between the United States and foreign countries. It does not follow, however, that this is the limit of the remedy that may be applied. Even though it may be found that federal authority is not broad enough to fully reach the case there can be no doubt of the power of the several States to act effectively in the premises, and there should be no reason to doubt their willingness to judiciously exercise such power.

In concluding this communication, its last words shall be an appeal to the Congress for the most rigid economy in the expenditure of the money it holds in trust for the people. The way to perplexing extravagance is easy, but a return to frugality is difficult. When, however, it is considered that those who bear the burdens of taxation have no guaranty of honest care save in the fidelity of their public servants, the duty of all possible retrenchment is plainly manifest.

When our differences are forgotten and our contests of political opinion are no longer remembered, nothing in the retrospect of our public service will be as fortunate and comforting as the recollection of official duty well performed and the memory of a constant devotion to the interests of our confiding fellow countrymen.

Keeping a Prince's Memory Green.

In the private apartments of the queen at Windsor castle there are many touching evidences of the manner in which the memory of the prince consort is revived by her majesty. The door of the queen's boudoir is inscribed: "This chamber was altered and decorated under the superintendence of H. R. H. the prince consort, in the twenty-fourth year of the reign of Queen Victoria." Everything in the chamber remains as it was arranged by the prince thirty-six years ago, and a conspicuous object under a glass shade is the bouquet he presented to her majesty on her wedding morning, Feb. 10, 1840. In the vestibule of the long corridor leading to the queen's private apartments there is a beautiful life-size marble group of her majesty and the prince consort, which was executed by William Theed shortly after the prince's death in December, 1861. The prince is arrayed as a knight. The queen has her arms around his neck, and is gazing lovingly up into his face while he, with his right arm extended, points on high. Underneath is the appropriate line from Goldsmith: "He allures to brighter world, and leads the way." The group is covered with lace, and stands before a bright red background, which adds very considerably to its striking effect.

Brandy Drops a Myth.

"This action of the police prohibiting the sale of brandy drops is laughable to men in business," said a manufacturing confectioner. "Why, a man might eat an entire bushel of ordinary brandied chocolates without getting a pony glassful of the pure spirit. Confectioners have a mixture of their own for this purpose, which I can assure you contains a very small proportion of brandy—less than an ounce to the gallon. There is about the same proportion of spirit in it as there is of grape juice in a quart bottle of claret at a cheap table d'hote.

"I learned my trade in England, and I remember that thirty years ago there was a howl over there against the sale of brandy snaps. This is a confection very popular with school children over there, very much the same as peanut brittle is here. A parliamentary committee inquired into the matter and discovered that a ton of brandy snaps contained less than half a pint of pure alcohol. The sale of snaps was not interfered with."

Poetic Fitness.

The spouse of the man who wrote that celebrated work, "Short Talks on the Care of Children," left him to care for their infant the other day while she attended a meeting of the society of wives of Literary Men. When she returned she found her progeny hitched up on the hatrack by its waistband and her husband, in his shirt sleeves, admiringly contemplating an article which he had just finished. When she had successfully resisted a desire to faint, she glanced over his shoulder at the title of the production which he had written. It was, "In Warm Weather Babies Should be Kept from [illegible]"

The Surgeons and the Football.

Even some of the physicians seem to be jealous guardians of the harmlessness of football. The half-back of the Williams college team has for some time been suffering, even to delirium, with congestion of the brain, though he is now much better and is reported out of danger. His doctor, however, says his sickness was not due to his injuries received on the football field, but to the complete relaxation which followed his retirement to North Adams to recover from a sprained ankle. The moral of this seems to be, not that football is dangerous, but to beware of relaxation. As the Irishman said when picked up with a few broken bones: "It wasn't the fall that hurted me, but stoppin' so sudden."—Boston Transcript.

An Electric Boutonniere.

A well-dressed man, with a particularly big, bright colored boutonniere, attracted attention to-day in the postoffice corridors. As he passed a dark corner the flowers on his lapel glowed suddenly with a soft, lambent light. The pocket storage battery which supplied the current which lighted the bulb concealed at the heart of the central rose was of the dry chlorida variety. The entire equipment was ingenious and the effect produced was fetching.—New York Letter to Pittsburg Dispatch.

Found Him Under the Bed.

Most women are in the habit of looking under the bed every night to see if a man is there. Mrs. Bernard Harkin of Philadelphia has looked for ten years and the other night she was rewarded by finding Elmer Elwerdine, a professional burglar, who is now in jail as a result of a woman's curiosity.

A Borneo Marriage Ceremony.

The marriage ceremony practiced by the people of Borneo is short and simple. Bride and groom are brought before the assembled tribe with great solemnity, and seated side by side. A betelnut is then cut in two by the medicine woman of the tribe, and one-half is given to the bride and the other half to the groom. They begin to chew the nut, and then the old woman, after some sort of incantation, knocks their heads together, and they are declared man and wife.

HUNGER AND CANNIBALISM.

Desire to Eat a Fellow-Man Strongest at Sea Times on Land.

Then it comes to pass, when the moment of keenest agony is reached, that the starving man begins to eye his companion with the wolf glare of a beast of prey, says Science for All. His pangs become paroxysmal. Reaching their greatest intensity there springs up within him a fierce impulse to slay his neighbor that he may feed on his flesh and slake his thirst with his blood. This terrible prompting to cannibalism, it may be noted, is, however, rare, save in cases of famine from shipwreck. Although it is customary to regard it as a common feature of starvation and to make thrilling statements of the frequency with which even mothers will, under the goad of hunger, kill and eat their children, and although startling assertions to this effect have been made by historians of great sieges, yet it ought to be said that, as a general rule, well authenticated cases of cannibalism among civilized people will be found to occur only at sea. They are very rarely found on land. And what is more curious still, whenever famished, shipwrecked men set foot on shore, no matter how desolate and barren may be their rock of refuge, they seem as if by magic at once to banish from their minds the very idea of anthropophagy, or man-eating, and that, too, though they might have been resignedly contemplating it as an imperative necessity a few hours before. In the case of Ensign Prentles of the 84th regiment and his companions, who were wrecked on the barren island off Cape Breton in 1780, the difference between famine on shore and on sea is curiously exemplified. Prentles records that they were able to endure the most fearful pangs of hunger without even so much as a thought of resorting to cannabilism for relief, so long, however, and only so long as they kept on land. But when they took to their boats—and it was not once merely that they experienced this—in order to escape from their rock-bound prison, though they were not a whit worse off for food than they were on land, yet the moment they put to sea with one accord they began to think of killing and eating one of their number. On the other hand, when they found their attempt to escape futile and put back to shore, whenever they landed, the horrible idea of cannibalism seemed to vanish.

A Zulu Wife's Duties.

Taking the Zulu as he is found today in his kraal, 100 miles away from a white settlement—the same habits, the same manner of marriage, the same death ceremony and the same moon festival are carried on now as when the Zulus first became known to the civilized world. It is the unwritten law that a Zulu must give eighteen head of cattle for a wife to have her live in idleness. The husband has bought her to do the work, and he tries to save up more cattle to buy more of them. When a Zulu desires to take unto himself a wife he views the dusky single maidens that live near him. Generally these Zulu girls have beautiful forms, but their faces make one take out his watch to see if it has stopped from the shock received. After Mr. Zulu has found a girl that he thinks would suit him, he sees her father and then the barter for the daughter begins. The highest amount paid is eighteen head of cattle, and eleven the lowest. When the number has been decided upon the girl is then introduced to her husband. She is perfectly willing to go. It is a part of their education, and has been so for centuries. If the prospective husband has the cattle with him he takes the bride away. To show her obedience to her new lord and master she carries all he has with him to his kraal. From that moment her father's house knows her no more, nor has he any control over her. She is as much the husband's property as the cow that grazes on his pasture. A Zulu woman, as is the custom with all South African native women, no matter how many children she may have, never takes but one with her, and that the youngest, who is strapped to her back, American Indian fashion.

Waiting.

"Say, old man," said the officer, "you have been hanging around here on this corner grinning long enough. What are you trying to do—make a mash?"

"Mash, nothin'," replied the honest old farmer. "I got into a political argument with some smart young feller here on the corner more'n a hour ago, and bet him he couldn't get a hundred dollars in gold for a hundred dollar greenback. He's rushin' around yit, huntin' fer that there gold."

"Ah!" said the policeman. "Who furnished the greenback?"

"Me."

"Oh!"

Little Late for This, Isn't It?

Four miles from St. Croix, Ind., upon the farm of Theodore Roberts, five acres of pop corn was actually popped on the stalk by the dry, hot weather. The farmer observed that the ears were swelling much beyond their normal size and upon examining them found that the grains had burst open and were capped with white pulp. Some of the corn was as sweet as when freshly roasted. This incident suggests a new and profitable industry for western Kansas.

CRUSHED TO THE DOORS

Fort Wayne Crowded Daily with Strangers.

Last Saturday was the opening of King's Assignee's Sale of Misfit and uncalled for Clothing, at 86 Calhoun St. The town was crowded with strangers who came from a distance of over a hundred miles. Long before the opening of this great assignee sale the cars in front of the building were blocked. People eagerly waiting for opening of this Great Sale of Misfit and Uncalled for Clothing and Ladies' Jackets. When the assignee finally ordered the doors opened, the crowds came so fast that the large window on the Wayne Street side was broken in and part of the people began coming in that way. It seemed as if the country for miles around had come on the opening day. The afternoon was a greater sight, for one continual stream of packages came from the store all day. The building being small only a portion of the stock was put on sale, but the demand being so great, the Baltimore branch of the King Tailoring Co. have shipped their entire stock to Fort Wayne, consisting of $[illegible],000 worth of Misfit and uncalled for Suits, Overcoats, Ladies Jackets and Capes, and will be sold at 50 per cent less than their cost to make, in order to close them out in a hurry. Among this stock will be found 100 Jackets and Capes that Mr. King had specially designed for the Baltimore Exposition. For quality and hand workmanship these garments [one hundred in all] cost to make $75 dollars each, and will be sold Saturday, Dec. 12th, at $12.85 each. Every lady for miles around should visit this exhibition of beauty and workmanship on Saturday at King's Assignee Sale of Misfit and Uncalled for garments at 86 Calhoun St., Fort Wayne, Ind.

In this shipment comes 150 Men's Light Weight Overcoats, made for August and September wear. Were made for $20 to $35. They are light weight but all colors and will be sold at $3.59, beginning Saturday Dec. 12.

No man or woman living within a radius of 100 miles of Fort Wayne, but what they should avail themselves of this wonderful opportunity that may occur but once in a life time.

One thousand remnants have been cut and made up into Boy's Suits and Overcoats and will be sold from the up stairs [illegible] at King's Assignee Sale of Clothing and Uncalled for Jackets and Capes at 86 Calhoun Street, Fort Wayne, Ind. It will pay you to come a hundred miles to visit this great sale.

Railroad fare paid to purchasers of $25 or over, no matter what distance you come.

CHEAP OPERA IN BOSTON.

An Experiment in Reduced Theatrical Rates That Proved Successful.

An experiment has been made in Boston for a year which thoughtful people have watched with interest, says the New York Tribune. There has long been a demand for a reduction in the prices of the average theater tickets, or, rather, a reduction of the prices when poor or common-place attractions were offered, as is sure to be the case at every theater in Boston at times in every season. The public believes that $1.50 is too much to pay for a good seat to see a second-rate lot of players perform in a second or third-rate sort of play, but the prices at the majority of the theaters have remained the same, although occasionally they increase them 50 per cent when some extra attraction arrives. One of the cheaper grade of theaters, under a new manager, tried the low rates at the beginning of the season, and the house is always full. The grade of performances is quite as good as at houses where the high prices prevail, and sometimes better. Just what the exchequer will show at the end of the season, of course, only the managers know, but the fact that prices remain low and the houses continue to be full is a pretty good indication that the public appreciates the opportunity. A new theater was opened at the beginning of last season, with a new melodrama, at the usual prices charged at most other theaters, and the result was bad business. After an ineffectual struggle against the tide, the manager decided to try comic opera early last summer, at popular prices, and with a new opera every week. The prices were 50 cents for all seats on the first floor and 25 cents for those in the two balconies. The business was good from the start. With the increase of business came improved casts for the operas. The summer season was so satisfactory that the owners decided to continue the same policy for the regular season, and the result is that the house is literally sold out every week many days in advance for the evening performances, while for the matinees, when the price is uniformly 25 cents for every seat reserved in the house, it is possible to get two tickets only by applying at least two weeks in advance. The class of people which goes there is sometimes as good as that which goes to the symphony concerts and is always excellent. The wealthy middle class goes there and good musicians sit through a performance of "Faust" (for they are now giving grandopera occasionally with good results) with evident enjoyment. The boxes are sold by the season, for the most part, and it is rare to see a vacant seat in the entire house on any night, and never at a matinee. This is regarded by Bostonians as important, especially in view of its possible effect on the theatrical business of the future.

Steal Sawdst

Thieving is evidently becoming a popular fad. The Kendallville Times says:

"Mr. John Kaiser, the grocer, had a load of sawdust piled up in the rear of his place of busines on Main street, yesterday, to be used in putting away ice. This morning the sawdust was gone, someone having hauled it away during the night."

Times must be getting hard indeed, when a man is forced to steal sawdust. Previous to late lamented election, we were told that times would be so flush after McKinley was elected, that an editor could leave his diamonds out on the gate post over night, and be sure to find them in the morning. For lack of faith and for "other reasons" we have not yet tried it.

The New Woman

The new woman seems to be really coming into the prominence so long promised for her. Recent dispatches from Laporte speak of the conviction in the court there of a girl on charge of highway robbery. She gets two years in the penitentiary. The dispatch adds that "the girl is only nineteen years of age and has led a wayward life for some time, her parents being unable to restrain her. It is alleged that previous to her last escapade the holding up and robbing of Louis Helston, a Michigan City railroad official, at a point of a revolver, which led to the arrest and conviction, she held up and robbed a man in Fort Wayne, Ind., and also at other places. The mother of the girl has twice been declared insane by a commission here, but has never been taken to the asylum." Thus, step by step the new woman is crowding man from every occupation he has so long fondly believed were his, and his alone.

The New Hook Spoon Free to All.t

I read in the Christian Standard tha Miss A. M. Fritz, Station A., St. Louis, Mo., would give an elegant plated hook spoon to anyone sending her ten 2-cent stamps. I sent for one and found it so useful that I showed it to my friends, and made $13,000 in two hours, taking orders for the spoon; it is a household necessity. It cannot slip into the dish or cooking vessel, being held in the place by a hook on the back. The spoon is something that housekeepers have needed ever since spoons were first invented. Anyone can get a sample spoon by sending ten 2 cent stamps to Miss Fritz. This is a splendid way to make money around home. Very truly,

The Jail.

There are still a few people in jail of the old lot and two new ones were put in yesterday morning. The new arrivals of that date are George Knepper and Jacob Nichols, both of St. Joe, They are men who broke into Barney's store at St. Joe the night of Dec. 1, and stole three sacks of clover seed. It appears that after they got the sacks out of Barney's they broke open a freight car loaded with corn, standing on the side track, and put the clover seed into it and shut the door. Then they kept an eye on that car, and when about a week later, it was hitched onto a train and pulled out east, they took the next passenger train and followed up, Over in Ohio some distance they overtook the freight. Then they got off the passenger and into the freight car, and at Fostoria were run on a side track. They got a dray and had the seed hauled up town to a dealer and sold it. Something suspicious in their manner, attracted the notice of the dealer, and he telegraphed at once to dealers in different places, asking if they had lost any clover seed. Barney at St. Joe responded that he had lost three sacks and started for Fostoria. Nichols was arrested at that place, but Knepper had left and come back to St. Joe, where he was found about 4 a. m. Wedneeday morning. Both were brought to Auburn, and lodged in jail where they now are. Both have confessed, and there will be little to do when court sets except for the grand jury to indict them and the judge to fix the punishment.

Clint North of Butler who was in limbo serving out a fine for a disorderly drunk, ended his time and was let out Wednesday.

There are still four other men in jail besides the two new ones. Delbert Davis, the man who tried to kill his partner when they were coming this way from Michigan, on a corn husking tour. When near Al. St. Clair's they had the trouble. The man assaulted has gone home, but will be here when court sets. There is a man named Adams in jail accused of stealing an overcoat from Loewenstein's store at Waterloo. He claims to live at Pleasant Lake. James Murray who stole a horse and buggy from Garrett is the third and a boy from Jackson township named Treesh is held as an "incorrigible" on which charge he is liable to be sent to the Boys' Reform School at Plainfield for a term of years. Altogether the sheriff has a large and varied assortment of talent on hand, and the next court will keep busy for a few days.

Notice.

All persons indebted to Drs. Matheny & Hines must settle within the next 30 days or the accounts will be put into judgment. The books are in my hands for settlement.

THE PILL THAT WILL

Boy Stabbed.

A sad tragedy occurred yesterday, a few miles this side of Ft. Wayne in St. Joe township. George Sturm a 15 year old lad was stabbed to death by Freddie Krueckenberger, aged 13. The boys were neighbors, but attended different schools. The latter in going by the school of the former, pushed in the door of a playhouse and Sturm and some other boys determined to whip him, when he came back home. On his return last evening Krueckenberger met young Sturm and two other boys and they at once attacked him. He had a penknife in his hand, with which he had been whittling and after being struck two or three blows by Sturm he struck back with the knife, hitting Sturm in the neck. Sturm cried out in pain and ran away, as did his two friends. The Krueckenberger boy also ran home when he saw what he had done. The injured boy died soon after reaching home. The other boy is in jail and both families are nearly crazed with grief. The boys have always borne a good character and the families are well respected.

Is One of the Men Who Robbed Milo Thomas' Store.

Monday Sheriff Stroh and Milo Thomas went to Fort Wayne where it was thought they could get on track of the men who robbed Mr. Thomas' store at Corunna a few weeks ago. From Fort Wayne they telegraphed the Mayor at Delphos, O., and found that a man was there who had been trying to sell knives and razors on which were the name of Milo Thomas. He was hurriedly brought to Wayne and in charge of Sheriff Stroh was brought to Auburn last night and placed in jail. He had in his grip several of the knives, etc, on which was Mr. Thomas' name. It is thought that there are still two other fellows who belong to the gang. Sheriff Stroh thinks he saw the man who is now in jail and three other fellows in Auburn a couple of weeks ago. Mr. Thomas was here to-day, looking after his interests in the man in jail, we suppose. He says his loss on the property stolen, outside of the part he has recovered will be about $20. Of course, the time and expense of getting the fellow here and convicted will be greater.

A Chance to Make Money.

I have made $1,640 clear money in 87 days and attended to my household duties besides, and I think this is doing splendid for a woman inexperienced in business. Anyone can sell what everyone wants to buy, and every family wants a Dish Washer. I don't canvass at all; people come or send for the washer, and every washer that goes out sells two or three more, as they do the work to per minutes. I am going to devote my whole time to this business now and I am sure that I can clear $5,000 a year. My sister and brother have started in the business and are doing splendid. You can get complete instructions and hundreds of testimonials by addressing the Iron City Dish Washer Co., Station A. Pittsburg, Pa., and if you don't make lots of money it's your own fault. Mrs. W. TERRIBLE DISASTER.

Buildings Collapse, Burying Scores in Their Ruins.

Cadiz special: A terrible disaster occurred at Zeres, in the Province of Andalusia, sixteen miles from this city, through the collapse of a building. A house containing twenty-five persons collapsed without warning, burying all of its inmates in the debris. The house fell upon an adjacent tenement building, which also gave way. The tenement house was inhabited by eighty-five persons, all of whom were buried in the wreckage. Eleven dead bodies and forty-six seriously injured persons have already been taken from the ruins and the work of excavation for the purpose of recovering the others, is proceeding as rapidly as possible.

Weyler's Reception at Havana.

Havana special: Gen. Weyler arrived here at 5:30 o'clock Saturday evening. He rode into the city on horseback accompanied by two squadrons of cavalry. His coming had been known to the public and large crowds gathered to welcome him. He was given a popular ovation from the time he reached the city limits until he arrived at the palace. At some places along his route girls strewed flowers in his pathway and he was in other ways treated as a popular hero. All congratulated him upon the success that has attended the Spanish arms, and complimented him upon the effectiveness of his campaigns to Pinar Del Rio. The city presents a most animated aspect, reflecting the joy felt by the Spaniards because of Maceo's death and General Weyler's triumph over the insurgents in the western provinces.

A Woman Kills a Negro.

Mrs. Grace Dolan, a white woman, about 24 years old, shot and killed Henry Jackson, a young negro porter, at her home on Liberty street, Indianapolis. Her husband was away from home, and a friend named Emma Ott was staying with her. The negro, whom they had never seen before, tried to climb into a window, but Mrs. Dolan beat him off with a curtain pole. He returned, but she frightened him off with a threat to shoot. She ran out to give the alarm, but found him rushing back to the house armed with a brick, which he threw at them. Miss Ott handed Mrs. Dolan the revolver, and she fired three shots.

Australian Crops.

J. S. Larke, the Canadian Trade Commissioner in Australia, has furnished the Vancouver Board of Trade with a statement of the condition of the Australian crops. He states that the country will have to import over 5,000,000 bushels of wheat this year owing to the failure of the Australian harvest. He says that the bulk will come from America. Canadian merchants were late in the field, San Francisco firms having secured a number of large orders. Mr. Larke says, however, that a large amount will yet be required, and advises Canadian merchants to look into the matter.

Three Women Poisoned.

Sistersville (W. Va.) special: Word has reached here of the poisoning of three women at Blum Run, this county. All the victims were dissolute women, who have made there headquarters about the oil fields. Stella Brown died soon afterwards. The two others are lying at the point of death. The women were poisoned by eating corned beef, which contained some foreign substance.

Assaulted a Family.

Basil Colley, Joe Morgan and an unknown, while drunk, entered the house of Jesse Johnson, an invalid, near Clifford Station, Ohio, and after choking him into insensibility, beat his wife and sister-in-law and wrecked the furniture. Both women are badly injured, Mrs. Johnson's sister being in a serious condition. Officers are after the desperadoes.

Killed with a Pick.

John Kellogg and John Brown, coalminers at Bergholz, near Alliance, Ohio, quarreled over the ownership of an empty coal car in the mines. Brown gained possession of the car, when Kellogg drove a coal pick almost through his adversary's body, killing him. Kellogg was arrested.

All Hands Went Down.

A special from Corunna says: The report of the loss of the steamer Salier is confirmed. The vessel carried a crew of sixty men, and all hands went down with the ship.

A $35,000 Blaze.

The Baldwin Wooden Ware factory at Lafayette, Ind., burned. Loss, $35,000. Insurance $13,000.

Talmage Denies He Will Wed.

Rev. T. Dewitt Talmage formally denied the report that he is to marry Miss Susie Managam, of Sing Sing.

A Building Tumbles.

The east wall of the Kimball Block, on Cedar avenue, Cleveland, Ohio, toppled over and killed two men. The structure was ruined by fire over a year ago and the bare wall has been standing ever since without any bracing for the upper part. The men were at work at the bottom of the wall preparatory to tearing it down.

Scar-Faced Charley Dead.

Scar-faced Charley, who became famous for firing the shot which precipitated the Modoc Indian war, is dead.

EASTERN.

Abraham Eckert, who was to have been hanged at Wilkesbarre, Pa., for the murder of Frederick T. Bittenbender July 7, 1895, took poison in his cell and died.

The J. E. Owens Drug Company of Kansas City, Mo., has failed as a result of the Missouri National Bank failure. The bank holds notes of the firm aggregating $11,250.

Porteous & Mitchell, dry goods dealers at Middletown, Conn., announced that on March 1 the business there will be closed. No cause is given. This company is a branch of a concern having stores in Norwich, Conn., New York State, Michigan and Illinois.

Willis A. Meyers' Milwaukee department store, known as the Boston Store, was seized by the Sheriff Tuesday morning on four attachments, aggregating $58,921. Later Mr. Meyers made an assignment to George Koch. Meyers' attorney estimates the assets at $170,000 to $200,000, and the liabilities at $100,000.

James W. Wallace, First Lieutenant of Company A, Eighteenth Regiment, National Guard, of Pennsylvania, committed suicide in the company room in the armory building in Pitsburg, Thursday night. He loaded a musket, stood it on the floor, and with a stick on which a nail had been fixed pulled the trigger. As he did so he leaned over the gun. The bullet entered his breast and passed out between the shoulder blades. He fell dead just as the members of the company broke into the room. The suicide left orders about the disposal of his body, but gave no hint as to the cause of the deed.

A special cable dispatch from London to the New York Sun says that the deadlock, which has been known in Europe as the concert of powers, is broken and the Turk is to be coerced. The Sultan is to be reduced in fact if not actually in name to the vassalage. His fate will be made known to him at once. Russia, France and Great Britain have decreed it. Should he resist or fail to bow at once to the inevitable, then the combined fleets of those three powers will enforce their behest. Such, in brief, is the infinitely welcome news which will bring relief and a sense of restored self-respect to the whole Christian world.

WESTERN.

A mob of farmers broke into the county jail at Lexington, Mo., secured Jesse Winner and James Nelson, held for the murder of Mrs. Winner and her two babes, and lynched them.

Minnie Williams, alias Jennie Webster, alias Mollie Scott, a notorious Chicago pickpocket, shoplifter, and all around crook, is under arrest at Louisville, Ky. She is held to answer for robbing Sheriff Craycroft of $165 while caressing him on the street. There are other charges.

The owners of the American schooner James G. Swan have lost their case before the United States District Court at Seattle, Wash., and will be compelled to forfeit the vessel for violating the sealing laws. The case is already a noted one, as it is the first time an American schooner has been forfeited for illegal sealing by an American court.

At Butte, Mont., Judge Knowles has signed the final decree for the sale of all the Butte and Boston properties by the receiver. Capt. Couch's resignation as receiver was accepted, leaving J. T. Forbes the sole receiver. The sale includes the properties covered by the mortgage of the Massachusetts Loan and Trust Company and other claims.

A disastrous wreck occurred Monday morning near Storr's station on the Baltimore and Ohio Southwestern Railway, in which two persons were killed and a number injured. The trains which collided were an accommodation from Cochran, Ind., and a special made up of a passenger coach and two private cars, carrying the general officers of the road, who were starting out to make an inspection of the line. The engineer and conductor of a special had orders to follow fifteen minutes behind a preceding regular train and to keep out of the way of the accommodation, which had the right of way. The special stopped at Storr's, where it should have waited, but the engineer and conductor both forgot their orders and pulled out. When three-quarters of a mile west of Storr's the trains came together. There was a fog which prevented seeing clearly, so neither engineer suspected collision until the shock. The killed are Engineer John Price, Fireman Homer Dixon, and L. Zepernich.

The Iron Mountain fast express, outgoing, was held up by six masked men one mile from the union station, within the city limits of St. Louis, Wednesday night at 9:30 o'clock. Two robbers went to the express car and demanded admittance. Express Messenger W. J. Egan refused to let them in. They threatened to kill him, but he was inflexible. They then placed a stick of dynamite at the car door, and blew it to pieces. The explosion badly shattered one side of the car. When the robbers looked for the treasure they were told that the money was in a time-locked safe. Finding it useless to try to blow open the strongbox, the robbers jumped off and notified their companions on the engine that they had failed to get anything. The robbers then disappeared, and Engineer William Green started ahead. As the train pulled away Express Messenger Egan came to the shattered door of his car, intending to shoot at the marauders. No sooner did they see him, however, than they opened fire and he fled behind a pile of boxes. The noise of the shooting attracted the clerks in the mail car and they opened the doors and a fusillade followed. Express Messenger Egan said the Pacific Express Company had lost nothing.

WASHINGTON.

It is expected that a number of resolutions will be introduced into Congress inquiring of the Secretary of War why contracts have not been made at various points for beginning river and harbor work in accordance with the provisions of the river and harbor act; and also why certain work has not been ordered where contracts are not necessary. Senators and Representatives from districts for which appropriations have been made, upon arriving in the city, have visited the War Department with their complaints. The replies received to their inquiries have not as a rule been satisfactory, and the expectation is that the Secretary of War will be asked to make a public reply to Congress.

Secretary Carlisle Monday transmitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives the estimates of appropriations required for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898. They are recapitulated by titles as follows, cents being omitted:

Legislative establishment	$4,379,820
Executive establishment	19,865,952
Judicial establishment	907,120
Foreign intercourse	2,082,728
Military establishment	24,292,636
Naval establishment	32,434,773
Indian affairs	7,279,525
Pensions	141,328,580
Public works	31,437,061
Postal service	1,288,334
Miscellaneous	36,344,216
Permanent annual appropriations	120,078,220
Total	$421,718,970

The estimates for the present fiscal year amounted to $418,091,073, and the appropriations, including deficiencies and miscellaneous amounted to $432,421,605.

The second session of the Fifty-fourth Congress was called to order at noon Monday, the Senate by Vice President Stevenson and the House by Speaker Reed. Exactly at noon the Vice President entered the chamber, and, going to the desk of the presiding officer, gave a tap, which brought the Senate to order, while the blind chaplain, Rev. Dr. Milburn, delivered an impressive invocation. The roll call showed seventy Senators present. In the House, amid all the hurry and bustle, there was an air of sadness as members glanced at the black pall which covered the conspicuous desk of the late ex-Speaker Crisp, the Democratic leader. On it were some cut flowers. His portrait in the lobby in the rear of the House was also wreathed with calla lilies. After the President's message had been read, adjournment was had.

Secretary Morton has again thrown down the gauntlet to the members of Congress over the seed question. He has incorporated in his report a special communication of how Congressmen dispose of the seeds which are allotted to them and he has even gone so far as to mention them by name. Most of them have distributed their seeds around among country newspapers, agricultural societies, Grand Army posts, public officials, and chairmen of local political committees. The members of Congress are much wrought up over this curious addition to the Secretary's report and they declare that it is a gross violation of the courtesies between the executive and legislative branches of the government. While many of the members of Congress admit that the seed business is in some cases ridiculous and generally only a political man never, they say it is not becoming in an executive officer to fill up his report with arguments for or against any law, but that on the contrary his whole duty is to execute the laws as he finds them, leaving to Congress to assume the responsibility for the enactment of the statutes.

FOREIGN.

The Bessemer steel trust has gone to pieces.

Among the leaders in both branches of Congress there seems to be a growing disposition to leave the Cuban question "up in the air," where the President put it.

Delegate Palma at New York received a letter, dated Nov. 8, from Gen. Calixto Garcia, confirming the news of the death of Maj. Winchester D. Osgood, the Cornell student. Special correspondence of the New York Herald gives the following details: Osgood commanded a Cuban battery during the recent siege of the town of Guaimaro. On the second day of the siege, while Maj. Osgood, under heavy fire from the Spaniards, was training one of his pieces on the forts, a Mauser bullet struck him in the forehead. He uttered the word, "Well," and, bending forward on his cannon, hugged it and breathed his last in behalf of Cuban liberty. The news of his death deeply impressed President Cisneros and the commanding officers, all of whom had great regard for the American officer. Young Osgood was the son of a United States army officer, who was until recently stationed at St. Louis, Mo. Osgood entered Cornell in the fall of 1893 and became a star oarsmen, foot-baal player, and all-around athlete.

The Havana, Cuba, correspondents of Madrid journals are indignant at the refusal of Gen. Weyler's press censor to allow them to cable the facts to Madrid, and they say if Gen. Weyler continues his present efforts to conceal the truth from the people of Spain, who are making so many sacrifices to supply the necessary sinews of war, he is doomed to early recall and personal disgrace. The representatives of the Liberal and the Heraldo of Madrid find themselves compelled, owing to the ridiculously rigid censorship at Havana, to send the bulk of their dispatches to Key West for transmission therefrom. The Lucha, in a significant editorial, makes between the lines a most vigorous protest, warning Gen. Weyler that neither politicians nor generals who would be popular and successful must forget that the press is often mightier than the sword and cannot be trampled upon or snubbed with impunity, that the whole world respects it, and that no hand, however despotic or arbitrary, can absolutely control it. Unwritten victories add little luster even to a soldier's glory.

IN GENERAL.

Mayor Thacher, of Albany, N. Y., has received a medal and letter of thanks from Germany for his work in connection with the World's Fair at Chicago. Mr. Thacher says the Treasury Department is alone to blame for the delay in forwarding the awards.

The famous Topolobampo communistic colony in Sinaloa, Mexico, must be numbered among the socialistic failures. For nearly eight years the colony has been struggling for existence, and now the Mexican Government has struck a blow which will end the great experiment. It has revoked one of the most important concessions given to Albert R. Owen, formerly of New Jersey, the founder of the colony, and the early dissolution of the community must result.

The annual report of R. E. Preston, the Director of the Mint, states there is no doubt that the silver coins of the United States are now being counterfeited, exactly similar to the genuine in size, weight, and devices. Some of these coins cannot be distinguished from the genuine even by experts. A dangerous counterfeit silver half dollar has made its appearance in the East and West, the weight of which is 192 grains, with a fineness of .867½, while the weight of the genuine is 192.9 grains of the fineness of .900. The profit to the counterfeiter is now about 100 per cent. So far the best known protection against the counterfeiting of coins has been found to be the lettering placed on the edges, similar to that on the first coinage of the United States or the 5-franc pieces of France. The Director recommends that authority be given the Secretary of the Treasury to have experiments made to determine the best means of preventing the counterfeiting, or at least minimizing the danger.

AWFUL LOSS OF LIFE

NORTH GERMAN LLOYD STEAMER SALIERE GOES DOWN.

Two Hundred and Seventy-five Persons Perish—Disaster Due to a Fog—Ship Was on Her Way from Bremen to Buenos Ayres.

Dashes on the Rocks of Spain.

Crashing through the mist into the Corrubedo rocks off the northwestern coast of Spain, the North German Lloyd steamship Saliere foundered in a few minutes, and all on board were lost. Two hundred and ten passengers were on board, and the crew consisted of sixty-five men. There was no time to take to the boats and all went down with the ship.

News of the terrible disaster floated to Villagarcia with the tide. An overturned boat with the name of the vessel painted on the stern, spars and planks torn from the ship as it crashed into the rocks, were swept to shore as silent witnesses of the fate of passengers and crew. Not one human being on board was able to reach safety, though it may be possible some were picked up by passing vessels. The sinking of the Saliere may be one of the mysteries of the sea.

The Saliere was bound from Bremen to Buenos Ayres, by way of Corunna and Villagarcia. Advices from Bremen and Corunna state that the passengers were mostly in the steerage, and consisted of 113 Russians, thirty-five Galicians, sixty-one Spaniards and one German. The vessel had put in at Corunna, and was heading eastward for Villagarcia, when it crashed into the jagged rocks, which are always given a wide berth by mariners.

Just why and how the miscalculation was made which swung the Saliere one point too close to the terrible reef may never be known. The only explanation is that an ocean mist shut out the rocks, and that the dense fog prevented accurate bearings being taken.

The steamship rounded Cape Finisterre and proceeded southward toward its last stopping place before it reached Buenos Ayres. Villagarcia is a town of less than 2,000 inhabitants, situated between Cape Finisterre and the City of Vigo. The Saliere expected to pick up more passengers at Villagarcia, bound for Uruguay. A heavy mist hung over the sea and a strong wind was blowing from the south when the Saliere was about due to head toward Villagarcia. The vessel could easily have been seen from the shore but for the mist, as the channel between the rocks and the coast of Spain is only about five miles wide. A miscalculation, and the Corrubedo rocks were responsible for the greatest disaster which has ever occurred in the Bay of Arosa.

Nothing was known of the fate of the vessel until the floating wreckage reached Villagarcia. The fact that the rocks are only about five miles from the mainland and that none of the passengers or crew had been able to reach the shore led to the belief that the Saliere must have foundered within a few minutes after it had struck on the reef.

PLAIN TALK BY CULLOM.

Illinois Senator Pleads for Intervention in Behalf of Cuba.

Senator Cullom Thursday raised his voice in the Senate in Cuba's behalf. He not only made an eloquent speech, but preceded it with a resolution which, if adopted, will pledge the United States to the extinction of Spanish title and the termination of Spanish control of the islands at the gateway of the Gulf of Mexico. Mr. Cullom is not an orator, but he is a very impulsive speaker. His exhaustive and at times eloquent review of the history of Spain's oppression in Cuba was closely followed by Senators Sherman, Call, Hoar, Mills, Palmer and others, who have been particularly interested in the Cuban question.

"All the diplomacy of the ages never found a prayer by which slavery could be dethroned," said Senator Cullom, in opening. "It required the humanity of Lincoln and the progress of the republic to open the prison walls to liberty and make glad a waiting world. If we wait for precedent we shall wait forever," declared the Illinois Senator a little later. "If a precedent is needed we shall make one. Cuba to-day is lost to Spain. The public proclamation of Spanish defeat may not have been officially and definitely announced, but in truth and fact the submission of Cuba will never again be yielded as of old. Tribute of $25,000,000 to $40,000,000 annually so long exacted will never again replenish the treasury of Spain. The struggles of 1895 and 1896 sadly crippled Cuba, but they will ruin Spain. The American people are coming to the consideration of the Cuban situation as they already have in certain other cases, as a great political question; a continental question, if you please. And being a political continental question it will be decided ultimately by the continent whose interests are most clearly involved. Geographically considered, Cuba cannot belong to Spain. She is in American waters and politically is entitled to statehood in the continent of American republics."

CONGRESS IN ACTION

BOTH HOUSES CONVENE, WITH THE GALLERIES PACKED.

Diplomatic Representatives of Other Nations Among Those Who Attend the Opening Ceremonies—Reading of President's Message.

Solons Reassemble.

Washington correspondence:

The reassembling of Congress for the closing session of the Fifty-fourth Congress was an occasion of unusual brilliancy and interest. The opening day is always a gala affair, marking as it does the official inauguration of the social as well as the political season in Washington, but Monday it was all the more interesting because of the long and hard fought political battle that had been waged during the recess.

The weather was perfect, clear and fairly warm. The throngs who streamed up the hill to witness the opening ceremonies formed an unorganized civic pageant. Gay equipages, with a rattle of chains, drawn by prancing steeds, conveyed the diplomats, the fashionables and the more prominent in official life. These elegant turnouts moved side by side with one-horse ramshackle cabs and other nondescript two-wheelers, conveying legislators and visitors. The unnumbered thousands moved up Pennsylvania avenue on foot or in street cars.

The corridors and galleries were thronged; there were demonstrations for conspicuously prominent statesmen, and at last came the drop of the gavel and the regular ceremonies attending the opening session and the reception of the President's annual communication to Congress.

Proceedings of the Senate.

The Senate began the second session of the Fifty-fourth Congress with crowded galleries and with that accompaniment of activity and of greeting that usually attends the reassembling of Congress. But the upper branch of Congress never puts aside its dignity, and the meeting developed no demonstrations of dramatic incidents.

Exactly at 12 o'clock the Vice-President entered the chamber and going to the desk of the presiding officer, gave a tap which brought the Senate to order, while the blind chaplain, Rev. Dr. Milburn, delivered an impressive invocation. The chaplain referred feelingly to the illness of Mr. Allison and besought his speedy restoration to health. He spoke of the recent exciting political contest through which the country had passed, marked, he said, by a freedom from much of the rancor and scandal monging of former years and by a quick and calm acceptance of the results by the whole nation. Peace with all nations, prosperity to our industries and the upbuilding of all our people in the grand brotherhood of American citizenship were eloquently invoked. The roll-call showed seventy Senators present.

The reading of the President's message was the feature of the proceedings, and beyond this no attempt was made to enter upon the business of the session. To many of the foreign representatives occupying the diplomatic gallery the message had special interest and significance, owing to the part they had taken in the conspicuous foreign events to which the President referred, Sir Julian Pauncefote, the British ambassador, and the new Turkish minister, Moustapha Bey, were present. Senor Dupuy De Lome, the Spanish minister, was not in attendance during the day, but two of the secretaries of the Spanish legation carefully noted the references to the Cuban conflict. Minister Hatch of Hawaii and Mr. Cooper, the Hawaiian minister of foreign affairs, were listeners, although the message contained no reference to the Hawaiian islands. The diplomatic gallery was vacated as soon as the foreign questions referred to in the message had been read.

On the floor of the Senate printed copies of the message were distributed and these gave the Senators opportunity to read the salient features instead of listening to them. As a result there was scant attention after the reading had proceeded beyond the first half hour. The reading of the message covered one hour and fifty minutes and at its conclusion the Senate adjourned.

Proceedings of the House.

While the scenes attending the opening of the House were both brilliant and interesting in the crowds that thronged the galleries and the conspicuous personages present, the proceedings themselves were dull and spiritless, being distinctively routine. The House met, the chaplain invoked the divine blessing on the work of the session, the roll was called, a committee consisting of Mr. Cannon of Illinois, Mr. Payne of New York and Mr. Turner of Georgia was appointed to wait on the President and the latter's annual communication was read.

The reading consumed about two hours. It was Mr. Cleveland's farewell message, and there was much curiosity as to his views, on Cuba especially, but there was no demonstration, either of approval or dissent, through its reading. The holiday nature of the day was saddened by the announcement of the death of ex-Speaker Crisp, which Mr. Turner of Georgia formally made to his associates. Out of respect to the memory of the distinguished Georgian the House, after adopting appropriate resolutions, immediately adjourned.

News of Minor Note.

PULSE OF THE PRESS

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

New York.

So he presents a heaping peck of troubles with scarcely a hint as to how they may be leveled to the rim of the measure.—Press.

His conclusions show beyond a doubt that he will leave to his successor the honor of taking the first step to assure Cuban liberty.—Journal.

We should mind our own business, restore domestic prosperity, faithfully comply with the neutrality laws and let Cuba alone.—Commercial-Advertiser.

The message writes the history of an administration and writes it with dignity and calmness. It is one of the most instructive documents ever prepared for perusal.—Brooklyn Eagle.

The only political value of the document is in its incidental disclosures of Mr. Cleveland's frame of mind as indicating his probable course during the brief period of power remaining to him.—Sun.

The message as a whole is a creditable document. Its style is open to criticism, but it is evidently animated throughout by a sincere desire to avoid offense without a sacrifice of personal dignity.—Mail and Express.

As to Cuba, it is noteworthy that the hypothetical condition which he sets forth as one that would justify and compel American intervention is wholly indistinguishable from the conditions now actually existing as described in the message itself.—World.

Chicago.

His threat to Spain will present to the European power a very clear view of this nation's attitude.—Record.

The intimation that the United States will be compelled to protect American interests in Cuba and the interests of civilization and peace is important in its significance.—Chronicle.

Most Americans believe that the situation is at hand and they will be incensed rather than placated by the fatuous negotiation which the administration has undertaken in lieu of decisive action.—Journal.

Reduced to its essence, he has given Spain until March 4 immunity from intervention by the United States or any other power and permission to continue its hideous work of murder and ruin.—Tribune.

Of the prospect of armed intervention, in case of all other means of pacifying Cuba fail, the President speaks with the utmost frankness and good sense. It is a contingency that, however deplorable it may be, has not been overlooked by level-headed people.—Times-Herald.

London.

Spain had better accept Mr. Cleveland's friendly counsel as Mr. McKinley is not likely to be less exacting than Mr. Cleveland. Altogether, it is a dignified and able message.—Standard.

President Cleveland's argument is clear enough. No country possesses the right to foster a perpetual source of trouble, and Spain must either grant autonomy or sell. Spain, however, will probably refuse to do anything of the kind.—Daily News.

We believe the time has passed when the Cuban insurgents will accept any solution placing Spanish officials over them, even nominally. There is no mistake, however, about the warning President Cleveland addresses to Spain.—Chronicle.

The tone and spirit of the message are worthy of all praise. It is a pity that the moderation and balance of mind which Mr. Cleveland has just displayed were not more conspicuous last year, when he startled two continents by a menace of war.—Times.

In General.

On the whole, the message will be regarded as rather commonplace.—Indianapolis Journal.

President Cleveland adds to his well earned reputation as a sound financier in his attack on our financial methods.—St. Louis Star.

Mr. Cleveland's last message will add nothing to his fame, and will be a source of gratification to his enemies.—Kansas City World.

It is characterized by the same strong common sense that has been such a marked feature of all his state papers.—Peoria Herald.

President Cleveland's message is a forcible reiteration of views that he has long held in most of the subjects treated.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

The President gives very little encouragement for any hope that this Government, under his administration, will favor the annexation of Cuba.—Minneapolis Journal.

It maintains (in regard to Cuba) a calm judicial attitude, which disregards neither facts nor obligations founded on them. Sentiment is acknowledged, but not admitted as a ground of action.—Milwaukee Journal.

Mr. Cleveland is in accord with public sentiment in the United States when he declares that this Government should object to any other nation interfering in Cuban affairs or acquiring the island.—Toledo Blade.

Until the inability of Spain to end the war is manifest, until her sovereignty in Cuba is extinct, or until "the situation is by other incidents imperatively changed," Mr. Cleveland will do nothing. This is the true policy.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

In every feature and detail of the message Mr. Cleveland maintains the invincible loyalty to the American public which he has manifested from the first moment of his advent into public life.—Cincinnati Commercial-Tribune.

President Cleveland's last annual deliverance to the Congress of the United States is a sober, thoughtful and statesmanlike survey of national affairs.—Detroit Free Press.

Especially noteworthy is his statement that "by the course of events we may be drawn into such an unusual and unprecedented conflict as will fix a limit to our patient waiting for Spain to end the contest, either alone and in her own way or with our friendly co-operation." Spain cannot fail to understand the warning conveyed in these words.—Duluth Herald.

CHAPTER XVII.

An after meal custom of the two ladies was that Mrs. Grace should sit in her easy chair at one side of the window in summer, and Edith at the other, while the girl read the paper aloud.

The old woman's eyes were open. She was broad awake, but not listening to a word that Edith read. The girl's voice had a pleasing, soothing effect, and she was sadly fancying how they two could manage to live on the narrow means now adjudged to her by fate.

Suddenly there was a sharper, brisker sound than usual in the street. The old woman awoke to observation. The sound approached rapidly, and suddenly stopped close at hand with the harsh, tearing noise of a wheel-tire grating along the curbstone. Mrs. Grace leaned forward and looked out of the window. A cab had drawn up at the door, and a man was alighting.

"There's the gentleman who was here yesterday with Mr. Leigh," said Mrs. Grace, drawing back from the window.

"If you please, Mrs. Grace, Mr. Hanbury has called and wishes to see you," said the landlady's daughter from the door of the room.

"Mr. Hanbury wants to see me!" said the old lady in astonishment. "Will you kindly ask him to walk up? Don't stir, darling," she said as Edith rose to go. "No doubt he brings some message from Mr. Leigh."

With a listless sigh the young girl sank back upon her chair in the window place.

"I feel," said the young man, as the door was closed behind him, "that this is a most unseasonable hour for a visit of one you saw for the first time yesterday, Mrs. Grace; but last night I made a most astounding discovery about you."

"Pray sit down," said the old lady graciously. "I am glad to see you. A visit from the distinguished Mr. Hanbury would be an honor to any house in London."

The young man bowed and sat down. In manner he was restless and excited. He glanced from one of the women to the other quickly and with flashing eyes.

Edith leaned back on her chair and looked at the visitor. The girl could in no way imagine what discovery of this impetuous, stalwart, gifted young man could interest them.

"You see, Mrs. Grace," he said, looking rapidly again from one to the other, "I have just come back from the country, where I had to go on an affair of my own. An hour or two ago I got back to the city, and, after seeing my mother and speaking to her a while, I came on here to you."

"Go on," said the old woman eagerly. She was now trembling, and caught the arms of her easy chair to steady her hands.

"In Wisconsin I had occasion to visit Castleton, and there I met a Mr. Coutch, who said he had been in communication with you respecting your family—the Graces of Gracedieu, in the neighborhood of Castleton."

"Yes, yes," said the old woman, impatiently. "That is quite right. I had a letter from Mr. Coutch this morning, saying the Graces had left the place long ago, and owned no property in the place. Have you any other—any better news?"

"Not respecting the Graces of Gracedieu, as far as your questions go."

"Oh," said the old woman, and with a sigh she sank back in the chair, her interest gone. "My granddaughter has just lost all her little fortune. I was anxious to know if there were any traces of her people."

The eyes of the man moved to the girl and rested on her.

"I am sorry to hear Miss Grace has lost her fortune," he said, softly. "Very sorry, indeed."

"It was not very much," said the old woman, becoming garrulous and taking it for granted Hanbury was an intimate friend of Leigh's and knew all the dwarf's affairs, "and the loss of it was what made my granddaughter accept the companionship to old Mrs. Leigh down at Eltham House, near Millway. Miss Grace could not endure Mr. Leigh, and left, without her luggage, a few hours after arriving there."

"Mr. Coutch, the attorney of Castleton, told me that a few weeks ago you caused inquiries to be made in his neighborhood respecting the Grace family. Now, it so happened that this morning, before the city was awake, I started for Castleton to make inquiries about the Grace family."

"What, you, Mr. Hanbury! Are you interested in the Grace family?" inquired the old woman, vivaciously.

"Intensely," he answered. "When I had the pleasure of seeing you yesterday I did not take more interest in Castleton than any other out-of-the-way town of which I knew nothing, and my only interest in your family was confined to the two ladies in this room. Last night a document was given me by my mother, and upon reading it, I conceived the most intense interest in Castleton and Gracedieu and the family which gave that place a name."

He was very elaborate, and seemed resolved upon telling his story in a way he had arranged, for his eyes were not so much concerned with Mrs. Grace and Edith as with an internal scroll from which he was reading slowly and carefully.

"I went this morning to Gracedieu to make inquiries as to a branch of the Grace family."

"And you, like me, have found out that there is no trace of the other branch," said the widow sadly. "You found out from Mr. Coutch that there were my granddaughter and myself and no clew to anyone else."

"Pardon me, I found out all I wanted."

Mrs. Grace fell back and stared at Hanbury. It was not a moment for coherent thought or reasonable words. Even John Hanbury was as much overcome as though the discovery came upon him then for the first time.

After many meaningless exclamations and wide questions by Mrs. Grace, and a few replies from Hanbury, the latter said, "I think the best think I can do is to tell you all I know, as briefly as possible."

"It was a French nobleman who fell in love with Kate Grace, the beauty of the place in those times. He made love to her, and she ran away with him, and was married to him in the town of Derby, the register, my father says, shows to this day. Subsequently she went to London and lived with him as his wife. He sent a substantial sum of money to his father-in-law, and an assurance that Kate had been legally married, but that, for family reasons, he could not acknowledge his wife just then, but would later. Subsequently he went to Russia. He had not been long in St. Petersburg when his wife, Kate Grace, died; they said of a broken heart. It seems that my father was the nobleman's intimate friend. From documents he left and just read by me I find that quite an estate in France is now awaiting the claims of the nearest heirs of dead Kate Grace's husband, and that means you, Miss Grace, if I am not mistaken. Have I your permission to continue the quest and secure you your rights, if they really amount to anything?"

The old woman held out her hand with the young girl's in it, and Hanbury stood up and bent and kissed the two hands.

"We shall be good friends," Hanbury said, smiling upon Edith.

"Yes," she said, simply.

"You must know that the man I came with yesterday told me if I accompanied him he would show me something more wonderful than miracle gold."

"Yes," she said, for he paused, and her answer by some word or note was necessary to show she was hearkening.

"And I came and saw you."

CHAPTER XVIII.

The elderly man, shabbily dressed and wearing blue spectacles, who followed Timmons when he went to keep his appointment with Oscar Leigh was Tom Stamer. He suspected that Leigh was not honest and that he might, as he had warned Timmons, even murder the latter. He had followed for the latter's protection, and had sat in the public house shadowing the place opposite, and waiting for Timmons to come out after his interview with the hunchback.

The next night earlier he returned to the same place. He saw with satisfaction that Oscar Leigh was sitting at the top window opposite, working away with a file on something held in a little vise fixed on his clockmaker's bench.

Oscar Leigh, at his bench in the top room of Forbes' bakery, overlooking the street, was filing vigorously a bar of brass held in a little vise attached to the bench. He was unconscious that any one was watching him. He was unconscious that the file was in his hand, and that the part of the bar on which he was working gradually grew flatter and flatter beneath the fretting rancor of the file. He was at work from habit, and thinking from habit.

Oscar Leigh was thinking of gold—Miracle Gold.

Stamer had resumed his blue spectacles. He was furtively watching out of the corners of his eyes behind the blue glasses the man at the window above. He, too, was thinking of a metal, but not of the regal, the imperial yellow monarch of the Plutonian realms, but of a livid, dull, deadly, poisonous metal—lead, murderous lead.

The gold-covered dust fell from the dwarf's file like a thin, down-driven spurt of auriferous vapor.

"Miracle Gold," he thought, "Miracle Gold. All gold is Miracle Gold when one tests it by that only great regeant, the world. The world, the world. In my Miracle Gold there would be found an alloy of copper and silver. Yes, a sad and poisonous alloy. Copper is blood-red, and silver is virgin white, and gold is yellow, a color between the two, and infinitely more precious than they, the most precious of all metals is gold.

"Miracle Gold! Miracle Gold does not need making at my hands. It is made by the hands of others for all who will stretch forth their hands and take it. It is ready made in the palm of every hand that touches yours in freindship. It is the light of every kindly eye. It is on the lips of love for lovers. One touch of God'e alchemy could make it even in the breast of a hunchback if it might seem sweet to one of God's angels to find it there!"

Stamer took in all that eyes could see in the gable of Forbes' bakery. Then he passed slowly on. It might almost be fancied from his tedious steps that he had hurt his back or his legs in his fall, but he did not limp or wriggle or drag his legs.

Near the public house were two poor two-story houses, let in tenements. These houses Stamer observed. They were, he saw, double-roofed, with a gutter in the middle, and from the gutter descended a water pipe into the ground.

When there was nothing more to be noted in the outside of the gables, Stamer pulled his hat over his eyes and struck out briskly across the street. As he finished his inspection he thought:

"So he'll wind up his clock to-night between 12 and half-past, will he? It will take him the longest half-hour he ever spent in all his life. There's plenty of time to get the tools ready, and for a little practice, too."

Meanwhile, Oscar Leigh was busy with a bottle of sweet oil, and a roll of muslin. He oiled the muslin, and having stretched and nailed it in position, raised the lower sash of the window about two feet from the sill. The muslin was double, and the two sheets were kept half an inch apart by two rods, so that any dust getting through the outer fold might be caught by the inner one. Having settled this screen to his satisfaction he left the room and descended once more.

"My clock," he thought, "will be enough for fame. I will not meddle with this Miracle Gold. I am committed to nothing, and anything Timmons may say will be only slander, even if he did dare to speak."

He reached the street, and wandered on aimlessly.

"Hey!" cried a man's voice in alarm.

He looked up.

The chest of a horse was within a hand's breadth of his shoulder. The horse's head was flung aloft. The horse, snorting and quivering, and bearing back upon his haunches.

Leigh sprang aside and looked around. He had almost been ridden over by a group of equestrians.

The gentleman whose horse had nearly touched him, took off his hat and apologized.

"You stopped suddenly right under the horse's head," said the gentleman. "I am extremely sorry."

Leigh raised his stick to strike the head of the horse.

The rider pulled his horse sharply away and muttered something under his breath.

"Oh," cried a voice in terror, "it's Mr. Leigu."

The dwarf's stick fell from his hand. "Mercy!" he cried in a whisper, as he took off his hat slowly. "Miss Ashton!"

Then, bareheaded and without his stick, he went up to the side of her horse, and said in a hoarse whisper, "I will have nothing to do with that 'Miracle Gold!'"

A groom who had dismounted handed him his stick, and putting on his hat, he hastened away through the crowd which had begun to gather, leaving Dora in a state of mingled alarm and pity.

"Is he mad?" asked Miss Ashton's escort, as the dwarf disappeared and the equestrians moved on.

"I'm sure I don't know. I think not. For a moment he terrified me, and now he breaks my heart!"

"Breaks your heart?"

"Oh, he ought not to be human! There surely can be no woe like his!"

CHAPTER XIX.

Dora Ashton was greatly shocked and distressed by the peril of Oscar Leigh and his subsequent behavior.

Her escort had been one of the guests at Mrs. Ashton's At Home. He left her at her home and she went up to her room. She threw herself in a large easy chair by the open window. Her room was at the back of the house, and looked out on a space of roofs and walls and tiny gardens. There was nothing in view to distract the eye. There was much within to exercise the spirit.

"It would be madness," was the result of deep and long thought, "to go any further. I like Jack well enough and admire him greatly, but I thought I was wiser than other girls in not allowing my fancy to direct my fate. I thought he and I together might achieve great things. I am now afraid it is as great, even a greater, mistake to marry for intellect than to marry for money or position. I have made up my mind now. Nothing shall change me. My decision is as much for his good as my own. Last night was not the climax of what would be. It was only the first of a long line of difficulties or quarrels that would increase as time went on. We have been enduring one another out of admiration for one another, not loving one another for our own and love's own sake. It will cost me many a pang, but it must be done. I shall make no sign. I shall make no announcement. No one has been formally told that we are engaged, and no one has any business to know. If people have guessed it, let them now guess the engagement has been broken off. I am not bound to enlighten them."

Then she rose and found materials for a letter, and wrote:

"Dear Mr. Hanbury: I have been thinking a great deal of the talk we had last night after dinner, and I have come to the conclusion that it was all for the best. We should never be able to agree. I think the least said now the better. Our engagement has not been announced to any one. Nothing need be said about its being broken off. I hope this arrangement will be carried out with as little pain to either as possible. I ask you for only one favor. Pray do not make any attempt whatever to treat this decision as anything but final and irrevocable. Yours very sincerely,

"DORA ASHTON."

ITALIAN TELLS A STORY.

Signor Liberati Relates a Joke on an American Naval Officer.

A great joke on the American navy and on Rear Admiral Luce leaked out yesterday, after twenty-four years. The story was told by Signor Liberati, the famous cornet soloist and conductor of various well-known Liberati bands, and who is now playing in Kansas City. Signor Liberati remarked that the navy has been a factor in the musical culture of America and then explained that American men-o'-war had enlisted young Italian musicians in their bands when touching at Italian ports. These youngsters were carried to America and became bandmasters and conductors.

"I ar'rife in America on a man-o'-war my own self," continued the famous musician, "and I hed ver' large con-sid-er-able experience in company of de American navy. I enlisted in Venice in 1872 on de ver' large, con-sid-er-able frigate, 'Juniato.' At Madeira I broke my own mout' with de cornet. I entairs de small boat yo must follow out de wafes of de sea. I miss de righ time and a ver' large con-sid-er-able wafe of de sea heet me. I hold up my instrumaint to keep it dry—so—and when I fell I struck de instru-maint with my mout'.

"When I tink of my own times on de frigate 'Juniato' I feel de salt meat ver' bad—rise in my own troat and shoke me. Br-r-r-r!

"De frig-ate was about sail for dis country and de of-fi-cairs fill de frig-ate 'Juniato' with a ver' large con-sid-er-able cargo of brandy and wines. Yes—to smug-gail—those of-fi-cairs were great to smug-gail! We had a hail-ish treep—de of-fi-cairs dr-u-n-k all de time—all-de-time! De sailors dr-u-n-k, too, de band dr-u-nk, ver' large con-sid-er-able jag!

"De frig-ate 'Juniato' carry four or fife hundraid men; she carry eighteen ver' large, con-sid-er-able guns. We sail for Bostone.

"De nearer de frig-ate come to dis country, de more dr-u-n-k de captain, de of-fi-cairs, de sailors, de band, get. You know him—it was Captain Luce. Ven de pilote come on board de frig-ate 'Juniato' in de fog, he say: 'It ees not Bostone; it ees New York! So we start for Bostone and de fog get thicker and thicker and de captain, de of-fi-cairs, de sailors and de band not know where they was at. We fire de guns and ring de bell and blow de whistle. De frig-ate 'Juniato' lay there and we fired and ringed and blowed for seex days and seex nights. De provis-ione went low and we had natting to eat—only drink.

"De captain sent out de boats and sound de water, so we not heet de rocks. De sailors in de boats work hard sounding de waters for seex days and seex nights. De frig-ate 'Juniato' crash against de rocks, but not ver' bad. Then de fog rose up and de captain of the frig-ate, de of-fi-cairs, de sailors and de band all said, 'O hail!' for de frig-ate 'Juniato' was one hundraid feet from de shore!

"Dere was Bostone, and we had been dere seex days and seex nights and we might have gone to market and bought fresh sigs every morning."—Kansas City Star.

After the Franco-German war it was calculated that the proportion of killed to the bullets spent in endeavoring to kill them was as 1 to 1,300.

BOYHOOD "BREAKS" OF FAMOUS MEN.

Ingersoll.

Robert G. Ingersoll as a youth was not a phenomenon of eloquence. One day his teacher directed him to deliver a declamation. Robert selected a poem beginning:

A little bird sits on the telegraph wire,
And flitters and chitters and folds its wings.

He appeared before his audience, and began boldly:

A little bird sits on the telegraph wire—

Then he forgot the rest. He tried it again:

A little bird sits on the telegraph wire—

That was all he could remember. Once more he thundered:

A little bird sits on the telegraph wire—

and fled from the stage. He laughs about it now and says:

"That was forty or fifty years ago. I guess the little bird is sitting on the wire yet."

Talmage.

T. DeWitt Talmage as a boy did not show evidence of a theological turn of mind. On one occasion he was very restless in church, and his parents had grave doubts of his paying much attention to the sermon. The preacher spoke on the words: "An angel came down from heaven and took a live coal from the altar." Reaching home the parents asked their son:

"Did you hear the sermon?"

"Yes."

"Can you repeat the text?"

"Of course."

"Let us hear you."

Young Talmage triumphantly quoted: "An Ingun came down from New Haven and pulled a live colt from the halter."

Irving.

Henry Irving once took part in a school dialogue, entitled, "The Little Philosopher," in which a lad is questioned by a benevolent old gentleman. Among the questions asked are the following:

"What do you do when it rains?"

"I get under a tree for shelter."

"And what do you do when you are hungry?"

"I sometimes eat a raw turnip."

Irving studied his lines for weeks.

The house was crowded The dialogue progressed satisfactorily until the question was asked:

"What do you do when it rains?"

When Irving proudly replied:

"I sometimes eat a raw turnip."

Depew.

Chauncey Depew has great renown as an after-dinner speaker, and is never at a loss for a good story or a witty retort. There is a great deal of preparation about Depew's jokes, but many of his bright sayings are spontaneous and the result of the inspiration of the moment.

When a boy Depew was a slow and exasperating reader. One day he was all tangled up over the phrase, "My yoke is easy and my burden is light." His teacher thundered at him:

"Read that again, sir; you're all wrong."

Chauncey dashed at the phrase with great vigor and shouted:

"My burden is easy and my joke is light."

In the laugh which followed the teacher's anger evaporated.

Roosevelt.

Theodore Roosevelt was not a fluent orator when young, and old playmates delight to relate his experience at a school exhibition with that stirring poem beginning:

At midnight in his guarded tent
The Turk lay dreaming of the hour
When Greece, her knees in suppliance bent,
Should tremble at his power.

Roosevelt got as far as

When Greece, her knees—

Then his memory failed, and he repeated:

Greece her knees—

His memory stubbornly refused to work. Once more he shouted desperately:

Greece her knees—

The old professor looked over his spectacles and encouragingly remarked: "Grease her knees once more, Theodore; perhaps she'll go then."

NEW ARTIST ON PUNCH.

Phil May the English Caricaturist Succeeds Du Maurier.

Phil May, the famous English caricaturist, is the successor of Du Maurier as the leading artist on London Punch. Mr. May is the finest black and white artist in all England. While he will not be able to take Du Maurier's place precisely, he will be the most admirable substitute that can be had. May chose a field of exploit far different from that of his distinguished predecessor. Du Maurier drew Mayfield and Belgravia. May sought the slums and Whitechapel. He has never been more successful than when depicting the joys and sorrows, pleasures and pains of the children of the streets and byways. In his pictures there is not a single line without meaning, not a line that is not necessary. Mr. May is only 32 years of age. He comes from the class that he has striven to describe with his pencil. At 12 he showed wonderful talent as an artist. He went to London and there picked up some training in his profession. He went to Australia, and by his efforts raised the Sydney Bulletin from an obscure paper to the funniest sheet in the world. Then he returned to London with a reputation and joined the staff of Punch. From that time on his life was one pronounced success. Mr. May's style is strong and vigorous, and is not cumbered with needless detail.

He Saved the Babies.

Heroism and modesty proverbially go hand in hand, but there are few more striking examples of the combination that that afforded by the captain of a wrecking tug in New York harbor. His own account of the affair was thus set down in the tug's log: "Jan. 30. Left Jersey City 7 a. m. Ice running heavy. Capt. Joe stopped leak in ferry-boat." Mr. F. Hopkinson Smith, in his "Day at Laguerre's," tells the story more fully.

The Hoboken ferry-boat was stopped, midway of its early passage, by the ice pack. At this juncture an ocean tugboat crashed into her side, cutting a V-shaped gash below the water-line. A panic ensued among passengers and crew. Just then the wrecking tug Reliance ran alongside, and Capt. Joe Smith jumped on board.

He dropped into the engine-room, met the engineer half-way up the ladder, compelled him to return, dragged the mattresses from the crew's bunks, stripped off blankets, racks of clothes, overalls, cotton waste and rags of carpet, cramming them into the great rent left by the tug's cutwater until the space of each broken plank was replaced except one. Through and over this space the water still combed, deluging the floors and swashing down between the gratings into the hold below.

"Another mattress, quick! All gone? A blanket, then—carpet—anything! Quick, for God's sake!"

It was useless. Everything, even to the oil rags, had been used. Little by little the water gained, bursting out below, then on one side, only to be recalked and only to rush in again.

Captain Joe stood a moment as if undecided; then deliberately tore down the top wall of calking he had so carefully built up, and before the engineer could protest had forced his own body into the gap, with his arm outside, level with the drifting ice.

An hour later the disabled ferry-boat was towed into the Hoboken slip with every soul on board. When they lifted Captain Joe from the wreck he was unconscious and barely alive. The water had frozen his blood and the floating ice had torn the flesh from his protruding arm from shoulder to wrist. When the color began to creep back to his cheeks, he opened his eyes and said to the doctor who was winding the bandages:

"Was any of them babies hurt?"

Remarkable Pigs.

When the pig is not only a domestic animal, but a family friend, as he appears to be in the Marquesas Islands, he develops unsuspected cleverness. "In the South Seas," one of Robert Louis Stevenson's last books, gives many instances by way of proof. "Many islanders live with their pigs as we do with our dogs," Mr. Stevenson observed; "both crowd around the hearth with equal freedom, and the island pig is a fellow of activity, enterprise and sense.

"He husks his own cocoanuts and—I am told—rolls them into the sun to burst; he is the terror of the shepherd. Mrs. Stevenson, senior, has seen a pig fleeing to the woods with a lamb in his mouth; and I saw another come rapidly—and erroneously—to the conclusion that the Casco was going down, and swim through the flush water to the rail in search of an escape.

"It was told us in childhood that pigs cannot swim; I have known one to leap overboard, swim five hundred yards to shore, and return to the house of his original owner.

"I was once, at Tautira, a pigmaster on a considerable scale. At first, in my pen, the utmost good feeling prevailed. A little sow with a bellyache came and appealed to us for help in the manner of a child; and there was one shapely black boar, whom we called Catholicus, for he was a particular present from the Catholics of the village, and who early displayed the marks of courage and friendliness.

"No other animal, whether dog or pig, was suffered to approach him at his food, and for human beings he showed a full measure of that toadying fondness, so common in the lower animals, and possibly their chief title to the name.

"One day, on visiting my piggery, I was amazed to see Catholicus draw back from my approach with cries of terror; and if I was amazed at the change, I was truly embarrassed when I learned its reason.

"One of the pigs had been that morning killed; Catholicus had seen the murder, he had discovered he was dwelling in the shambles, and from that time his confidence and his delight in life were ended.

"We still reserved him a long while, but he could not endure the sight of any two-legged creature, nor could we, under the circumstances, encounter his eye without confusion."

Little Nourishment.

The landlord of a country hotel sees a good deal of the natural "crankiness" of human nature. The proprietor of a house in a Maine village, where the summer visitor is the chief source of income, tells the following story:

People are generally queer about their eating, so I don't mind much about some of them wanting nothing for for breakfast and then a hearty meal by 11 o'clock and a lunch at three and supper at seven. Of course it's considerable upsetting, but some folks claim it's healthy. But one woman that came here was peculiar.

She said she had been sick, and that her meals wouldn't amount to anything; that she couldn't eat any hearty food worth mentioning, and only took a little nourishment.

I asked her what kind of food she wanted prepared, and she looked at me in a discouraged fashion and says she:

"Oh, not a thing. I only take a light breakfast, and then I take twenty-six raw eggs during the day and a glass of milk every half-hour."

JEWEL AND SETTING.

Much on Real Value Depends Upon Surroundings.

A few years ago the directors of an Academy of Fine Arts in one of our cities were dismayed at finding that one of the most valuable pictures in their galleries was gone. It had been taken from the frame at night, and a copy substituted. Reward was offered and search made for its return, but in vain.

Some years later an artist found the picture in the tavern of a town in Canada, where the thief had sold it. He telegraphed to the directors, two of whom at once came to him. But they could hardly be made to believe that the grimy canvas, in a broken wooden frame, hanging in the dark corner of a bar-room, was the great masterpiece.

The artist, however, insisted upon its genuineness, and it was taken back with him. He cleaned it and placed it in its proper frame, surrounded by a background of maroon drapery, every beam of light skillfully tempered so as to bring out its beauty, and then brought in the directors.

They burst into loud exclamations of delight and welcome. The artist alone could detect the great picture in its sordid surroundings, but even the careless passer-by recognized it when properly framed and hung.

The Regent and the Saucy, two of the imperial diamonds of the world, were cut and set by the best living jewelers. They lost in the process much of their weight, but they gained enormously in brilliancy and consequently in value so much does the proper presentation of a gem enhance its cost.

Very few of us own great jewels, or works of art for whose framing we are responsible. But each has some treasure, great or small, with which we may brighten and cheer our little world. How do we use it?

This man's brain is filled with knowledge and high, original ideas. But his speech is quarrelsome and his temper uncertain.

That young girl's heart overflows with kindness; she longs to be friends with all the world. But her dress is torn, her hair untidy, her belongings disorderly.

Many good Christians, inspired by noble virtues, are so grim in aspect and curt in speech that few persons respect their religion.

The world does not recognize the pure diamond thus covered with grime, and so its light is lost.

Remember that the light is God shining in your soul to help the world; and the grime which covers it is your own defect of manner, of habits, or of temper.

Cut the gem and frame the picture fitly.

QUEER DRINKING TANK.

An Italian Cruiser Provided with a Singular Drinking Apparatus.

The Italian cruiser Christoforo Columbo, recently in the port of New York, is provided with the most singular drinking apparatus in the world. In the center of her mess room is a copper or brass-covered tank like a big water cooler. Under it is a five-foot basin. The tank is quite a yard in diameter and is more than six feet in height. A hand pump beside it keeps it always full. Its extraordinary drinking features are that it has no drinking cup or faucet. Instead, near the top of the tank, six small tubes project two inches. There are no water glasses or cups at all aboard ship for the crew, and when they want water they simply have to take a tube in their mouths and secure water after the fashion of infants.

Shades of bacteria, bacilli and all other germ horrors! It is a relic of ancient days, it is explained, and the tube tanks have become very rare. There are no water cups on the mess tables, and the sailor who wants water while eating has to go to the tank and take his turn at a tube. A large crowd gives an imposing appearance to the front of the tank.

DWARFS OF WONDERLAND.

Pigmies from the Far East Now on Exhibition in Berlin.

There are now on exhibition in one of the museums of the German capital specimens of a pigmy race who were recently brought from one of the provinces of British Burmah, on the banks of the Irrawaddy River, not far from its mouth. These diminutive human beings are different from any heretofore seen in Europe. They are physically and mentally normal—perfectly formed and intelligent human beings. They are like little statues carved by a master's hand, and, since their pretty faces are always smiling at the people whom they see, it is easy to understand why they have delighted all visitors to the museum.

The girl, Fatmah, is 16 years old, 25.35 inches high and weighs 8.80 pounds. Smaun, the boy, is hardly 14 years old, about two inches shorter and weighs about half a pound less than his sister. They were presented to the Berlin Anthropological Society last month by Professor Virchow and aroused an altogether uncommon interest on the part of the scientists. It is said that Professor Virchow will soon publish a monograph about them. Accompanying the little people are their parents—Monag Song, the father, and Maschina, the mother—as well as their brother, Julai-en, who is 11 years old and of normal size. All three are of the truly Indo-Chinese type.

Treeing Wildcats.

A Los Angeles correspondent of the Chicago Tribune furnishes a lively description of a wildcat hunt, as he says the sport is followed in southern California. A company of people, men and women, with a pack of eager dogs, have chased a cat till it has taken refuge in a sycamore tree. One after another the hunters come up, on horseback, of course, while the dogs sit in a circle about the tree, making music. Now and then one of the younger dogs makes a frantic attempt to climb the tree. The cat, meantime, is sixty feet perhaps above the ground, crouching on a big limb, his eyes blazing green and yellow, his ears twitching, and his short tail moving back and forth.

"Now, ladies and gentlemen," says the huntsman, "form yourselves in a circle about the tree and give the dogs full play, and don't shoot. The hounds have worked for the cat, and they deserve it. Again, it is the most humane way of looking at it; the dogs will kill the cat sooner than a bullet."

With this little speech delivered for the benefit of the excitable tenderfoots in the hunt, the horses are arranged in a big circle about the sycamore, and a young man who wishes to beard the lion in his den crawls slowly up.

As he draws nearer, the cat looks around in desperation. The tail twitches more nervously. Glancing down at the open-mouthed dogs, then at the approaching human enemy, the poor animal is evidently considering the chances. Nearer the climber comes, until man and cat gaze into each other's eyes scarce three feet apart.

For a moment the puss hesitates; then, turning quickly, he steadies himself, and with a mighty spring is in the air. Down he goes fifty feet, bounces among the bush, a mass of springs, steel and rubber, and is away. He has landed just beyond the circle, and a horse has dashed aside to let him pass, followed by the pack in full cry. They go like a flash of light, a roaring, crashing sound. A scream, and puss is again visible, perched upon the limb of another big sycamore.

The same thing is repeated again and again, till the women repent, and cries of "Let him go!" "Poor puss!" are heard above the baying of the dogs that are growing fairly mad with unappeased ferociousness.

Again the young man faces the cat, this time fully sixty feet from the ground. Surely if ever an animal had won its liberty this one has. But the game is up. The dogs are spreading, and as out into the air the cat leaps in magnificent form they collect.

Down he comes like a gigantic flying squirrel, with legs spread far apart, the soft, cushion-like pads ready for a rebound. Like a flash he cuts the air, strikes the ground at the writer's feet, and is enveloped in a whirlwind of ferocious hounds.

The agony of the cat is over in a second, but the dogs fight, war and struggle until each has vented his rage upon the inanimate skin that is now borne aloft as a trophy. Not a few of the dogs have felt the sharp teeth and claws of the vicious cat, that tips the scales at fifty pounds.

A Rat Creates a Panic in School.

The mischievous boy pupils came very near breaking up the high school at Livermore Falls, Me., a few days since. In some way, known only to the boys, they obtained possession of a live rat, and a big one, and let it loose to "do" the schoolroom. The teacher was simply amazed, and the "big girls" nearly had fits. They gathered their skirts about them with great alacrity and sought refuge on the top of the desks. Three of the boys were immediately suspended by the teacher, and a meeting of the town committee was called, at which it was decided, the committee laboring under the idea that "boys will be boys," to let them go back on promise of good behavior.—Lewiston Journal.

Santa Claus.

Little boys and girls just now trying to stand in with Santa Claus, and modern science has added several interesting variations to plans heretotore adopted by the lads and lassies of getting the ear of the jolly old saint. This year it is the telephone. Both central offices here find life a burden, were it not such a novel pleasure to hear the little ones call up "Santa" and ask for some coveted gift. One little boy called in a list of the things he wanted, the list is too long to remember, but he wanted every item. One little girl after confiding her wants to Paul Davenport of the Bell Central, asked him if "Phil Gibson is clerking for Santa Claus" for she felt sure it was Phil's voice- that answered some of her questions. The smaller ones especially, felt certain that the mysterious voice in the "box" is the voice of Kriss Kringle and their little hearts warm towards him with the added fervor that comes with what seems to them a personal acquaintance.

Contested Election

The rumors of contests over members of the legislature, are taking shape. There is a contest now in court in Laporte county over the state senator.

Uriah Culbert, republican, was defeated for the legislature by 14 plurality by George W. Rogers, his democratic opponent, on whom the populists fused. A number of irregularities, including fraudulent voting, are charged The principal ground of complaint is the alleged illegal indorsement of Rogers' candidacy by the populists.

A Saving Of $1700.

The various school corporations of the county made their quarterly reports of school books to the county Superintendent the 7th. The sales amounted to $1759.60. The books under our state contract are about one half the prices formerly paid, so that the amount saved the people of the county for this quarter alone was at least $1700. The people should remember that the school book law was a democratic measure, bitterly opposed by the republicans in the legislature and by the republican press of the state in general.

Commissioners' Court

As already noted, the new commissioner, Mr. Gunsenhouser, took his place on the board. On motion of Mr. Hague, seconded by Mr. Gunsenhouser, J. W. Bateman was made president of the Board for the ensuing year:

The first formal business entry is as follows:

It appearing to the Board of Commissioners, that the late Treasurer of this county, David W. Fair has failed to pay over to his successor in office, a large amount of the public funds belonging to said office, the Auditor is instructed to institute an action upon the official bond of said Fair for the recovery of said funds and prosecute the same to final judgment. Said Auditor is directed to employ as counsel in said cause McClellan,& Garwood and J. E. & J. H. Rose.

J. W. Henderson, of Concord township presented a petition from the people to have Lewis Berry appointed a justice of the peace io fill a vacancy. This was done.

H. D. Webster, trustee of Stafford township, was allowed $39,49 to help repair a bridge.

LIQUOR LICENSES.

Licenses were granted Ben. Stiefel, Cal. Chamber s and Daniel Hook, of Butler; Isaac Whirledge, D. Weidner and A. P. Most, Garrett; H. F. Strouse, Corunna; E. Eldridge aed David H. Dove, of Auurn; H. E. Geddes, Ashley; R. Till and Philip Walters, Waterloo.

The first entry on the fourth day, Thursday, refers to the surveyor contest, and reads.

Comes now, John H. W. Krontz by his attorneys Baxter & Baxter, and files a motion asking the county commissioners to enter an order on their record, directing C. E. VanAuken to turn over to said county, all file notes, records, books, maps, charts, instruments, office fixtures and all other papers belonging to the office of county surveyor as per motion on file.

Pleas were made by the attorneys on both sides, being McClellan for VanAuken. The decision was reserved till Friday morning, when the motion was dismissed.

A. W. Madden, trustee of Union, reported that a bridge across a swamp in Union and Grant, between sections 17 and 20, is impassable by reason of water, and asks $50 from the county to help drain the water away. This was granted, and Board adjourned till Saturday morning.

The Fir Matter

Some new facts have come out in this unfortunate affair since our statement the other day. It now appears that among the county orders turned over by Mr. Fair, there were some belonging to Mrs. Archie Smith of Waterloo. When Mrs. Smith heard of the trouble in making a settlement, she at onced recalled the fact that she had not received the orders for which she had sent $500 to Mr. Fair to be used in purchasing orders for her, and she and her husband came over. There was no difficulty in getting them for Perry Fair at once said certain orders were hers. But some of the bondmen, in examining some of these orders saw something was wrong. One order given to a juror for $119, was such an unusual amount that it was compared with the stub in the auditor's office, and also with the treasurer's books of orders protested, and in both cases. it was found to show $19. Another order for $129 was found, which was only $29 on the anditor's stubs and the treasurer's books. From this it would appear that someone had "raised" these two orders after they had left the auditor's office and probably after having been copied into the treasurer's books. It had in both cases apparently been done, by making a figure 1 to the left of the 19 and 29, thus adding $100 to each. If this should prove a forgery, Mrs. Smith may still lose $248, the amount of the two orders, as the original orders would probably be worthless on account part being forged. It is not known who made these changes, but it adds to the complications in the case. We suppose that only the court can unravel the matter and fix the blame where it belongs.

Big 4 Ry

It will be remembered that during the campaign, M. E. Ingalls president of the "Big 4 Ry," took an active part, and made his men believe that McKinley's election meant plenty of work and good wages. Now the men are seeking an increase of pay, but have been advised to wait.

"The matter is in abeyance," said Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor. "The business of the road is so dull, there is such a scarcity of work and so many men out of employment that it was deemed expedient to wait a while. The matter has not been given up by any means. The men will wait until a more prompitious time."

Comment unnecessary.

Train Wrecked

The forenoon south bound Lake Shore train had a wreck this forenoon at Ft. Wayne. Just as they approached the company's yard there, a man who had been unloading a car of coal, ran the car onto a sidetrack in the yards and left the switch open. The train came rushing down, and ran into the open switch and struck the coal car and some other cars standing ahead of it on the same track. These cars were pushed some distance and finally one or two thrown from the track. The front end of the engine was considerably broken up, but no other cars hurt in the rest of the train. No passengers were seriously injured, though Sheriff Stroh had a hard blow on the breast but not serious. J. H. Gugerli was standing up putting on his overcoat, and so was at the mercy of the shock. He was thrown forward violently and considerably bruised up, but not seriously hurt. The conductor, Mr. Patterson, was thrown through the window at the front, or at least against it in such a way as to break it. No other passengers were hurt to amount to anything though all were given a rough shaking up, and a little scare. The accident did not prevent conductor Patterson from taking his train back at noon. Among the Auburn people on the train at the time of the accident were, Mrs. Judge McClellan, Mrs. Ed. Wise and daughter from east of town, J. H. Gugerli, J. C. Lochner, W. M. Leedy, Sheriff Stroh, and Milo Thomas, of Corunna.

Mrs. Boullion, 222 Crane St. Writes:

I tried almost everything, but nothing gave her any relief until I got Dr. Hand's Colic Cure. I have used two bottles and would not do without it. It surely is the best colic medicine ever made." Here to Settle

Was One of the Lake Shore Officials Yesterday.

J. H. Gugerli was called on yesterday by one of the officials of the Lake Shore railroad who desired to settle with him for his injuries received in the wreck at Fort Wayne Monday. Mr. Gugerli can not use his right hand and asks the company $50 damage, and a pass over the road to Fort Wayne good for at least six trips as he would have to have his tailoring done in that city, until he could use his hand. He signed papers to the effect that he would settle for the above amount and the gentlemen informed him that he would hear from the general manager later in regard to the matter.

Sheriff Stroh was also called upon and interviewed in regard to any injuries he sustained. Sheriff Stroh has been a railroader for years and informed the gentlemen that he would not accept any damage whatever.

WOMEN WHO SMOKE.

They Are Very Numerous in Russia and Not Rare in England.

Not long ago it was considered a risky and frisky thing for a woman to smoke a cigarette in the seclusion of the family circle, but today well-brought-up married ladies, without the least approach to fastness in behavior, smoke their three or four cigarettes a day, with the approval of their husbands and in the presence of their servants, says the Queen. The ladies in Russian society, one and all, smoke cigarettes as a matter of course, in private and in public. At an afternoon call in St. Petersburg, at 3 o'clock in the day, a Russian lady offers a cigarette case and a match box in the most natural manner to her visitors, and without any demur cigarettes are accepted and smoked. In the principal Russian hotels the ladies smoke their cigarettes after dinner in the presence of the assembled company, even to a burning end on the point of a penknife. In London such a custom would not be allowed, and a fair smoker would be at once requested not to smoke. American ladies appear, from all that is said, to be going side by side with their English sisters—some smoking con amore, others for the fun of the thing. Still it is apparent to all society that smoking among ladies is immensely on the increase. Husbands, men friends and even brothers say nothing against the practice and, oftener than not, encourage it, unless extravagant indulgence is the result; then they put a limit to the number of cigarettes to be smoked by the wife during the day, if she has not sufficient strength of mind to do so for herself; and, indeed, most lady smokers make a point of limiting themselves to three cigarettes a day on an average. Ladies of these days are nurtured in an atmosphere of tobacco smoke; how can it be otherwise than that they should acquire a taste for it? In a milder form, it is true, than that of the pipe or cigar, which their male relatives so keenly enjoy, but in that of the dainty cigarette: The days have gone by when the smell of tobacco smoke made a woman faint. Among a few married ladies an antipathy to it does still exist, and these ladies, it must be confessed, make their husbands rather uncomfortable, with their restrictions against smoking here or smoking there, and render them a little envious of the freedom enjoyed by other men in this respect, whose wives are not so sensitive to this pungent scent. It may be the encouragement men give to the ladies of their families and to their charming friends to smoke by offering an occasional cigarette has a suspicion of selfishness about it in thus subtly cultivating a liking for what they might otherwise considerate obnoxious. So easily flattered are women—even the most strong-minded among them—that not seldom they profess an inclination for smoking when they do not actually care for it rather than appear churlish or prim in the eyes of the sterner sex. Smoking cigarettes after dinner has become so general that even in the most orthodox and highly conventional families cigarettes are smoked at dessert in the presence of the ladies, who not infrequently smoke also. This is more particularly the case in country houses, but in town the fashion is followed to a great degree in smart society.

THE BOOM!!

THE FOSTER FURNITURE CO., of FT. WAYNE PREPARES FOR IT

By Adding to their immense Salesrooms the Entire Third Story of the south half of the Foster Block.

This gives them 7,500 feet of additional floor space, which will be used almost exclusively for a wonderful display of Fine Parlor Goods

They are bringing together the most extraordinary concentration of Furniture Novelties for the Holidays ever seen in Fort Wayne.

Especially will this be true of Parlor Pieces., either single or in sets of two, three, four or five pieces.

You cannot go to the city of Chicago or anywhere else and find such a line of Fine Parlor Goods as this Firm is now showing.

Ten years of as prosperous times as this country has ever seen ought to lie before the American people.

The past four years has simply been a struggle for the "survival of the fittest." We have not only retained our trade, but have added to our sales more than 60 per cent in 1896 as compared with 1894.

In the amount of space used, the size and elegance of our stock and in the extent of our sales, our Fort Wayne store excels any furniture house in the entire state.

Foster Furniture Company.

Notice of Final Settlement of Estate.

Notice is hereby given to all persons interested in the estate of Daniel Gonser, deceased, to appear in the DeKalb Circuit Court held at Auburn, Indiana, on the 1st day of January, 1897, and show cause if any, why my final settlement account with the estate of said decedent should not be approved; and said heirs and all others interested, are notified to then and there make proof of heirship or claim and receive their distributive shares.

Witness my name this 14th day of December, 1896.

Another Smart Woman.

My husband is poor but proud and he does not want me to work, as I have nothing to do I get restless, and after reading in your paper Mrs. Russell's experience selling self-heating flatirons I concluded I would try it. I wrote to J. F. Casey & Co., St Louis Mo., and they treated me so nicely that I felt very much encouraged. As soon as I got my sample iron I started out, and sold 8 irons the first day clearing $12. I have not sold less than 8 any day since, and one day I sold 17. I now have $226 clear money, and my husband does not know I have been working at all, but I am afraid he will be mad when I tell him. Have I done right or should I quit work and leave him to struggle alone.

AN ANXIOUS WIFE.

You are doing just right, your husband should be proud of you, go ahead and show the world what an energetic woman can do. That self-heating iron must be a wonderful seller, as we hear of so many that are succeeding selling it. 2

Went to Jail to Please His Wife.

Gustave Erickson of Sioux City, Ia., went to the penitentiary to please his wife. He was alleged to have married in Omaha several years ago, to have deserted his wife after a time, and going to Sioux City to have remarried without having previously secured a divorce from No. 1. He entered a plea of guilty to the charge of bigamy, and was sentenced to nine months' imprisonment. "I was really never married to more than one woman," he remarked as he followed the sheriff from the court room, "but my wife was determined to send me to prison, and I'd do anything to please her."

Children Should Sleep in Dark Rooms.

Children should be accustomed as soon as possible to sleep in a dark room. Unless they have learned to be afraid of it the darkness is soothing to the nerves and the rest is more profound and refreshing than when there is the unconscious stimulation of light. It is particularly desirable for children of a nervous temperament that light should be excluded, but it is most often the nervous, sensitive child whose imagination has been filled with fears of the shapes the dark may hide.—Ladies' Home Journal.

—The friends of Aaron Jones, of South Bend, are going to ask his appointment as secretary of Agriculture, at the hands of Major McKenley. Although Aaron has had a lightning rod up for various minor offices, to these many years, we know of no reason why he would not make a fair secretary of that department.

—Thomas J. Chandler died at his home two and one-half miles west of Waterloo, at ten o'clock Thursday morning of heart failure. He was a soldier in the late war, and was well known in this county. He lost his eyesight in defense of his country.

The wife of Mr. D. Robison, a prominent lumberman of Hartwick, N. Y., was sick with rheumatism for five months. In speaking of it Mr. Robinson says: "Chamberlain's Pain Balm is the only thing that gave her any rest from pain. For the relief of pain it cannot be beat." Many very bad cases of rheumatism have been cured by it. For sale at 50 cents per bottle by Davenport the Druggist. 52

In 1892 Mr. A. L. Goldwater, who own s three retail drug stores in New York City, having learned of the great value of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for colds, croup and whooping cough, ordered a supply for his customers. It met with so much favor that he soon found it necessary to order more, and during the winter sold over two gross of the remedy. He says it gives the best satisfaction of any cough cure he has ever handled. For sale at 25 and 50 cts. per bottle by Davenport the Druggist. 52

When most needed it is not unusual for the family physician to be away from home Such was the experience of Mr J. Y. Schenck, editor of the Caddo, Ind. Ter., Banner, when his little girl, two years of age was threatened with a severe attack of croup. He says: "My wife insisted that I go for the doctor, but as our family physician was out of town I purchased a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, which relieved her immediately. I will not be without it in the future." 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by, Davenport, the druggist. 52

Notice of Stockholders' Meeting.

AUBURN IND., Dec. 12, 1896.

Notice is hereby given that a meeting of the stockholders of the First National Bank of Auburn, Indiana, will be held on at the banking office of said bank in Auburn, Indiana between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m. and 4 o'clock p. m. of said day for the purpose of electing seven (7) directors to serve for the ensuing year, and to transact such other business as may regularly come before the meeting.

How A Woman Paid Her Debts.

A lady in Lexington says: "I am out of debt; and thanks to the Dishwasher business. In the past six weeks I have made $530.00. Every housekeeper wants a Dishwasher, and any intelligent person can sell them with big profit to himself. The Dishwasher is lovely, you can wash and dry the family dishes in two minutes, and without wetting your hands. You can get particulars by addressing, The Mound City Dishwasher Co., St. Louis, Mo. There is big money in the business for an agent. I expect to clear $4,000 the coming year I need the money, why not make it. MISS C. E. 5

—See the new holiday ads.

—cShaab & Bros new ad is a peach. If you like peaches read it.

—Misses Nancy, Liza and Ella Fretz, were at Fort Wayne yesterday.

—Mrs. Arilla Moses, of Garrett, is in the city, the guest of friends.

—Mr. and Mrs. M. A. High of Jackson were in town yesterday evening.

—Lin Calkins went up to Pleasant Lake last evening to overhaul the engine in the Goodwin sawmill.

—We suppose it is not generally known that the man who pays for his paper in advance is hardly ever sick, never has corns or the tooth ache, his potatoes never rot, weevil never eats his wheat, the frost never kills his corn or beans, his babies never cry at night and wife never scolds.

—A report comes to us that a woman from Auburn, and a man or two went up to a log house about two miles east of Waterloo, where they met other parties, and all had a big time on hard cider. There were fights and other entertainments, part of the crowd then skipped to Michigan and we suppose the others returned here. It is a disgraceful affair, and may reach the ears of the next grand jury. We have not learned the names of the parties.

—The difference between Pills and Simmons Liver Regulator, is just this: Pills don't go down very easy with most people, and you feel them afterwards. While Simmons Liver Regulator in liquid or powder is very pleasant to take, and the only feeling that you have afterwards is the great relief that it gives from Constipation, Billiousness, Sick Headache and Dyspepsia. It is a mild laxative and a tonic.

—The holidays—every one who has anything to sell should use the news papers from now until Christmas. The custom of making presents, so well nigh universal, keep folks scanning to buy. "What shall I give?" Perplexes everyone, and a large list of articles published in the paper will bring profitable returns. Human nature is much the same everywhere, and already we find people pricing holiday goods and having selections set aside. It's the same with holiday goods as with anything else. "The early bird catches the worm."

Monday's Daily.

—Francis Kosht has taken a position with Ed Weeks in his grocery.

—Charlie Speer, of Waterloo, was in town to-day on a business matter.

—Miss Stella Leas, of Waterloo was in the city Saturday the guest of her cousin Mrs Carl Schomberg.

—Miss Cora Piggott, of Corunna, was in the city over Sunday the guest of her friend Mrs. Willis Jenners.

—Fifty-four years ago yesterday, Dec. 13, 1842, S. W. Ralston came to Auburn. It was also his birthday he being then 35.

—J. W. Smith, son of Henry S. Smith east of town, and John Oiler of Wilmington were among our callers today.

—Straight Loans on Business property in Auburn, long time, $1000 up, at 6 per cent by Walter C. Hartman, Real Estate Dealer.

—W. H. Ernest, of Bluffton, an expert accountant, is here to examine the treasurer's books, by order of the commissioners.

—A. D. Moore, one of the bondmen in the Fair case, was in town to-day. He is offering for sale on time, a fine lot of stock. See his notice.

—A letter from Miss Sharpe at Westminster Seminary, Ft. Wayne says the three Auburn girls at the school are doing well and are happy.

—P. L. Gibson has probably joined the Angola Ladies Drum Corps. At least he pays weekly visits to that city, usually going up Saturday evening and returning on Monday.

—Dr. Buchtel was called to Hicksville last evening for a consultation, on the case Mr. Kerr. He returned today. We did not learn the nature of the trouble.

—There is nothing like enterprise in running a newspaper. When the Lake Shore train was wrecked at Ft. Wayne this forenoon, the COURIER had its reporter right on the train in the thickest of it.

—Mrs. W. R. Vann, of Auburn is the most recent of the DeKalb folks to be in luck. In the recent guessing contest over the "Marden Mystery" a story published in the Chicago Record, she gets a prize of $5, being among the 100 $5 prize winners.

There is Nothing as Good

There is nothing just as good as Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, so demand it and do not permit the dealer to sell you some substitute. He will not claim there is anything better, but in order to make more profit, he may claim something else to be just as good. You want Dr. King's New Discovery because you know it to be safe and reliable, and guaranteed to do good or money refunded. For Coughs, Colds, Consumption and for all affections of Throat, Chest and Lungs, there is nothing so good as is Dr. King's New Discovery. Trial bottle free at Robbins & McCord's drugstore. Regular size 50 cents and $1.00.

—Walter Hartman was thrown from his bicycle last evening and considerably hurt. He was thrown in such a way that his left hand was badly pained, and pained so he was up the entire night. It is some easier today.

—M. B. Masters after getting one of the nicest wells in Gas Addition, has just put in a good cistern. He will soon have all the conveniences possibe, and his property is improving in value, being in a good location as well as nicely cared for.

—S. S. Potter's father died at his home at Ari yesterday afternoon. He had been a sufferer for several weeks, but passed peacefully away, telling those near him that it seemed as if he was in church. He wanted to get out of his chair and get down on his knees and pray. He passed away leaving evidence that his spirit had gone to Him who gave it. The funeral services will be held to-morrow. Our townsman, Mr. Potter has the heart felt sympathy of the COURIER in this sad bereavment.

Curfew Law.

MANY CITIES HAVE ADOPTED IT AND AUBURN SHOULD DO LIKEWISE.

At Columbia City and many other neighboring cities, the W. C. T. U. ladies have succeeded in having the Curfew Law passed. There is no city which needs such a law more than Auburn and we believe the ladies of the W. C. T. U. could do a wise thing by having the Curfew ordinance presented to our city council for consideration. The chief aim in passing such an ordinance is to keep the children off the streets after eight o'clock at night.

The curfew ordinance makes it an offense for any child under 16 years of age to be upon the street between the hours of 8 o'clock p. m. and 4 o'clock a. m., unaccompanied by parents or guardian, and the penalty is a fine of not less than $1.00 nor over $25.00. If on an errand or returning or going to work the ordinance does not apply. Nothing need be said as to whether any signal will be given when the hour of eight arrives, but it is presumed that the kids will "skedaddle" for home when the clock strikes eight.

A Report Denied.

General Manager W. M. Greene of the Baltimore & Ohio says, that there is no truth in the report that the B. & O. is back of the Benton Harbor and Southeastern, now under construction, and the Cincinnati, Union City and Huntington Railroads, which is being located in Indiana.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

PURELY VEGETABLE.

The cheapest, purest and best family medicine in the world! An effectual specific for all diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Spleen. Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common, as a bad breath; and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your appetite, complexion and general health.

CONSTIPATION

should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact, nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache, for the relief of which take Simmons Liver Regulator.

Fight for Cuba.

A dispatch from Lagrange, Ind., of yesterday, says:—Information received here is that a company of thirty young men is being secretly organized in St. Joseph county, Mich., and LaGrange county, Ind., to join the insurgent forces in Cuba. The terms of enlistment call for service in Cuba until independence is established.

A letter received here says that Miss Coleman has reached Key West, and that she is confident of getting passage to Cuba, where she will join the insurgents as a nurse.

Badly Hurt.

A little son of Dode Lanning at Mooresville, was badly hurt yesterday in a machine used in chopping up corn fodder. In some way we did not learn he got his right hand in the cogs and though no bones were broken the skin was badly torn off and several cogs mashed into the hand seeming to go nearly through. The lad, though but seven years old was plucky and made no fuss when Dr. Hines was dressing the mashed hand. But he earnestly insisted that his finger should not be taken off, for he 'wanted to save that' and if it was on the other hand, he would not care so much.

A Good Record.

Fast freight train Number 94, which makes the run from Chicago to New York in 60 hours over the B. & O., has been on time on an average of 9 out of 10 days the last three weeks. The success of these fast freights has encouraged the management to such an extend that other trains are contemplated.

BARON A. BARON, - - PUBLISHER.

The new Governor of West Virginia is an editor. We presume his first work will be to surround himself with nonpareil minions.

In Whitneyville, Me., is a hen that catches and kills mice as readily as a cat does. She stands near the grain barrels in the barns and with one downward peck strikes the rodents to such good purpose that she is soon able to finish them.

Water hyacinths have at last been found good for something, according to a property-owner up the river from Jacksonville, Fla., who says that after putting some of them on a theretofore sterile field and plowing them under he was able to grow good crops on the land.

Persons who believe, or profess to believe, that there are many people in the church who would be out of it unless they were hypocrites, will take satisfaction in the intelligence that a Cincinnati Baptist minister has dropped 119 members from the rolls of his church because they had become "too worldly."

From the pollution of the water supply through the excrementa of a single typhoid fever patient, Plymouth, Pa., in 1885, with 8,000 population, had 1,104 typhoid fever cases and 114 deaths—involving a loss on care of the sick and for wages lost of $97,000, together with $18,000 lost as the annual earnings of those who died.

Queen Amalie of Portugal, who took up the study of medicine in order to be able to diet her portly husband down to presentable proportions, has taken up the X ray, and is putting it to a novel use. She has been taking pictures of the bodies of the various court ladies and giving them lectures on the deformities corsets produce, illustrating with the pictures, which show the bones in their crushed state.

When one reads that a device has been patented in England for supplying watches with incandescent light without increasing the size of the watch-case, wonder grows from more to more—first, wonder how so big a device can be packed in such small quarters, and then wonder how long the watch will remain unmagnetized and true to the time with a potent little battery in its vitals constantly trying to mesmerize its movements.

A few years ago Prince Nicholas of Montenegro, the father of the Princess of Naples, found it necessary to borrow 40,000 florins from the Lloyd Bank in Cattaro. A few days before the debt became due the Prince saw a peasant driving a pig pass by his palace. He rushed out and asked the countryman where he was going. "To Cattaro, Prince," replied the Montenegrin. "All right," said the Prince, "you can do me a service if you will leave this at the Lloyd office," and he gave him a package of bank notes, which the peasant carried faithfully to the cashier of the bank.

The Chicago Times-Herald prints the following dispatch from Columbia, Mo.: "A tramp appeared at the house of J. H. Barton, three miles south of here, this morning, and asked in Greek for cold victuals. He stated that he was a graduate of Princeton. Mr. Barton, himself a Greek scholar, was just about to start for Columbia, and his horse was hitched in front of the house. Jestingly, he offered the tramp the horse if he could recite the Greek alphabet without a mistake. The tramp inquired if the offer included the saddle and bridle. Mr. Baron said it did. The tramp rattled off the alphabet without error, and, turning the horse about, disappeared in a cloud of dust."

The experience of the Charleston, S. C., knitting mill takes out of the domain of argument the long mooted question in the South as to the possible efficiency of colored employes in the cotton mills. As may be conjectured, the experiment with colored operatives was not made voluntarily. White girls were at first employed, but, as they were paid "by the piece," they were able to earn little while learning the business, and finally refused to remain longer at the work. Then the colored girls were called in, were paid the same rate offered to the white girls, and, according to a statement by the mill-owners, are giving perfect satisfaction. This may prove to be a matter of considerable consequence to certain industries in the South.

The peculiar shade of yellow that prevailed in the famous jacket of Li Hung Chang has just become a fad in this country when the distressing news comes from China that the aged diplomat has again been shorn of his beauteous rainment. It is not stated explicitly that the jacket which the diplomat loses is his yellow one, but that appears to be the fact. Li in a moment of Oriental inadventure wandered into the imperial park and hunting grounds, an offense that would have cost a less eminent man all his decorations. It is to be hoped that later reports may indicate that the yellow garment is still flowing about the form of Chang and that some one of his other multi-colored adornments has been sacrificed to this ill-starred invasion of the Emperor's park. It would be highly embarrassing for the social world to continue its devotion to the Li yellow if Li himself should be compelled to wander about in disgrace and without a trace of the distinguished color.

Atlanta Constitution: Under the direction of the Baltimore school authorities a rigid investigation of the eyesight of the pupils was made some time ago. It was found that out of a total of 53,000 pupils whose eyes were examined fully 9,000 were disqualified from attending school. In addition to this startling disclosure it was also found that several thousand others were in such a bad condition that prompt medical attention was advised. The precedent established by the Baltimore school authorities in causing the eyesight of pupils to be investigated should appeal to the good sense of educational boards all over the country. In Atlanta there are nearly 15,000 children enrolled in the public schools. Is it fair to assume that every pupil is blessed with good eyesight and that not a single one of them is in need of medical attention? Such an assumption would be ridiculous in view of the recent disclosures in Baltimore. The subject is one which the Board of Education should gravely consider, as it involves not only the efficiency of our public school system, but the physical condition of numberless pupils attending the schools of this city.

The retirement of Charles W. Couldock, which has been announced and denied, cannot, in the nature of things be long delayed. When he first began to make a name on the boards many of the giants of more than two generations ago were still in the enjoyment of their fame. Forrest, Macready, the elder Booth and others still filled the public eye, and there were scarcely any premonitions as yet of the radical change which stage fashions have undergone since that day. He began his career as a conspicuous stage figure in the school of dramatic representation destined so soon to pass away, though here and there some artist still struggles to achieve fame along its lines. His earlier starring was in the old classic drama, beginning before that old creation of Kotzebue, "The Stranger," a play which was the parent of half a dozen more or less palpable imitations, had yet begun to lose favor. It may be that he would have achieved higher fame if that type of dramatic writing had remained in vogue. But though it is impossible to be at all certain about this, it is at least certain that whatsoever he undertook in that way he did well. He did not, perhaps, reach the plane of greatness, but he was always an artist of intelligence and force, if not of the highest degree of polish. Perhaps the most remarkable fact about him as an artist was that the change in dramatic fashion did not leave him with his occupation gone. He did not drop out of the line of march nor remain in it vainly trying to carry an old and obsolete banner in an entirely perfunctory way. He rose above that. He kept substantially abreast with the developing progress of his art. From "The Stranger" and "The Willow Copse" he passed to "Hazel Kirke" and to yet later forms of the drama, and though he may have halted short of greatness in them too he at least achieved a highly creditable degree of eminence in the newer fashions as he had done in the old. The average man is outgrown by his time if he lives to be an old man. Mr. Couldock was not so left behind. Until he passed 80 he was always able to command a degree of favor which the vast majority of his profession never attain. In that respect at least he has been a remarkable man. For seventy years nearly he has kept abreast with a constantly shifting profession.

A curious light is thrown on the standards of living in this country half a century ago by the records in the case of Burr versus Burr. The couple were married in 1800, and forty years later the wife decided that she could no longer stand her husband's miserly habits, and brought suit for separate maintenance. It was shown that the wife had brought as dowry seven thousand dollars, which compounding annually would have amounted to sixty thousand or seventy thousand dollars, and that the husband was worth one million dollars—a great fortune for those days. The vice-chancellor granted the suit and allowed the wife ten thousand dollars a year for the rest of her days. But the husband demurred, and, though the judgment was finally confirmed, there were dissenting opinions. Judge Lott said, in his dissenting opinion: "I fully concur with the chancellor that if ever a case called for an extraordinary allowance this is one." But ten thousand dollars a year overwhelmed him; and, in discussing it, he said further: "If a commission in the nature of lunacy against Burr had issued, and the fact shown that he was spending ten thousand dollars a year, I believe it would have been considered sufficient proof of his incompetency, and of the waste and destruction of his property, to have justified the appointment of a committee to take charge of the property." And this man Burr was worth one million dollars, with a probable income of from thirty thousand to sixty thousand dollars. Judge Bockes concurred fully as to the separation, but when he came to the amount for maintenance and support, he soared and roared: "Looking upon this woman as a respectable and reasonable one, there is no condition or state of the human mind, short of insanity, which can admit of the belief that she will or can desire to spend the sum of ten thousand dollars a year. * * * She will certainly not now require such an establishment as would be thought suitable for a queen dowager. At her age it would be unsuitable, even ludicrous, to lavish the revenues of a principality in the adornment of her person, and she will not require to be fed, like the profligate Egyptian courtesan, with pearls dissolved in acid. The allowance of ten thousand dollars a year is manifestly extravagant and excessive."

Excited His Curiosity.

"It beats me," he said, as he laid down his newspaper, thoughtfully. "I dunno's I ever thought of it afore, but now thet it does come ter my mind, it certainly beats me."

"Whut air ye talkin' about?" asked his wife, anxiously.

"Literatoor," he answered. "Course we've seen it showed up in the newspapers time an' ag'in how all an editor does is ter set down weth a pot o' paste an' a pair o' scissors an' cut out things ter put inter 'is paper."

"Certainly. I don't see nothin' so beatin' about that."

"But this is the question. Some feller hez ter git them pieces up in the fust place. It never struck me afore; but I'm blest ef I wouldn't like ter know who the feller is thet starts in an' gets up them there things fur the editors ter cut out."—Detroit Free Press.

POLITICS OF THE DAY

Let Republicans Consider.

When Congress is naked to enter on reckless legislative methods, simply for the purpose of annoying the Democratic party and showing the alleged superiority of the Republicans, let them consider that the numerical strength of both parties at the last election was so evenly balanced in the entire nation that if one man out of every fifty had changed his opinion the big popular majority over which the Ohio major's supporters crow so much would have been wiped out of existence.

In addition, let Congressmen remember that the abuse heaped at the Democratic party in its platform during the late campaign, and even to-day, is unadulterated misapprehension of a most reckless character. The mere fact that the declarations put forth by the Chicago convention received the indorsement of nearly one-half the voters, in the face of an exercise of the corporate wealth of the country on the other side such as was never seen before, ought to convince them that the vituperation was unjustifiable and that it will be advisable to treat these declarations with a great deal of serious consideration.

Let them take the planks of the last Democratic platform one after another and let them try to study them as a guide and warning, for they will find nothing there that needs to be recalled and apologized for by those who framed them. There may have been mistakes of policy, but the principles are all right when rightly and reasonably interpreted.

There is a declaration against returning to the McKinley tariff which was voted down so emphatically in two successive elections, and there is also a declaration that the best way of protecting American labor is to prevent the importation of foreign pauper labor to compete with it. It will be an evil day for the Republicans on which they ignore the truth of these two propositions.

Then the Democracy demands economy in Government expenditures. It is against the extravagance that tries to conceal itself under the cloak of patriotism—using the noblest sentiments of the nation to hide the rapacity of monopolists and contractors. Its declaration against "government by injunction" is very much akin to the foregoing. It has been denounced as being anarchistic, but it is in truth nothing more than a protest against the public authorities acting as the catspaws of the big corporations.

These are great questions and entirely worthy of the most serious, most respectful treatment. If those who believe them to be the most important now at issue are treated contemptuously and reviled, those who are guilty thereof will surely meet their proper punishment.

Cutting Off Their Own Noses.

It now seems that, since the goldbugs of Wall street have succeeded in seating their candidate in the presidential chair, they will endeavor to punish those States which rolled up handsome majorities for Mr. Bryan in the recent election.

An idea of the sentiment existing may be imagined from the following article which appeared a few days ago in the Wall Street Daily News:

It is no exaggeration to say that the States which in the last election supported Bryan, free silver, and repudiation of honest obligations, will have a hard time of it in floating new securities or negotiating loans in New York or for that matter in any part of the East. The Chicago platform and the people who supported it have given capital a shock from which it will take a long time to recover. Repudiation, as advocated by the States giving their full vote and support to Bryan, is sufficient to deter capital from in any way becoming financially interested in them, and henceforth they had better give New York the "go by" when money is wanted. We know of no concerted movement to boycott the securities of the Bryan States, but from conversation with leading bankers and brokers we do know that a bitter feeling of antagonism prevails, and the disposition is general to have nothing to do with them.

This may seem like a terrorizing threat in the eyes of Wall street, but a careful study of the census of 1890 showing the estimated wealth of the various States will convince anyone that the dog will wag the tail, and not the tail the dog, as the financial interests of Wall street think.

Even the threat of such a movement would encourage the combination of all the capital west of the Alleghenies in building up all sorts of manufacturing industries now patronized in the East, and, instead of the West being boycotted by the East, the East would be boycotted by the West.

It would simply prove to be a case of cutting off their own noses to spite themselves. They fail to recognize the fact that there is a vast population growing up in the far West, and that the deciding power of the electoral college no longer remains in the Middle States.

A fair example of the outcome is to be found in the growth of the paper industry in the West. A few years ago the East sold its news and book paper as far West as the Pacific coast; now it is hard to sell it in Chicago.

In a few words, Wall street may rule Wall street, but Wall street cannot and shall not dictate to the 70,000,000 people of this grand land of freedom. They may squeeze the American eagle (the gold dollar) until the last dollar has left the treasury, but they cannot fool all the American people all the time.

Some Baneful Effects.

It has been demonstrated that the agricultural population of the United States, hours of work considered, receive an income, acording to numbers engaged, that is less than that provided for paupers or paid for convicts. This statement seems incredible at first blush, but when we are reminded of the fact that all the members of a farmer's family work long hours, and that they earn a bare living under present conditions, it becomes apparent that the earning capacity of the average producer is less than 50 cents a day.

And his lot is becoming more and more onerous every day. So true is this that the land which he formerly owned is slipping away from him, just as it slipped away from the peasant proprietors in England, and the curse of landlordism is already firmly fixed among us. Its blight is upon the best blood of the rural districts.

In 1880 only 25.62 per cent. of the farms in this country were cultivated by tenants. Ten years later the number had risen to 34.13 per cent., and the end of the century will see more than half the tillers of the soil non-owners. Every alternate producer will be the creature of some one else's will.

But it is not only the rural homes that falling prices and an appreciating dollar threatens. Those who joined building and loan associations ten years ago know something of the increased and increasing difficulty of making their weekly and monthly payments. Do they realize that while their assessments are the same on their face they have, as a matter of fact, increased greatly in value? Why? Because of the unstable money in which they pay, the exchange value of which is much greater than formerly. A very exhaustive work on this subject—"The Money Question"—says: "A measure of general prices the stability of which can not be calculated upon in advance by the citizens of a State is a relic of barbarism—it is unfit for a people who plan for years in advance their expenses and their savings."

This is unquestionably true. An unstable money makes thrift unprofitable and any effort to discount the necessities of a rainy day uncertain, if not useless. It is a good thing for the shylock but a bad thing for everybody else.

An Extra Session.

The New York Mail and Express, which was nearer the Harrison administration than any other American paper, being, in fact, a semi-official organ, claims to speak by the card when it says that there will be an extra session of Congress. Major McKinley, it declares, has no hope that the short session which convenes a week from next Monday will enact legislation looking to an increase of Federal revenues. He will, therefore, not later than April 1, 1897, issue his proclamation for an extraordinary convocation of members elected to the Fifty-fifth National Congress.

We fail to see what legislation will then be possible that is not possible between now and March 4. Or perhaps we should say we fail to see that legislation impossible during the life of the Fifty-fourth will not be impossible during the life of the Fifty-fifth Congress. The newly elected body was not chosen to restore the McKinley prohibitory tariff rates. Nearly all the Republican orators were careful to announce repeatedly that there would be no tariff tinkering under the major's administration, should he be elected. Therefore, needed revenue must, if good faith with the people is kept, be raised outside the custom house. As we have no income tax, an increase of the internal revenue receipts will be absolutely essential. The proposition to double the rate now placed on beer meets with much favor, and would insure a revenue, according to conservative estimates, of $35,000,000, which would perhaps be sufficient under an economical administration.

This tax would not be felt by consumers, as it would amount to an infinitesimal sum per glass, but it would be paid by the brewers, practically all of whom are rich beyond the dream of avarice, and most of whom are directly or indirectly connected with a trust.

Such a measure could be passed this winter, and it seems to be about the only practicable method of meeting the exigency of the hour. The Dingley comedy of errors has already been laughed off the stage. It will not, cannot, and as a matter of fact it should not, become a law. Let needed legislation be given the country immediately, and then let the country be given a needed rest.—Chicago Dispatch.

Gives His Views.

"The greatest ever submitted to the American people" is the way in which W. J. Bryan describes the issue on which the election turned, in his article in the December number of the North American Review, in which he discusses the result of the election as affecting the status of the silver question. The declaration of the Chicago convention in favor of the free coinage of silver forced upon the people of this country a study of the money question in general, and within the last four months more people have been simultaneously engaged in its consideration than ever before in the history of the world. The result of this study, Mr. Bryan declares, to be "temporary defeat, but permanent gain for the cause of bimetallism." "It is a significant fact," says Mr. Bryan, "that the silver sentiment was strongest where the question had been longest considered—viz., in the South and West. The advocates of free coinage are convinced that they are laboring in behalf of a large majority of the people, not only here, but throughout the world, and they propose to continue their contest, confident that four more years of experience will convince many who have thus far resisted arguments. Mr. Bryan counsels the successful party to remember that thousands of Republicans have been held to their party this year by the pledge that it will try to secure international bimetallism. In reference to the gold standard Democrats Mr. Bryan feels assured that they cannot do as much in 1900 as they have done this year.

"Beauty is but skin deep." That is a skin-deep saying. Beauty is heart deep. It is out of the heart we desire it. It is out of the heart it grows. This is not a mere saying like the other. It is the fact and secret that we are eager to penetrate."—Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney.

AN INVITING FIREPLACE.

A FIREPLACE invites cozy lounging with book or magazine and agreeable conversation that has an accompaniment of crackling flames. An artistic fireplace carries with it the air of coziness. It is set in the back of a recess, out of the room, and has on either side an oak seat, with cushion. The whole back of the recess is brickwork, extending up to the ceiling. The brickwork drops back a few courses above the top of the fireplace, forming a mantel or shelf, on which may be disposed handsome bits of china as a decoration. The bricks used may be the red pressed bricks sold everywhere or some of the handsome bricks that are now made in soft colors, such as gray, yellow, brown and cream. Bricks of the same color, but varying in tone, some being a deeper shade than others, may be used with exeellent results. The valance is a plain straight piece of dark maroon plush, and the pattern, a continuous border of tiger lilies and foliage, treated conventionally and worked solidly in couching stitch with shaded silks, in various warm tones of blue, crimson, gold and olive green. The edge is trimmed with festoons of many rows of narrow silk cords in the colors of the embroidery, each festoon ending in a long silk tassel, showing glints of gold thread.

Secret Societies for Women.

Many secret societies are now open to women. Wives can belong, equally with their husbands, to the Farmers' grange, they can join the Home Circle, as is fitting; or the Knights and Ladies of Honor, or the Order of Protection, or of United Friends, or the P. F. Y. B. O., or the Golden Cross. Moreover, if the husband is a Mason, the wife can at least belong to the Order of the Eastern Star; if he is an Odd Fellow, she can be an Odd Lady; if he attains to the G. U. of O. F., she can be a Daughter of Ruth, which is something; if there is a Son of St. George in the family, there can also be a Daughter of St. George; if there is a member of the G. A. R., there is a Woman's Relief Corps, consisting of those who do the duty of peaceful vivandieres for those worthy veterans. In short, the only prominent order which appears to make no provision for women is the Improved Order of Red Men, and this is rather surprising, as the tribes of this body have each a "keeper of wampum," and mistakenly appoint a man for this office, whereas the real Indian tribes usually intrusted their wampum to women.

Girl Prosecutor.

Miss E. Mae Danison, formerly of Rockford, Ill., now of Long Pine, Brown County, Neb., enjoys the distinction of being the first woman in the United States to have been elected to the office of county prosecuting attorney, having been chosen to fill this position in the recent general election. Miss Danison is 25 years of age and graduated from the law school last spring at the home of Mr. Bryan, at Lincoln, Neb. During the summer she was nominated for the office by the Populists and was indorsed by the Democrats. The nomination came to her unsought and she accepted it simply because of the compliment tendered, having no idea that she stood a chance of election.

Holding Up the Skirts.

A correspondent of an Eastern paper, sympathizing with womankind in general, and that portion particularly that are caught out on the streets in rainy, muddy, or sloppy weather, has perfected an arrangement by which the skirts may be raised from the filth in a manner at once convenient and graceful. It is an arrangement of tape attached on the inside by small rings to the seams of the skirt, from which a ribbon is caught to the belt of the skirt. By placing the hand in the opening and pulling the ribbon, you lift the entire skirt to any desirable distance from the ground. By untying the ribbon the skirt falls again to its natural position of its own weight.

How to Be Well Dressed.

When one observes the ill-dressed women to be seen on the streets daily a person is led to think that their most common fault is carelessness in matching shades. Better take a contrast if you cannot get an exact match. Harmonies in dress are more effective at all times and in better taste than contrasts; thus, if you have a pink evening dress try rather to get gloves of just the same pink than of white kid or of tan. Again, if you have a hat with a red or a blue flower, and are buying a dress that you are likely to wear with it, get something with a spray or line repeating that very tone of red or blue; this applies to every color. Strike a note in each costume, however simple, and keep to it. The cheapest gown if all the details are studied, will cost no more and will surpass in effect some thing at thrice the price.

Charming Evening Gown.

A charming evening gown of silk mull, shown at a fashionable modiste's, is given an airy effect by eight fluffy gauzy flounces on the skirt. The color scheme is carried out in a sort of delicate violet, almost suggesting a pink. This waist is of taffeta of the same shade, and is trimmed with a twist of mull, draped gracefully from the left shoulder to the right side of the waist. A trimming touch, which gives a French air to the creation, is a dainty bit of lace reaching only half way around the neck.

According to the best designs of the season teas and theaters, receptions and visits have their own cape coats and fur wraps, but these garments are so different from the other things that they deserve a full description all to themselves. The handsomest of a whole room full of such wraps was one where a short underjacket was made of cream white corded silk. The jacket was made to flare at the bottom and very much in the back. All around it was a narrow trailing rose vine embroidered in pink and green silk. There were rounded revers to the short cape of moss green velvet sewed to the jacket, which was sleeveless. These revers were embroidered in a pattern similar to that on the jacket portion. The high, flaring collar was velvet on the outside, faced with white corded silk, the scalloped edge being bound with a full shirred roll of crepe lisse. There was a crepe lisse puffing at the throat, from which fell a cravat of fine white lace. On the back of the high collar there was a widely spread bow of ribbon to match the color of the velvet.

Teach the Girls Housework.

A knowledge of the art of housekeeping is necessary to every woman, and it is never too early to begin to acquire it. When there are two or three girls in the family it is an excellent plan to allow each one in turn to assume the responsibility of housekeeping for a certain time. It does not hurt the girls to take a measure of responsibility concerning household tasks; far otherwise, it does them a world of good and lifts much of the burden from an overworked mother's shoulders. Let them in succession have a week at a time in charge of the chamberwork, the mending, the cooking, the buying, even, for the family, all, of course, under proper supervision, and their faculties of reason, perception, judgment, descrimination and continuity will be more developed in one month of such training than in six months of common schooling.

Hats Worn on the Side.

It will no longer be proper for the well-dressed woman to propound the time-honored query as she starts out for a ride or a stroll, "Is my hat on straight?" If that article is "on straight" she will at once rearrange it—tip it to one side or over one eye—and leave her home with the full consciousness that she is in the height of fashion. During the past year the correct position of the hat has been a tilt over the eyebrows. It was neither graceful nor becoming, but it was the fashion, and women of all ages and degrees fell meekly into line. Now the edict has gone forth that the hat must be tipped to one side.

To improve sweetbreads and give a fine flavor soak them in a mild lemon-juice water one hour, then boil in beef stock twenty minutes. Sharpen all kinds of fish sauce with lemon juice. Chocolate is greatly improved by adding a teacup of strong coffee just before serving. A teaspoon of sherry gives a delicious flavor also.

A GREAT CONVENIENCE.

A Prominent Banker's Views of the Express Money Order System.

Morris M. White, the President of the Fourth National Bank at Cincinnati, Ohio, is a representative authority on banking matters. He is probably at the present time one of the most influential men of finance in the Western country, and his opinions are received with the greatest regard by the banking and commercial public. For several years he was the President of the National Association of Bankers, and the members of that association, embracing all the banks of consequence in the United States, will cheerfully join in a tribute to his ability and honor. In Cincinnati, where Mr. White is best known, he is appreciated by the public, because of his good, strong common sense.

In a very pleasant interview which the editor of the Express Gazette had with Mr. White recently he very tersely expressed his disapproval of the agitation which originated among a few banks against the express money order. Mr. White very candidly stated that he looked upon the money orders issued by the different express companies as one of the best instrumentalities in the promotion of commerce that had been devised, and that, far from antagonizing it, he was in favor of promoting it. His idea is that express money orders are, after all, simply a business competition of express companies with the postoffice department, in the remittance of small amounts, and that, if there were any reason or sense in objecting to the express companies issuing such money orders, that same objection might apply to the postoffice department. Mr. White also stated that, these orders being generally issued in small amounts, as a matter of fact the banks should not object, because it relieved them from the responsibility of issuing small drafts, which were not only embarrassing, inconvenient and unprofitable to them, but very often opened the door to forgery and loss.

Mr. White further stated that he looked upon the relations between the banks and the express companies as being of a mutual and co-operative character—that the service rendered by the express companies to the banks was not only necessary, but so indispensable that he did not understand why they should be in hostility toward them. Last of all, he remarked: "Whatever benefits the general business of the country also benefits the banks; and as the express money order is such a great convenience to the development of that business, I am certainly in favor of it."

It was indeed gratifying to hear such talk from a representative banker, and the candid views that Mr. White expressed ought to teach an object lesson to the few bankers who have deemed it a duty to antagonize a great public convenience—the express money order. Talk like this indicates sound judgment and the reflex of profound experience.—Cincinnati Express-Gazette.

Saved from Drowning.

The brave work of a miller in saving a little girl from drowning is described by the Indianapolis Journal. The mill-owner and his wife, it appears, had gone to the city, leaving an 8-year-old girl at home. With other children she went down to the mill to play, and by some accident fell into the sluice which feeds the turbine wheel.

The head miller heard a scream, and not knowing what had happened, applied a brake and stopped the machinery. Then he ran out, found the little girl just disappearing under the water, and in he went after her.

Then he found himself in a hard place. The water was eight feet deep, and he was four feet below the top of the sluice, the sides of which were as smooth as a polished floor. The girl was unconscious. How was he to get her out?

It took one hand to hold her head above water, and the other to keep himself from sinking. He must try to throw her out, and this, by a great effort, he did. But the rebound drove him under water and against the wheel, where he was in great danger of being caught and held. He came up again, however, and now a new difficulty confronted him. How was he to get out himself? He sank to the bottom, gave an upward spring, and as he came up half-blinded, succeeded in catching the top of the sluice. Then, by the greatest exertions, he drew himself out.

The girl was still unconscious, but by vigorous measures was at last revived.

Sensitive Plants.

The sensitive plant, which is such a delicate house ornament with us, fairly enamels the earth in Ceylon, growing wild from Adam's Peak to Point de Galle, multiplying its dainty, bell-like pink blossoms, mingled with the delicate, feathery acacia. Growing so exposed and in weed-like abundance, it is natural to suppose that it would become hardened, as it were, to rough usage; but it is not so, as it retains all its native properties in exaggerated form, if possible. Our puny little hot-house specimens are not more delicate or sensitive to the human touch than is this Ceylon mimosa. It is the most impressionable of all known plants, and is appropriately named. Curious experiments prove this. If a person will fix his eyes upon a special branch and slowly approach it, the plant is seen gradually to wilt and shrink within itself, as it were, before it is touched by the observer's hand. It is endowed with an inexplicable intelligence or instinct, and what appears to be a dread as regards rude contact with human beings.

Spiders Like Music.

On one occasion, says a naturalist, "I noticed a spider which had swung down from the ceiling of a church and hung suspended just above the organist's hands. The organist informed me that he had repeatedly noticed that spiders were affected by music. Some days afterwards, while seated at the organ, I observed the same spider. Several times I drove it away and enticed it back by playing alternately soft andante and loud bravura selections." During a recent concert of Leipsic a spider was seen to descend from one of the chandeliers while a violin solo was being played, but as soon as the orchestra began to sound it quickly ran back again.

ASKING QUESTIONS.

IT IS A WOMAN'S PREROGATIVE, AND SHE USES IT.

Timely Questions and Prompt Answers Have Resulted in Great Satisfaction to Many Women.

Sensitive women hate to ask their physicians those delicate questions that only a woman understands, and therefore write to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., as she has ever proved their most accurate adviser, and knowing that their letters will be read and answered by one of their own sex. Thousands of such letters have been received within a few months from those afflicted with the various forms of female diseases, and it is needless to say the answers have brought comfort and relief.

That sense of dragging in the groin, dull pains in small of back, retention, suppression of menses, bearing-down pains, headache, nervousness, blues, etc., are symptoms that require prompt measures.

The cure is, in most cases, rapid. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound should be promptly taken, and Mrs. Pinkham will furnish any advice required, free. Following is another letter of thanks:—

"Please accept my thanks for the little book which you have sent me. It has opened my eyes, and told me that there is a remedy for suffering women. There is no need for women to suffer, if they will only take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I suffered for years with painful menstruation, thinking there was no remedy for it; but after reading your little pamphlet, I thought I would give your medicine a trial, and it is wonderful how quickly it relieved me. I recommend it for all women who suffer with painful menstruation."—MRS. GEORGE NEHRBOSS, Crittendon, Erie Co., N. Y.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND'S HOME AT PRINCETON, N. J.

A picture of the house in which President Cleveland will live after his retirement from public life is here presented. It is a picturesque old mansion in a pretty part of Princeton, N. J. Mr. Cleveland will not be dean of the Princeton University law college. This story, which was given currency shortly after the purchase of the property, has been authoritatively denied by President Patton. According to the university authorities, Mr. Cleveland's residence in Princeton will have no university significance. The fact is that the President has been desirous of retiring to some quiet place, and both he and Mrs. Cleveland are very fond of the college town and its atmosphere. The house is not one which any one would suppose would be occupied by a man of Mr. Cleveland's wealth. It is a large, roomy structure, with an appearance of age that it does not deserve. It is built of stuccoed brick and brown stone in the old colonial style. Its dimensions are thirty feet wide by fifty feet deep and two stories and a half high. Three sides of it are surrounded by porches. Through its middle runs a wide, old-fashioned hall, at the right of which is the staircase. The flooring of the hall is in hard wood, but there are no other hard wood floors in the house. The rooms, fifteen in number, are all very large, and the ceilings are twelve feet high. One-half of the first floor is given up to the parlor. This apartment occupies the south side of the house. On the northern side are the dining and sitting rooms. The whole affair is sadly out of order. There is no ornamentation whatever in the interior. The house was built in 1854 by Commodore Stockton, a lineal descendant of Richard Stockton, who bought the land from William Penn. It was owned lately by Mrs. Slidell, who, when she left for Europe a month ago, told her agent to sell it for $40,000. The Clevelands will reside in Princeton from October to June and intend to spend the warmer months at Buzzard's Bay.

STATISTICS OF THE MINT.

Director Preston Gives Facts About the Precious Metals.

The report of R. E. Preston, the Director of the Mint, shows the operations of the mints and assay offices during the fiscal year 1896.

The original gold bullion deposited at the mints and assay offices during the year was valued at $68,769,383. The original silver bullion deposited represented a coinage value of $11,672,077. The purchases of silver bullion for subsidiary coinage was 184,578 fine ounces, costing $122,429.

The coinage executed at the mints during the fiscal year was as follows: Gold, $58,878,490; silver dollars, 7,500,882; subsidiary silver, $3,939,819; minor coins, $869,337; total, $71,188,528. There was a total coinage under the act of July 14, 1890, up to Nov. 1, 1896, of $56,306,876, with a seigniorage of $13,304,034; leaving on hand at the mints a balance of 125,061,262 fine ounces, costing $112,865,625.

The average London price of silver bullion during the fiscal year was equivalent to $0.68005; the New York price was $0.68491, and the average price at the par of exchange was $0.67588. The highest quotation during the year was equivalent to $0.70204, the lowest quotation $0.66081. The commercial ratio of gold to silver was 1 to 30.58 and the bullion value of a United States silver dollar at the yearly average price was $0.52262.

The employment of precious metals in the industrial arts in the United States during the calendar year 1895 was: Gold, $13,429,085; silver, $12,277,024.

The metallic stock in the United States on July 1, 1896, was: Gold, $590,597,954; silver, $628,728,071; a total of $1,228,326,035. The estimated production of the precious metals in the United States during the calendar year 1895 was:

Metals.	Fine ounces.	Commercial value.	Coining value.
Gold	2,254,760	$46,610,000	$46,610,000
Silver	55,727,000	36,445,000	72,051,000

The estimated production of gold and silver in the world for the calendar year 1895 was as follows:

Metals.	Fine ounces.	Commercial value.	Coining value.
Gold ...	9,694,640	$200,406,000	$200,406,000
Silver ..	168,308,353	110,073,700	217,510,800

The total coinage of gold and silver by the various countries of the world was as follows:

Gold, $231,087,438; silver, $121,610,219; total, $352,697,657.

The total metallic stock and uncovered paper in the world was estimated on Jan. 1, 1896, to be as follows: Gold, $4,143,700,000; full legal-tender silver, $3,616,700,000; limited-tender silver, $620,200,000; total metallic stock, $8,380,600,000; uncovered paper, $2,558,000,000; grand total, $10,938,600,000.

SAYS NAVY IS INSUFFICIENT.

Secretary Herbert Makes His Report to the President.

The Secretary of the Navy, Hilary A. Herbert, has made public his last annual report of the affairs of his department. The document, while affording much ground for congratulation, is from beginning to end a warning to the country of the insufficiency of its navy for the requirements of war.

The report contains tables regarding the construction of the new navy of the United States. The following is a summary of the vessels authorized since March 4, 1893:

	No.	Total displacement tons.
Battleships	5	57,800
Light-draft gunboats	6	6,000
Torpedo-boats	16	2,098
Submarine torpedo-boat	1	168
Grand total	28	65,866

The boats commissioned during the present administration are:

Sea-going coast-line battleships Indiana, Massachusetts and Oregon; second-class battleships Maine and Texas; armored cruisers New York and Brooklyn; low-freeboard coast-defense monitors Amphitrute, Monadnock, Terror and Puritan (last will be commissioned Dec. 7, 1896); armored ram Katahdin; protected cruisers Cincinnati, Raleigh, Columbia, Minneapolis and Olympia; cruisers Detroit and Montgomery; gunboats Castine, Machias and Annapolis (last will be commissioned Feb. 20, 1897).

There are now twenty-one vessels under construction, among them being the Iowa, Kearsarge, Kentucky, Nashville, Wilmington, Helena, Annapolis, Vicksburg, Newport, Princeton, Wheeling and Marietta.

After reviewing the naval strength of other nations and our own resources the Secretary says:

Whoever may be called upon to consider the possibility of a sudden outbreak of war by the United States, any part of which is to be waged upon the high seas, will be deeply impressed with the utter inability of any administration under present laws to utilize promptly and efficiently, as we should be able to do, our naval resources.

Congress, at its last session, appropriated $400,000 toward the armament of our auxiliary cruisers. This sum has been used, but it is totally insufficient. Other sums are needed to supply guns and ammunition with which to arm vessels to be called into service from our merchant marine, and laws are necessary to give authority to the President to contract for and call such vessels into the service, to utilize our naval militia, to enlist still other men and to purchase supplies that may be needed. Until Congress shall legislate upon this subject and give such authority as that herein indicated, it cannot be said that our Government is in condition, as it should be at all times, to meet emergencies as they may arise.

REPORT ON PENSION AFFAIRS.

Assistant Secretary of the Interior Reviews the Work.

The report of Assistant Secretary of the Interior Reynolds for the present year shows the policy pursued in the administration of pension affairs. The Assistant Secretary says: "The liberal and generous spirit which prompted the enactment of the pension laws has been the guide of the department in their construction. Former adjudications have not been disturbed, save when fraud, error in law or mistake was apparent."

Figures are cited to show the significant reduction of pending cases and to demonstrate that, for the first time in eight years, the work of the office during the last year was devoted to considering current appeals. The action of the Commissioner of Pensions was reversed in 2,066 of the cases ruled.

Suggestion is again made as to the advisability of such legislation as will lodge in the Federal Courts the right of any one, on behalf of the Government, to ask better protection to the pension fund of those laboring under legal disabilities.

It is suggested that justice demands the universal application of the common-law rule in proof of marriage. State laws govern, and lead to denial of title in cases which are equally meritorious. It is claimed pensionable rights of minor children, whose claims come under the act of June 27, 1890, should be defined with more certainty where the soldier dies leaving no widow surviving.

The act of Aug. 5, 1892, relates to pensionable title of those women who served as nurses during the war of the rebellion. Title is confined to those who served in regimental, post, camp or general hospital. The refusal of the War Department to recognize those as properly employed who served in the first three classes mentioned tends to defeat their title and renders this portion of the act nugatory. Attention is invited to this in order that proper legislation may be enacted to relieve any deserving claimants of an unjust and unintentional discrimination.

MAY SUCCEED WEYLER.

Lieut.-Gen. Pando Is Said to Be More Brutal than the "Butcher."

Lieut.-Gen. Pando, who is spoken of as Capt. Gen. Weyler's successor at the head of the Spanish forces in Cuba, is reported to be a man of blood and war—more brutal, perhaps, in his methods than the "butcher," who has made for himself a name in history as a murderer rather than as a soldier or a conqueror. Pando has always believed that the suppression of the Cuban rebellion was an easy task. He predicted that Campos would suppress it, and when Campos failed he ascribed the failure not to his own bad judgment, but to lack of soldierly qualities in the baffled captain general. Gen. Pando is apparently quite friendly to the United States. He says there is not now and never has been danger of the American annexation of Cuba. He favors Cuba's paying tribute, commercially, to this country. Cuba's natural market, he says, is the United States, and he believes in making new treaties of reciprocity to encourage increased commerce.

Told in a Few Lines.

Joseph H. Choate is a candidate for the United States Senate. His friends have made him so, and he has said to them that he will not repudiate any honorable efforts made in his behalf, even if success should not crown them.

Oscar Hammerstein, the New York theatrical manager, has made a proposition to his creditors, offering to pay his outstanding indebtedness of $75,000, in full with interest during 1897 in installments and to give a collateral mortgage on all his property as security.

CATARRH IN THE HEAD.

A Constitutional Disease, Requiring a Constitutional Remedy.

Catarrh in the head consists of inflamation of the mucous membrane in the nasal passages, and sometimes it extends to the air cavities which cover a considerable portion of the face. Catarrh in the head frequently destroys the senses of taste and smell, and its tendency is always debilitating. The best authorities say catarrh is just as surely a constitutional disease as is scrofula. It is caused and promoted by impure blood. The teaching of experience proves that the true way to cure catarrh is to purify the blood. The One True Blood Purifier is Hood's Sarsaparilla. Thousands of such statements have been written by honest, straightforward men and women: they have been published year after year; and their genuineness is beyond any possible question.

If you are suffering from catarrh, do not daily with snuffs, inhalants and useless local applications. Take the direct road to health. Cleanse the stream at the fountain head. Purify your blood with the One Pure Blood Purifier, Hood's Sarsaparilla. In a short time you will be convinced of the wisdom of this course. Hood's Sarsaparilla will give you an appetite, tone and strengthen your stomach, make rich, red blood, and remove all the disagreeable symptoms of catarrh by permanently eradicating the causes which produce them.

Reade's Opinion of Bay Rum.

Howard Paul relates a capital anecdote of the late Charles Reade, the novelist, who was something of a gourmet. He had heard so much about canvas back ducks that he desired to taste them. Mr. Paul sent him a brace by a quick steamer, with explicit instructions as to how they should be prepared and cooked. He sent by the same messenger a bottle of bay rum, thinking Mr. Reade knew it as a toilet accessory. It seems he did not, for he wrote back to the donor "My Dear Paul: The ducks were excellent; I enjoyed them exceedingly; but the bay rum must be an acquired taste and didn't go at all well with the wild fowl, so I substituted champaigne. I liked the bay rum better made into a hot punch."

False Witnesses.

There are knaves now and then met with who represent certain local bitters and poisonous stimuli as identical with or possessing properties akin to those of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. These scamps only succeed in foisting their trashy compounds upon people unacquainted with the genuine article, which is as much their opposite as day is to night. Ask and take no substitute for the grand remedy for malaria, dyspepsia, constipation, rheumatism and kidney trouble.

Jewish Kings.

The Jews from the coronation of Saul, in 1095 B. C., to the accession of Rehoboam in 975, had three kings—Saul, David and Solomon, who each reigned forty years. The Kingdom of Israel, from the accession of Jeroboam I., in 975, to the dispersion of the ten tribes in 721, had nineteen kings. Between Rehoboam, B. C. 975, and Zedekiah, the last King in Jerusalem before the Babylonish captivity 599, there were twenty-two king.

A Detriment.

Lady (to servant who applies for a place)—But, tell, me, do you understand hair dressing?

Servant Girl—Oh, yes, in half an hour I can make the most difficult hair dress.

Lady—In half an hour? I regret, then, but I cannot accept you. What would I do the whole forenoon if my hair were dressed in half an hour?—Matyas Diak.

There is more catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few year was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment pronounced it incurable. Science have proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address, Wedding Decorations.

In Austalia there is a much greater amount of church decoration on matrimonial occasions than we have here. At a recent wedding an arch of white flowers was erected across the center aisle to mark the point beyond which the pews were reserved for the guests. A rope of white flowers stretched across fastened with a loop of white satin ribbons upon the pointed top of one of the pew doors. A large and lovelier arch, composed of the rarest white flowers intermixed with maidenhair, was placed where the bride and bridegroom stood and knelt to be made one. Directly over their heads hung a marriage bell of snowy blossoms. The pillars that upheld the galleries were garlanded with greenery, among which white flowers were entwined.

To Protect Elephants.

The League for the Protection of African Elephants is a new organization in Paris. Among the members are colonial officers, politicians, scientific men and the composer, Saint-Saens. In the circular justifying its existence it says that in recent years the number of African elephants killed annually has been 42,000, and at that rate the elephant will be exterminated in Africa with fifteen years. The circular says that, as the burden bearer of civilization on the Dark Continent, the elephant is of inestimable worth and should be preserved.

Obituary.

Aramintha Sheffer, daughter of Levi D. and Christiana Rainier, was born at North Georgetown, Ohio, June 30th., 1845. In June, 1849 the family moved to Newville, Ind., where they resided till 1865, when they moved to Auburn.

December 30, 1869, she was united in marriage with Wm. Sheffer. To them was born one daughter, Lura, who lived to brighten the home about 8 years, preceding her mother to the heavenly land, about 14 years. Although for so many years without a child of her own, her motherly love never ceased but found expression in the care of others.

Mrs. Sheffer became a member of the United Brethren church at Newville, when a girl of 15, and after coming to Auburn, she united with the First M. E. church, of which she remained an earnest and consistent member until her death. She took an active part in the Ladies Society of the church, and could always be relied upon to do thoroughly what she undertook. Although not in good health she took a special interest in making a success of the last social given by the Society.

She was an efficent member of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society and its Vice President for the current year.

Although in poor health for several months she had been feeling much better for a few days and ate Thanksgiving dinner with her brother Joseph. She arranged with Mrs. Rainier to attend the church prayer meeting that evening, but before time to go she was striken with the disease that proved to be her last. During this illness while in great pain and weakness, she requested prayers by her pastor and joined earnestly in the worship. Two days before her last, she herself offered a prayer of remarkable fervency and expressed her entire resignation to the Father's will.

On Sabbath morning Dec. 6, she was released from her suffering, aged 51 years, 5 months and 6 days.

Of her immediate family, there remain her husband, three brothers, Joseph and Byron of Auburn, and Arsemus, of Fayette, O., and one sister, Mrs. Anna Harris of Providence, R. I., all of whom were present at her funeral.

A devoted wife, a loving sister, a loyal member of the church, a highly respected citizen, a noble woman, Mrs. Sheffer will be greatly missed by all, and we do well to join together in tributes of respect and affection to her memory.

Strange Bequest.

NOVEL CONDITION ATTENDING A BEQUEST TO A WISCONSIN LODGE.

The following dispatch from Wisconsin appeared in a Chicago paper. If it is not a fake, the membership of the D. O. H. in that town may grow and there will be at least one well attended meeting each year. It says:

"MILWAUKEE, Wis., Dec. 8.—The will of Gottfried Inden, of Wauwatosa, filed here to-day, contains a novel stipulation. He bequeths $4,000 to lodge 386, D. O. H., with the condition that the lodge erect a building bearing his name and that at every annual meeting the members shall read his will and drink two kegs of beer at one sitting. If they fail to finish the kegs at one sitting they are to forfeit the property. He also left an estate valued at $25,000 to his widow.

The Same... Old Sarsaparilla.

That's Ayer's. The same old sarsaparilla as it was made and sold by Dr. J. C. Ayer 50 years ago. In the laboratory it is different. There modern appliances lend speed to skill and experience. But the sarsaparilla is the same old sarsaparilla that made the record—50 years of cures. Why don't we better it? Well, we're much in the condition of the Bishop and the raspberry: "Doubtless," he said, "God might have made a better berry. But doubtless, also, He never did." Why don't we better the sarsaparilla? We can't. We are using the same old plant that cured the Indians and the Spaniards. It has not been bettered. And since we make sarsaparilla compound out of sarsaparilla plant, we see no way of improvement. Of course, if we were making some secret chemical compound we might.... But we're not. We're making the same old sarsaparilla to cure the same old diseases. You can tell it's the same old sarsaparilla because it works the same old cures. It's the sovereign blood purifier, and—it's Ayers.

The Legislature.

The January meeting of the General Assembly of Indiana is looked forward to with a good deal of interest by both parties. It is an important session for several reasons. There is a U. S. Senator to elect to succeed Voorhees, and though it is certain to be republican, still there are a number of candidates and there may be a hard struggle Besides, it is likely our people will be treated for the first time, to the luxury of a millionaire member of the national senate, which usually means a man with more cash than statesmanship. Many other states have been saddled with this grade of statesmanship, especially the mining states, many of which have had these guilded figure heads in that august body for a generation or so. An example close by, has been the great state of Ohio, with its Senator Payne and Senator Brice, though each of these had some ability outside of his pocket book. Nevertheless, representatives of that sort are not desirable. They do not represent any part of the people except, the heavier capitalists. The people of Indiana have generally had men to represent the masses, but this good fortune seems to have left us. Then this legislature must have its various officers.

FOR SPEAKER.

The republicans have six candidates for speaker of the House in the coming General Assembly, of Indiana. They are H. C. Petit of Wabash, B. M. Willoughby of Vincennes, S. E. Nicholson, of Kokomo, (all of whom were members of the last house), John Linck, of Madison, who was formerly a member of the house; General Jasper Packard, of New Albany, who represented the Tenth district in congress when he resideded in Pulaski county, and B. Wilson Smith of Lafayette. None of these gentlemen have been making an extremely active canvass, and Packard and Linck both declare that they are not likely to join into a general scramble for the place.

PROPOSED LAWS.

Republicans are down on "fusion" which lately proved so disastrous to them. And so they propose to take away from the people this right, the right to make a voluntary choice of the persons for whom they would like to vote. A bill to continue the appellate court, will also come up, and should be passed, as the people can better afford to pay the salaries, than to wait five or ten years to have their cases tried in the supreme court. The most important action, will be to secure a fair apportionment of the state for legislative purposes. There will also be an attempt to appropriate money for the coming Indiana Centennial. A small sum for a definite part of this would be advisable, as there are some little matters that the state can and should handle, better than anyone else. But besides a small sum, the rest should be left to the voluntary patriotism and public spirit of the citizens. Give the people a chance. They will take care of it. There will be laws regulating Building and Loan Associations, but these are not of vital importance. Then there should be a law limiting the door-keepers and other employes to about half the present number. All in all the coming General Assembly will have no excuse for idleness.

It Is The Favorite

The Packard Piano Rapidly Gaining in Popularity, and Now Stands Side By Side with the Celebrated Packard Organ.

ACKNOWLEDGED PEER OF REED ORGANS

It Is Indeed An Instrument To Be Proud Of, And The Fort Wayne Organ Co., Is To Be Congratulated On Having Produced Such An Exceptionally Fine Piano.

A little more than twenty-five years ago the Fort Wayne Organ company began the manufacture of the now Celebrated Packard Organ. Then the organ was unknown outside of its own city and county, but since then it has so grown in favor that at this time it is a household favorite in almost every country on the face of the globe, being for sale in the United Kingdom, South America, South Africa, Australia, China, Japan, the West Indies, etc. This indeed speaks well for the company and its business methods.

Having met with such excellent success in launching their first venture, the company about two years ago decided to begin the manufacture of a Companion Piece to their Celebrated Organ, and it is with pride that they can show to the music loving world an instrument that is sure to win laurels for itself and its manufacturers. The Packard Piano is indeed a wonderful instrument, wonderful for its pure and sympathetic tone combined with great power, for its elastic touch and durability of action, for its artistic and striking designs, and for its superb finish.

Determined to make the piano as near perfect as possible they secured the services of an expert workman, an adept in the art of piano scale drawing, a technical musician, and a thorough mechanic, especially in the art of piano building—a man who has had over fifty years experience in piano building and who has been connected with the leading first class factories in the east; and the result of all this experience culminated in his last production—the Packard—which he himself pronounces his masterpiece.

The company had implicit confidence in the success of the piano from the start, but nevertheless they put the instrument to every known test, and did not put it upon the market for some months after it was completed, and not until after they had secured the verdict of several of the largest piano dealers in this country, and also an expression from a number of the best musical critics the country produces, and the verdict of them all was unanimous, that the Packard Piano was a marvel, and an innovation in the art of the present day piano production.

To parties intending to buy a piano, the company can assure them that the Packard Piano is the coming instrument; that it has qualities that few of the other and older established makes can equal, and none excel.

The company is in position to save the purchaser who wants a high grade piano, from $75.00 to $100.00 on every piano, and guarantees to give them an instrument that is just as it is represented to be and with a guarantee that means something.

There is one point especially which the company wishes to call attention to, and that is this—they have adopted "One Price to All, with Special Prices to None;" thus assuring to each and every patron the same opportunity and satisfaction, that he has bought his piano at the same low price as his neighbor has. "Honest Goods at Honest Prices," is the motto of the company, and when you have learned the prices and examined their piano, we are satisfied you will appreciate the fact that they are doing just what they claim.

To say that the company is proud of this last venture in the musical line cannot be doubted, and when any of our citizens are in Ft. Wayne, they will be glad to have them call and examine their instruments. It makes no difference whether you intend purchasing or not, they want you to see their new store and get acquainted.

The retail store they have fitted up in the Schmidt block is one of the prettiest stores in Northern Indiana, being centrally located on the corner of Calhoun and Washington streets, at Ft. Wayne, Ind. It is well lighted and fully equipped for a salesroom. The gentlemen and ladies in charge of the store are always courteous and attentive, and always willing to explain to you the beauties of their favorite.

There could be nothing more appropriate for a Christmas present to your wife or daughter than one of those excellent Packard Pianos, for it is indeed "A thing of beauty and a joy forever."

A Churn That Churns in One Minute

I have been in the dairy business all my life and have many times churned for an hour before butter would appear, so when I heard of a churn that would churn in a minute, I concluded to try it Every day for a week I used it, and not only could I churn in a minute, but I got more and better butter than with the common churn. This is very important information to butter makers. The churn works easily and will churn an ordinary churning in less than sixty seconds. I have sold two dozen of these churns in the past month, Every butter maker that has seen me churn in less than a minute bought one. You can obtain all desired information regarding the churn by addressing J. F. Casey & Co., St Louis Mo., and they will give you prompt and courteous attention.

Good Job

We have received a copy of the "Garrett Opera House Programme" made at the office of the Herald in that city, and used at the recent full week entertainment given by the "Wilson Theater Co." The Programme is one of double the usual size and contains four large pages on which all the space not taken by the programme and description of the play, is occupied by business ads. The work speaks highly for the skill and taste of the printer and the liberality and enterprise of their business men. Bro. Miner and his artistic printer L. E. Murray make a good team.

U. S. Public Schools

The public schools of this country, said a recently paper read in a literary club at Ft. Wayne, is a wonderful growth. Its present magnitude and extent will be understood when it is learned that the schools now enroll 15,000,000 children, employ 400,000 teachers, expend annually $175,000,000 and control property valued at $400,000,000. The continuing advance of the system is made clear by the fact that the average attendance of pupils and the average length of term are steadily increasing, and further by the fact that the total valuation of school property is steadily growing, having doubled in the last twenty years. The public school is an institution of modern times. It has arisen out of the conviction that all the people have need of education.

BUTLER.

The M. E. friends will have an old fashioned Christmas tree at their church on Christmas evening.

—Dr. Dabbs, an extensive traveler in the orient gave three lectures in the M. E. church the forepart of the week, delineating the life and customs of these far away people. They were fairly well attended.

The large iron clad store room erected by the Butler Co. is about completed.

J. A. Campbell and A. J. Baxter visited Ashley last Monday on business. no end of complaint is expressed by the natives over the dull state of business affair.

The members of the Odd Fellows Lodge planned a surprise upon the Daughters of Rebecca last Friday night, and it was complete in every particular. The first intimation they had of it while they were engaged in a drill, preparatory to initiating candidate, was the shrill blast of the band's bugle, and loud beat of their drum within ten feet of them and like women always do, they screamed. This was followed by a banquet of no mean proportions consisting of oysters, fruit, cake, cold meats etc, this followed by music, recitations and songs. All went home feeling that the occasion was well worth remembering.

A large amount of hay is coming into market, an amount in excess of any former year at this place.

A Dandy Thing to Sell!

I have been doing so well this summer selling combination dippers that I think it is my duty to tell others about it. I have not made as much money as some I read about, but I never made less than $3 and often $5 a day; the dipper can be used as a fruit jar filler; a plain dipper; a fine strainer; a funnel; a strainer funnel; a sick room warming pan, and a pint measure. These eight different uses makes the dipper such a necessary article that it sells at nearly every house, as it is so cheap. You can get a sample by sending, as I did, 18 two-cent stamps to pay postage, etc., to W. H. Baird & Co., Station A, Pittsburg. Pa, and they will mail you a dipper, and you can go right to work. Any one can make $3 or $4 a day anywhere. READER. tf

How the Dipper Saved the Farm.

Father was sick and the mortgage on the farm was coming due, I saw in the Christian Advocate where Miss A. M. Fritz, of Station A, St. Louis, Mo., would send a sample combination Dipper could be used as a fruit jar filler a plain dipper a fine strainer; a funnel; a strainer funnel; a sick room warming pan, and a pint measure. These eight different uses makes the dipper such a necessary article that I went to work with it and it sells at very near every house. And in four months I paid off the mortgage. I can clear as much as $200 a month. If you need work you can do well by giving this a trial. Miss A. M. Fritz, Station A, St. Louis, Mo., will send you a sample for 18 two cent stamps—write at one. Andy Ellison.

HOW AND WHY HE BECAME A LAWYER IN THE FORTIES.

The Huntington Herald of last week relates a reminiscence which explains how the late Judge Ellison became a lawyer. He was a student of the late Judge John U. Pettit of Wabash. The Herald relates it thus:

In conversation with Judge Pettit, one day years ago the name of Mr. Ellison was mentioned by the writer "And so you know Andrew Ellison, do you?" inquired Mr. Pettit. Answered in the intirmative, the judge said: "In the summer of 1842 (possibly '43) a big raw-boned Irishman walked into my office 'Are you Pettit?' he asked. 'Yes,' I answered. 'Well,' said the visitor, 'my name is Ellison. My father has been robbed of his farm on Brushy Prairie and I want to learn enough law to get it back again.' 'My office and books are at your disposal and I shall be pleased to aid you,' was my answer, and Ellison was a law student in my office for some three months We were both given to fishing and made frequent trips to the Wabash and sitting there on the river banks, watching our lines, would discuss for hours the legal points involved in the contemplated law suit. One day Ellison abruptly remarked, 'Well, John, I believe I know enough law to get that farm back.' I thought so, too, and Ellison returned to LaGrange county. He won the suit just as I predicted and is now one of the most successful lawyers in Indiana." This conversation occurred thirty-five years after the incident narrated.

Rommes-Sherlock

Ceremony Performed at 8 O'clock Last Night.

The home of Mrs. Julia Sherlock on North VanBuren street was the scene last evening of a very pretty wedding. The contracting parties were Mrs. Sherlock's daughter, Miss Anna and E. J. Rommes, the Lake Shore Operator both well known to the young people of Auburn. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. D. Brosy, of the Lutheran church at 8 o'clock in the presence of about thirty invited friends of the young couple. After congratulations a very elaborate supper was served.

Mr. and Mrs. Rommes will reside with the bride's mother. They have the best wishes of the COURIER for a bright and happy future.

Money Reforms.

The coming meeting of those who seek to reform our financial matters promises to be an important one. The leading financiers of the country are being selected to act as delegates and whether they will make it better or worse, their selection makes it plain that the demand of the people for reform in our finances has forced this question to the front. Everybody now that the campaign is over, acknowledges that something is wrong. As we have often said, a nation of people like ours with all our great natural advantages ought to be prosperous and should never suffer from hard times. But we have found times steadily getting worse for more than twenty years. The people at large are not to blame. That is conceded. It must lie in either our financial system, or in the way our finances have been managed and general business controlled. There is no doubt, but an increase of the money in actual circulation would help, and during the recent campaign it was hoped that this plan would succeed and would give us more money, exactly as good as we have been and are now using. But this plan was defeated and the people will now insist that those who have the control are to be held responsible for some other plan that can be put into successful operation. If they will not do it our way, let them do it their way. The people however, are tired of makeshifts and deceptions. To those in full power in every branch of the government, a plan for better times can be easily formulated and put into execution.

Joke On Us.

The Chinese are sending missionaries over here to convert the American heathens, just as we have been sending our missionaries to convert the "heathen Chinee" in his own flowery kingdom. We see they have a station in Chicago. Well, almost any kind of a missionary would be in order in Chicago. But this reminds us that we saw one of these missionaries the other day. While in Indianapolis lately, we met a Hindoo missionary. He had come all the way from the East Indies, to try if possibly he might save a few benighted Americans. His religion is Buddhism, which he claims would be much better for Americans than the Christian religion. It is said that in some ways their teachings are like those of our "theosophists." He is evidently a man of ability and well educated, but whether he has succeeded in redeeming any great portion of the Hoosier Capital, we are not able tosay.

Marry This Girl Somebody'

I have been reading in your paper about several men and women, that have been very successful selling self-heating flat-irons, and I concluded I would see what a girl could do I have worked 12 days and have sold 151 irons and have $218 left after paying all expenses. Everybody is delighted with it, as people think they can't afford to be without one as they save fuel and time and don't burn the clothes. I know I can clear five thousand dollars in a year. How is that for a girl?

A GRADUATE.

Splendid, my girl, splendid, you are a true American girl Someone can get complete information about the self-heating iron by addressing J F. CASEY & CO., ST. LOTIS MO. It seems to be a winner, as everybody selling it writes in its praise. 3

Buynig Timber.

Friday's Daily.

Buying timber is a business requiring business tact, judgment, cash and close attention. Virge DeWitt is a good buyer. He has business tact, judgment, cash and usually gives it close attention. But there are exceptions to the last named condition. One is, when he goes out with a good talker like H. C, Shull. Yesterday noon DeWitt and Shull started to go out south of town to Mr. Shull's farm, on which is some valuable timber that Virge has had an eye on for some time They got there in good time and just when they were fairly in the woods, up jumped a rabbit, and not having the honor of the acquaintance of either gentleman, with the usual bashfulness of his tribe, Bunny ran away. The tuft of his cotton tail whisked around trees and logs like a flash, and he disappeared in a hollow tree. The two men felt the hunting spirit swell in their bosoms and tingle in their feet and they struck a Weston gait in pursuit. They wanted that rabbit, for they realized what a nice supper he would be. But Hank remembered reading a wise and ancient recipe for cooking a rabbit which began: "First catch your rabbit." So they concluded to follow the recipe in proper order and at once camped on Bunny's trail. They laid siege to that hollow tree; they chopped and dug, and consulted and compared notes, and the sun grew low, and the shadows of night came on, and they got hungry, and finally concluded that rabbit was not healthy for supper anyway and some other "fillin'" would do as well. So they struck for home and when about half way to town, while Virge was remarking that he did not think it was so late, he suddenly stopped and exclaimed, "Hank, what about that timber?" It was the first time either had thought of it. They are planning for a second trip

Free Pills.

Send your address to H. E. Bucklen & Co., Chicago, and get a free sample of Dr. King's New Life pills. A trial will convince you of their merits. These pills are easy in action and are particularly effective in the cure of consumption and sick headache. For Malaria and liver troubles they have been proved invaluable. They are guaranted to be perfectly free from every deleterious substance and to be purely vegetable. They do not weaken by their action, but by giving tone to stomach and bowels greatly invigorate the system. Regular size 25c per box. Sold at Robbins & McCord's drug store.

Horrible! Horrible!

Innocent children by the thousand are constantly dying of diarrhoea whose life might be saved. How quickly the demon works! Flesh speedily wastes away as though subjected to fire. You try change of water, and change of food and change of air. The handiest and quickest and safest thing you can do is to procure at once a bottle of Dr. Hand's Diarrhoea Mixture, at any drug store, for 25c. It's wonderful how quickly it brings good results. Fischler & Son.

Marry This Girl Quick

I saw in your paper that a 13 year old boy made $1.25 the first hour he worked selling the Perfection Metal Tip Lampwick. I ordered a sample and went to work and the first week I cleared $10, the second week I cleared $15. I expect to run it up to $25 a week in the near future, as the Perfection Metal Tip Lampwick makes such a beautiful white light and does away with smoky chimneys and bad oder and saves oil, it is easy to sell. If you wish to try it send 13 cent stamps to Miss A. M. Fritz, Station A. St. Louis, Mo., and she will send you sample outfit, this is a good way to make money around home.

A CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY.

In the past three months I have cleared $660,75 selling Dish Washers, I did most of the work, my brother helped some. I expect to do better next month, as every Dish Washer sold advertises itself and sells several more; I don't have to leave the house. People hear about the Dish Washers and send for them, they are so cheap. Any lady or gentleman can make money in this business, as every family wants a Dish Washer. Any of our readers who have energy enough to apply for an agency can easily make from $8 to $10 per day. You can get full particulars by addressing the Mound City Dish Washer Co., St Louis, Mo. Try it and publish your success for the benefit of others

As To Bones.

Professor Moses Love at the County Home, wires the DAILY by grapevine, on which Commissioner Bateman pays the charges, that "the human anatomy has 236 bones and each bone fills its own place, everyone having bone to bone in his own order, and there is no dodging this. It is true." He says he graduated in the medical school at Mt. Vernon and has practiced since with good success. The Doctor may be a little off as to the number of bones but the editor of this paper has always been liberal in matters of that kind, and a few bones more or less would not be material. We know some people who are a few bones short, but as they don't need any, it is all the same. We know others who have a few bones too many and they usually come around to "pick" one of these superfluous bones with the editor. Such are not popular in this office, and are seldom able to show one of our finely engraved invitations requesting their presence. And we feel sure our friend, Dr. Love has forgotten one of the most common of all these osseous members. It is the one called the "crazy bone." That would make 246, as everyone can testify that this particular bone has as much music in its makeup as ten other bones that go not astray.

As to Pensions.

Congress will likely pass a bill giving pensions to soldiers who served in various Indian wars, including, the Black Hawk war and those with the Creeks, Cherokees and Seminoles. But there seems to be no date allowed earlier than 1832. There is also talk of relieving the disability of soldiers who enlisted under assumed names, so as to give them pensions also. There is also a movement on foot, having its origin in the southern states to pension old ex-slaves or their widows and children, and all persons who served in the commissary or quartermaster's department.

Home Again.

Friday's Daily.

Perry Long and wife, reached Avilla last evening on their way home from their three weeks' visit with his father's family and other friends at and near Benzonia, Benzie Co. Michigan. At Avilla, his brother met them and took them home where they staid over night and came on to Auburn this morning. They left the friends up there all well. There has not been much snow up there or cold weather yet, though the snow was about three inches deep soon after they got there. When they returned, there was neither snow nor ice at starting, but on reaching Cadillac, found ice 5 inches thick, at Sturgis they found the snow the same depth we have it here. It seemed singular to come southward to find snow and ice. Among the many DeKalb folks up there, are his people Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Long, several families of the Links, the Draggoo, Ballteis, Harvey Moody and his sons Daniel and Martin, in fact they are scattered all over several counties in that section. A great deal of land is rolling and even hilly and it was quite a treat to stand on hills and see the plain for a score of miles. They got so used to going up hill and down, that it seemed odd to walk the level ground again. The people there are in the peach belt, but did not make much on them this year and some even lost as the prices ruled so very low. They saw John Draggoo up there, but he returned to this place a few days ago.

A Chance to Make Money.

I have made $1,640 clear money in 87 days and attended to my household duties besides, and I think this is doing splendid for a woman inexperienced in business. Anyone can sell what everyone wants to buy, and every family wants a Dish Washer. I don't canvass at all; people come or send for the washer, and every washer that goes out sells two or three more, as they do the work to per minutes. I am going to devote my whole time to this business now and I am sure that I can clear $5,000 a year. My sister and brother have started in the business and are doing splendid. You can get complete instructions and hundreds of testimonials by addressing the Iron City Dish Washer Co., Station A. Pittsburg, Pa., and if you don't make lots of money it's your own fault.

DOINGS OF THE DAY.

SUMMARY OF THE NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Eventful Happenings in Every Known Hemisphere—Fires, Accidents, Crimes, Politics, Religion, Commerce and Crops, Sandwiched with Minor Affairs.

FATAL WRECK

At a Railroad Crossing at Delphi, Ind

A wreck occurred at the crossing of the Wabash and Monon Railroads at Delphi, Ind. A wreck train was hurried out over the latter road from Monon, and while running at a high rate of speed near Gunsey, five miles south of Monon, a flat car of the wrecking train jumped the track and the entire train went into a ditch. One man was instantly killed and several injured. The names of the killed and injured are as follows:

Cecil Douglas of Hammond, Ind., who was stealing a ride, instantly killed.

C. W. McCammon, trainmaster, had both legs bruised.

John Reed, conductor, injured internally.

Otto Long, brakeman, of Medarysville, cut about the face and head; not seriously injured.

DONE BY A MOB.

Three Persons Lynched in Kentucky.

Russellville (Ky.) special: Swaying to and fro in the breezes, a half mile south of town, hanging to a little cedar tree, are the bodies of Dink and Arch Proctor, and lying in the county jail here is the dead body of Will Proctor, half brother to Dink. At 2 o'clock Saturday morning a mob visited the county jail, and after battering down the front door and forcing the jailer to give up the keys, went to the cells for the Proctors. The oldest, Will Proctor, cursed the mob, and was shot dead in his cell. The other two were taken out and hanged. The mob numbered about 100 and did their work quietly and with dispatch. Bill Proctor has been tried three times for murder.

Dying Like Sheep.

The Philadelphia brig Arcadia, Captain Fisher, which has arrived at Philadelphia from Port Au Prince via Turks Island, where she took on board a cargo of salt, brings account of the dreadful suffering of the natives of this pesthole from ravages of yellow fever. The disease is the worst known to have prevailed for over twelve years, and the people are dying like sheep. It is impossible for the authorities to treat all the cases, and the suffering and misery wrought by the scourge is intense. The disease has broken out on board a number of vessels in the harbor, in some instances carrying off the entire crews.

Olney Says Go Slow.

The Washington Post says the Secretary of State has cautioned members of the Committee on Foreign Relations to go very slowly in regard to the Cuban question. The Secretary of State urgently recommends that all action be postponed in Congress until the end of the present campaign, when, if the Spaniards are not successful, he believes, as recommended in the President's message, some form of practical intervention should be applied by the United States.

A Medical College Blown to Atoms.

An explosion occurred at the Detroit College of Medicine at Detroit, and immediately following the explosion flames broke forth from the third story windows and less than two hours later the building was a mass of ruins. The janitor of the institution and his wife narrowly escaped with their lives. The loss on the building will reach $75,000, partly insured. Besides the building itself, valuable instruments, such as microscopes, etc., and costly furniture have been destroyed. The cause of the fire is as yet not fully cleared up, but incendiarism is strongly suspected.

Is Ignorant of Enlistments.

The Department of Justice has not yet received any official information of the reported enlistment of companies of men in different parts of the country with the view of joining the insurgents in Cuba, nor can it be authoritatively stated just what course will be pursued by the Government should the enlistments be brought officially to its notice.

Train Held Up.

Train No. 55, west-bound, on the Southern Railway, was stopped in Adams County, sixty-five miles from Birmingham, Ala., by two masked men who flagged the train on a bridge and one of the express cars was broken into. The robbers got very little for their trouble. The exact amount is not stated.

Hermann, the Magician, Dead.

Rochester (N. Y.) special: Hermann, the magician, died suddenly in his private car at Great Valley, near Salamanca. He was on his way to Bradford. The remains will be forwarded to New York. Death was caused by heart disease.

Masonic Temple, Fort Wayne, Ind.

Dec. 25.—Tim Murphy in "Old Innocence."

Dec. 26.—Rob Roy.

Recruiting Everywhere.

Dispatches from several Kansas points tell of a general movement to form companies to aid the Cubans. Recruiting operations are reported from Topeka, Lawrence, Great Bend, Garden City and Valley Falls.

A Hunter Fatally Wounded.

William Minnich, a farmer near Union City, Ind., while hunting rabbits accidentally struck his gun against the fence on which he was standing, and the weapon was discharged, the load penetrating his bowels.

A Steamer Overdue.

Tacoma (Wash.) special: The steamer schooner Edith, Captain Edwards, with a crew of thirty men aboard, is now nine days overdue from the halibut banks, off Hecate Sound, and fears are entertained that some mishap has befallen her owing to the severe storms of the past week.

Old Lady Burned.

The residence of Mrs. Joe Martin, a few miles from Bowling Green, Ky., was discovered on fire, and when the building was almost burned to the ground it was found that Mrs. Martin was in the house, and she burned to death. She was 72 years of age.

EARTHQUAKE SHOCKS

Felt Throughout Wales and Southern England.

London special: Friday, two strong shocks of earthquake were felt throughout Wales, the midlands and the south of England. The first shock occurred at 2 o'clock and the second at 5:30, the waves passing from west to east. Houses were violently shaken, beds moved from their places, doors forced open and furniture overturned. Telegrams from all quarters concur in the statement that the first shock was of thirty seconds duration and was followed by a loud rumbling sound and minor tremblings of the earth. The second shock was shorter but more severe. Many people of Windsor, Cheltenham and other places rushed out of their houses, but no one was hurt. The cathedral at Hereford was damaged somewhat, but no other serious damage is reported.

Fire at Newark.

Newark (Ohio.) special: Fire destroyed property in this city valued at $90,000. The breaking of a lamp in a store was the cause. The departments of Columbus and Zanesville were called out, but the fire was under control before they arrived. The losses are as follows: The Allison company, $20,000, insurance, $9,000; Koestring & Meyers, dry goods, $30,000, insurance, $18,000, Mary L. Jones, building, $20,000, insurance not known. The postoffice building was damaged to the extent of $1,000, but all mail was saved. Other small damages were as follows: J. C. Jones, store, $2,000; Hotel Worden, $2,000; Odd Fellows hall, $3,000. The latter was insured for $900.

Tierney Will Not Hang.

Governor Bushnell has commuted to life imprisonment the sentence of Frank Tierney, the Erie County murderer, who was to have hanged at the Ohio Penitentiary Wednesday, at midnight. The era of electrocution will begin with the death shocks given to Haas and Wiley, the Cincinnati murderers. Governor Bushnell stated that his reasons for commuting Tierney's sentence was the possible doubt that he committed the crime, because of conflicting testimony.

Beaten and Robbed.

Three robbers visited the home of Fred Buckleman, a well-to-do farmer living near Defiance, Ohio. Buckleman was lured outside, beaten into insensibility, bound hand and feet, and then the robbers entered the house. Mrs. Buckleman was also beaten and bound. The robbers secured only a small amount of money. The woman is in a serious condition.

In the Philippines.

Madrid special: A dispatch to the imparcial from Manilla, the capital of the Philippine Islands, says that the rebellion in these islands is spreading and thousands of insurgents infest the outskirts of Manilla. Advices from the Caroline and Marrines Islands say that risings are imminent there.

Fifteen Were Killed.

The loss of life by the explosion which destroyed the Von Cromer match factory at Aschaffe, Edenburg, was much greater than previously reported. Fifteen women and girls employed in the main building were killed and many persons working in an adjoining building were fatally or seriously injured.

Court House Burned.

The Galveston, (Tex.) County-house is a mass of flames, and it is doubtful if any of the records outside of those in the steel fire proof vaults will be saved, and it is thought these may be badly damaged. The loss of the records will approximate $100,000; insured.

The Jackson-Walling Case.

Frankfort (Ky.) special: The attorneys of Jackson and Walling have asked the Court of Appeals for thirty days' time in which to file petitions for a rehearing. The date of the execution will not be fixed until after January 1.

Bankers Indicted.

The United States grand jury at Helena, Mont., have returned four indictments against officers of the defunct First National Bank, which failed recently. Two indictment are against E. D. Edgerton and two against George H. Hill.

Top of Baby's Head Gone.

The infant child of Charles Tatman, living eight miles west of Chillicothe, Ohio, fell into the fire and was burned to death. The top of its head was burned completely off before it was found.

Steamer Safe.

The German steamer, Eduard Bohl, which was reported to have been lost at sea while on her way to the West African colonies, has arrived safely at Lashalimas, Canary Islands.

Salvini Is No More.

Florence special: Alexander Salvini, the son of Tomaso Salvini, the great Italian actor, is dead. His death resulted from intestinal tuberculosis.

Will Not Abdicate.

The report that Don Carlos, the pretender to the Spanish throne, intends to abdicate his claims in favor of Don Jaime, his son, is not true.

Couldn't Catch It.

The cruiser Newask, has returned to Key West. She reported that she had been unable to overhaul the filibusterer, Three Friends.

LURED TO HIS DEATH.

ANTONIO MACEO THE VICTIM OF SPAIN'S TREACHERY.

Insurgent Commander, with His Staff, Shot Down—Marquis Ahumeda Lays the Plot—A Conference Invitation Brings the Rebel to the Shambles.

Led Into a Trap.

Justo Carrillo, a well-known Cuban of Jacksonville, Fla., brother of the Cuban general Carrillo, has received the following letter from a trustworthy correspondent in Havana confirming the reports of the death of Antonio Maceo, and showing that he was killed by treachery:

"Our brave general, Antonio Maceo, and the greater part of his staff have been murdered by the Spaniards, Maj. Cirujeda acting the part of assassin, with Dr. Maximo Zertucha as an assistant in the horrible drama.

"Convinced that notwithstanding his enormous army he could do nothing against our gallant leader, who had so repeatedly defeated the Spanish generals in Pinar del Rio, Weyler conceived the idea of appeasing his beastly instincts by cold-blooded murder, and making the best of the secret relations between Dr. Zertucha and the marquis of Ahumada he planned with the latter his diabolical scheme. Weyler took the field, and in his absence Ahumada proposed, through Zertucha, a conference with Maceo, to take place at a certain point in the province of Havana, with the view of arranging plans for the cessation of hostilities. The basis was to be Cuba's independence and a monetary indemnity to Spain, together with certain advantages that should be agreed upon for Spanish commerce and Spanish capital invested there.

"To carry out the plan the agreement was that orders should be given to the detachments of troops stationed on the trocha in the section between Mariel and Guanajay to allow Maceo, with his staff, to pass the military line unmolested. Time was required to mature these arrangements and to give them all the appearance of truth. Ahumada feigned that before acting he must make them known to Weyler for his previous approval. This explains the sudden arrival of Weyler in Havana and his prompt return to Pinar del Rio.

"The conditions and place of the meeting having been agreed on, Maceo crossed the trocha over the road to Guanajay without being molested by the forts, but as soon as he arrived at the place decided upon he and his party were greeted by a tremendous volley from the troops under Maj. Cirujeda, who lay conveniently in ambush. Most of the officers on his staff fell with Gen. Maceo. Zertucha is alive because he was aware of the scheme and remain in the rear."

Dr. Palma's Statement.

Dr. Estrada Palma, of New York, made the following statement:

"I received a telegram from my agents in Jacksonville, affirming the news that Gen. Maceo and his staff came into conflict with Ahumada, Weyler's lieutenant, and were murdered. Dr. Zertucha was present. Gen. Weyler, on addressing the crowd from the balcony of his palace, in Havana, seemed anxious to shun the responsibility of Maceo's death. That was apparent when he declared that the 'victory' belonged to Ahumada. It is possible that his conscience began to feel the pangs of remorse.

"This very act of the Spanish governor proves the strength of the revolution. They cannot crush it by open warfare. They must resort to the assassin's knife. They dared not face Maceo, so they had to stab him in the back."

ANTONIO MACEO.

BAD DOLLARS GALORE.

Counterfeit Silver Money in Wide Circulation.

Shrewd counterfeiters, supposed to be located in British Columbia, China, Honolulu, or Mexico, have flooded the West and the Southwest during the last ten months with real silver dollars, as good or better, in point of bullion contained in each coin, than those issued from Uncle Sam's mints, and of equally excellent workmanship. Secret service officers have been at work for nearly a year trying to locate the place of manufacture of these dangerous counterfeits, but it is only recently that they have acknowledged the extent to which the bogus coin has been issued and put into circulation. The dollar in question will stand any assay test and can be detected only by a clever expert. But they are counterfeit just the same, and the people who manufacture and "shove" them will, if captured, be tried for counterfeiting.

Andrew Mason, superintendent of the United States office in New York, says: "I got hold of two of them while doing some work in the San Francisco mint about ten months ago. The coins I examined were of excellent workmanship and calculated to deceive almost everybody. They contained enough silver of sufficient fineness to stand any assay. Indeed, one that I assayed was only 1-1,000 deficient in fineness, and it was just a little over weight—contained more silver than the standard dollar issued from the Government mints, in fact. There were two or three slight points of difference between the counterfeit and a true dollar which would lead an expert to detect it upon close examination. One of the letters in an inscription was imperfect, and the tip of one of the eagle's wings was also a little out of line, but it was a most dangerous counterfeit."

GREAT PEACE TREATY.

Permanent Court of Arbitration for Anglo-American Affairs.

The negotiations between the United States and Great Britain for a treaty of general arbitration, covering all subjects of difference between the two English speaking nations, present and prospective has advanced to a stage of completeness far beyond that which the public has had reason to expect. The purpose of Secretary Olney and Sir Julian Pauncefote is to conclude the negotiations within the next three weeks. All the substantial features of the treaty have been agreed on, and from the present status of the negotiations it is believed the following will be the important terms of the treaty

"1. A term of five years from the date of the exchange of ratification within which the treaty shall be operative.

"2. A court of arbitration of six members, three to be drawn from the judiciary of the United States and three from the judiciary of Great Britain.

"3. The submission to this tribunal of all differences between the two nations, now pending or to arise within the period of five years, this not to include the Behring Sea question or the Venezuela question, now before independent commissions, but to include the question of the boundary between Alaska and British North America."

The completion of this treaty will mark an important epoch in the relations between the two English-speaking nations, and in the judgment of those who have been most identified with its consummation it will be the most important document of a peaceful character in the history of their mutual dealings. The President made passing reference to the subject in his recent message, and the negotiations have proceeded with surprising unanimity, so that those engaged in the work confidently believe that it will be fully agreed upon, and the signatures of the contracting persons placed to the documents within the period named.

Aside from the previously referred-to points it can be stated in a general way that the terms of the treaty and such as to "clear the board" of all the vexatious questions which have arisen between the United States and Great Britain. These have been numerous in recent years, and some of them have threatened serious consequences.

GONE WITH A GYPSY.

Princess of Chimay Elopes with a Hungarian Fiddler.

The Princess of Chimay and Caraman, who was a rich American girl, has ruined her life for the sake of a wretched Hungarian musician, named Tsigane. She has deserted her husband, Prince Joseph of Chimay and Caraman of Belgium, and her two children and has fled with a man who only recently made a scanty living by furnishing gypsy music in Paris restaurants. She had been married only six years, and the splendor that marked her wedding has not yet been forgotten, even in Paris.

The Princess was Miss Clara Ward, of Detroit, Mich. She was worth $3,000,000 in her own right. Her elopement with this Hungarian musician has amazed her friends. Where she could have met the man or how the meetings which must have taken place could have been so skillfully arranged as to be kept secret, are mysteries to Parisian society. Prince Joseph will at once institute proceedings against his wife for divorce, and will claim possession of the two children whom she left behind in her flight. The elder is a girl, Countess Marie, born in 1891, and the younger a boy, Prince Marie Joseph, born in 1894. Prince Joseph is a member of the Belgian Chamber of Representatives. His ancestral home, a magnificent estate, is in the province of Hainault.

PRINCESS OF CHIMAY.

Madge York and James Gentry.

Gentry, who was an actor in the same company with Madge York, murdered her in a fit of jealousy. He was sentenced to be hanged, and is now confined in a Philadelphia prison awaiting the time when the sentence is to be carried out. None of his friends or relatives is allowed to see him, and he is said to be going insane through remorse and solitude.

The memorial organ presented to the First Presbyterian Church of Richfield Springs, N. Y., by Mrs. Emmons Blaine was dedicated Sunday afternoon.

Edward Armbruster, aged 65, an old soldier, until recently in the Dayton, Ohio, soldiers' home, committed suicide with paris green.

HOOSIER HAPPENINGS

NEWS OF THE WEEK CONCISELY CONDENSED.

What Our Neighbors are Doing—Matters of General and Local Interest—Marriages and Deaths—Accidents and Crimes—Personal Pointers About Indianians.

Minor State Items.

Bogus coal checks used in Evansville led the Council to pass an ordinance establishing scales in different parts of the city.

An epidemic of hog cholera has been raging in Bartholomew County for several months past. The loss to the farmers will amount to $20,000.

Plan is afoot at Terre Haute to make a park of the Nine Mile Island in the Wabash river, next summer. A packet line will be established between the town and the island.

Ross, the 16-year-old son of City Treasurer Bryan of Lebanon, was perhaps fatally injured in jumping off the westbound fast freight as it passed through Brazil.

A little daughter of Mrs. Jennie Wilcox, aged 7 years, was burned to death by her clothes catching fire at the home of her mother, near Bono, eight miles from Mitchell.

Swell girls of Logansport have heaped coals of fire on the boys' heads by sending out invitations to a leap year ball and writing at the bottom, "Cabs will call for the gentlemen."

Gus Zwissig, Hammond carpenter, was found dead on the railroad track, with his legs cut off and his brains spilling out. Coroner supposes that he tried to pass between two freight trains.

Mrs. Ferd Tribele of Newburg, near Brazil, tried to take her life with laudanum. Twice before she tried the same trick, but the doctors always arrived too soon with their pumps and antidotes.

While out hunting Dr. J. J. Shultz of Delphi, was accidentally shot and dangerously injured by C. B. Lyon. A number of birdshot took effect in his face, and it is thought he will lose the sight of one eye.

The Jackson County Circuit Court awarded Frank Gates $10,000 damages against the B. & O. S. W. Railroad. Gates was a conductor, and lost his arm while making a coupling at Dillsboro in November, 1895.

W. E. Lytton of Bedford, committed suicide by shooting himself near the right temple. Despondency is the supposed cause. Until recently he was freight and ticket agent for the Lake Erie and Western at Montpelier.

Fred. Kruchenberger, aged 18, and George Sturm, aged 15, sons of well-to-do farmers of Allen County, quarreled. Kruchenberger stabbed Sturm in the neck with a pen-knife, severing the jugular vein. The young murderer was arrested.

In a quarrel at Washington, George Foyles, threw a stone at Floyd Sherrill, who drew a knife and plunged it into Foyles' back, inflicting a probably fatal wound. Sherrill and an alleged accomplice, James McBride, are under arrest.

At Petersburg an attempt was made to wreck the home of Town Marshal Joe Kinman. Seven large sticks of dynamite were placed in the front yard of Kinman's residence, and to which was attached some fifty feet of fuse. The latter had been ignited, but went out before reaching the explosives. The Marshal claims to know who the miscreant is, but refuses to give out any names.

Muncie men who bet on Kentucky can't come to an agreement. The Democrats hold that McKinley did not carry the State, because he did not get all the electoral votes. The Republicans think the State went Republican because the Canton man got most of the votes. The money in question amounts to $2,000, and the County Prosecutor is said to be preparing to bring suit against the betters and put the money in the school fund.

While descending a steep hill, near Shelbyville, the team of Wade Brant took fright and ran away. Brant was hauling three tons of baled hay, which was upset with Brant underneath it. During the time he was underneath the hay the man's suffering was intense. His injuries are serious and he will die. The team continued its flight, and running into the spring wagon of Mrs. George McCain, threw that lady out and fatally injured her.

John W. Slider, Councilman of Kokomo, attempted to kill himself. He shot himself with a double-barreled shotgun. The charge carried away the scalp above and back of the right ear, but did not penetrate the skull. He tried to shoot again but was prevented by his sister, who was attracted by the report. The wound is not fatal. Recently, Mr. Slider was arrested on the charge of stealing $2 worth of gas pipe from a plumber, and it is thought the disgrace of the arrest unbalanced his mind. Slider is wealthy, owning a brick business row and other real estate.

Patents have been issued to Indianians as follows: Samuel Borrow, Kempton, assignor to E. B. Hart and J. C. Brown, Lafayette, blower; Albert L. Bernardin, Evansville, bottle stopper; William R. Cunningham, Frankfort, brick or tile cutting machine; Thomas Duncan, Fort Wayne, wattameter for measuring electric currents, and electric meter; Lorenzo D. Ennis, Lyons, well drilling machine; Gustave Fensky, Chesterton, protector for railway defect cards; Martha E. Hall, New Market, pattern or chart; Charles A. Langer, Fort Wayne, vegetable cutting and hedges; grating machine; Henry Mater, Lago, fence post; James Mitchell, Warren, implement for plashing hedges; Joshua H. Rettig, North Manchester, igniter for gas engines; Thomas B. Seibert, North Indianapolis, wheel; James M. VanMeter, Cambridge City, vise; Vanburton Willits, Indianapolis, bicycle.

The other evening, Mrs. Nancy V. Lockwood, of the Cottage Hotel, Shelbyville, complained of her thumb paining her, and retired early in the evening otherwise in her usual good health. The pain increased and the arm began swelling and continued doing so until death relieved her.

Muncie woman's club will make a fight for compulsory education in the next Legislature. In that town alone, 200 boys under 14 years of age are employed in the factories. The glass factories employ most of the boys, and the glass workers will oppose the women who are working for such a law.

After attending to some business in Lafayette, J. F. Smith and David Parker drove homeward in the country, but ran into a telephone pole, and both were thrown out. Smith, who was 75 years of age, was so injured that he died within an hour.

Congressman Jesse Overstreet has settled the various postoffice fights in his district by announcing that he will, at the proper time, recommend the following men for the principal offices outside of Indianapolis: Franklin, W. T. Pritchard, with O. I. Jones deputy; Edinburg, W. E. Downs; Greenwood, John Bishop; South Port, C. E. Hardesty; Whiteland, W. E. Fitzpatrick; Trafalgar, James Forsythe.

NATIONAL SOLONS.

REVIEW OF THEIR WORK AT WASHINGTON.

Detailed Proceedings of Senate and House—Bills Passed or Introduced in Either Branch—Questions of Moment to the Country at Large.

The Legislative Grind.

In the House Friday Rev. Mr. Cowden the blind chaplain, referred in his invocation to the action of the House in prohibiting the sale of liquor in the Capitol. "We thank Thee, O Lord," said he, "that the House is no longer responsible for the liquor traffic within the halls of the national Capitol. Grant, we pray Thee, that the bill passed here yesterday will go through the regular channels and speedily become a law, never again to be repealed in the history of our nation." At the conclusion of the prayer, half a hundred members applauded vigorously, but Speaker Reed promptly suppressed the outburst. On motion of Mr. Dingley, the floor leader, it was agreed that when the House adjourn it be to meet Monday.

Beyond agreeing to a resolution for a two weeks' recess the proceedings in the House Monday were almost entirely devoid of public interest. Most of the day was spent in a struggle over the bill of Mr. Morse of Massachusetts to render the laws relating to the sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia more stringent. The reported assassination of Maceo, the Cuban patriot, and its effect on the attitude of this country toward the revolutionists was almost the sole topic of conversation on the floor before the House met. No resolutions, however, were offered in open session. Among the resolutions introduced in the Senate was one by Senator Morgan of Alabama calling upon the President to send to the Senate copies of the papers relating to Cuban affairs which was referred to in the recent report of Secretary Olney. The resolution asks for especial information in regard to the trial of persons captured on the Competitor. Representative M. V. Howard of Alabama introduced a resolution recognizing the republic of Cuba as a free and independent government.

Senator Morgan of Alabama held the attention of the Senate and well-filled galleries for an hour Tuesday by his earnest advocacy of a strong and decisive policy in dealing with the Cuban question. He asked for the adoption of the resolution presented Monday, requesting the Secretary of State for the papers in the Competitor case and in other cases involving the arrest of American citizens by Spanish authorities. The resolution was agreed to. The Senate took up the bill pensioning Nancy Allabach, which had been vetoed by the President, and passed it over the veto. In the House a bill to reorganize the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company was passed without division, after certain amendments had been adopted. The House then entered upon the consideration of the Loud bill to amend the law relating to the transmission of second-class mail matter. The bill met with the most intense opposition from certain quarters. It denies the right of serial novels to admission to the mails at the newspaper cent per pound rates; denies to newspapers the sample copy privilege; prohibits the return of unsold publications at pound rates and makes some other changes in the present law, designed to correct existing abuses. It is estimated that the abuses of the law have cost the government $240,000,000 in the last ten years. No final action was taken.

The session of the Senate Wednesday developed the most eventful and exciting debate that either branch of Congress has heard in a long time. It brought forward the recognized leaders of the various parties and elements, including such conspicuous figures as Sherman, Frye, Teller, Gorman, Vest, Aldrich, Platt, Mitchell (Ore.), Chandler, Hale and Allen in notable statements on the leading questions which have engaged the attention of Congress and the country of late. Not only were the lines laid down on tariff and finance, but the debate partook of all the pent-up feeling resulting from the recent national contest. Mr. Sherman closed the debate by saying that he felt the Dingley bill could never be passed. Mr. Bailey (Dem., Texas) created a ripple of excitement at the opening session of the House by asking for the immediate consideration of a resolution to investigate the construction of the battleship Texas. The resolution was referred. The House on motion of Mr. Hull, Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, went into committee of the whole for the consideration of the army appropriation bill. The House adjourned, leaving the bill unfinished.

The Senate Thursday passed the immigration bill known as the Lodge bill, with a new section providing that the exclusion shall not apply to persons arriving from Cuba during the continuance of the present disorders there. As passed, the bill amends the immigration laws so as to exclude from admission to the United States all persons over 16 years of age who cannot read and write the language of their native country or some other language, but an admissable immigrant, over the age of 16, may bring in with him, or send for, his wife or parent or grandparent or minor child or granchild, notwithstanding the inability to read and write. The House passed the third of the regular appropriation bills, that for the support of the army, and entered upon the consideration of the legislative, executive and judicial bill. The army bill as passed makes no provision for the army and navy hospital at Hot Springs, Ark. The House also passed several bills relating to the District of Columbia and three resolutions for the use of flags of the war department, government reservations, etc., on the occasion of Mr. McKinley's inauguration.

CHAPTER XX.

When Stamer came to the gable of the house next but one to the public house, and the wall of which formed one half of the northern boundary of the yard, he paused and listened. He could hear no sound of life or movement near him beyond the snort or cough of a horse now and then.

After a pause of two or three minutes, he stooped, slipped off his boots, slung them round his neck, and having hitched the crook of his heavy stick to a belt he wore under his waistcoat, he laid hold of the waterpipe that descended from the gutter of the double roof to the yard, and began ascending the gable of the house with surprising agility and speed.

In less than two minutes from the time he first seized the waterpipe he disappeared in the gutter above. He crawled in a few yards from the edge and then reclined against the sloping slates of the roof to rest. The ascent had taken only a couple of minutes, but the exertion had been very great, and he was tired and out of breath.

Then he unscrewed his ferrule and withdrew the tampion and unscrewed the handle of his stick, and was busy in the darkness for awhile with the weapon he carried.

He particularly wished to have a steady hand and arm that night, so he made up his mind that he would rest until five minutes to 12. Then he should get into position. He should creep down the gutter until he came to the gable wall standing up over the roofs of the houses on which he now was lying. He should then be almost opposite the window at which he last night saw the dwarf wind up his clock. He should be a little out of the direct line, but not much. The width of the street was no more from house to house than fifty feet. The distance from the wall of the house he should be on then, and the wall of Forbes' bakery could not be more than sixty feet. The weapon he carried was perfectly trustworthy at a hundred and fifty yards, or more. He had been practicing that afternoon and evening at an old hat forty yards, and he had never missed it once. Forty yards was just double the distance he should be from that window if he were on a parapet instead of being at the coping line, lying on the inside slope of the roof. Allow another ten feet for that. This would bring the distance up to seventy feet at the very outside, and he had never missed once at a hundred and twenty feet. He had given himself now and then a good deal of practice with the gun, for he enjoyed peculiar facilities; because the factory wall by which the lane at the back of his place ran, prevented any one seeing what he was doing, and the noise of the factory drowned the whir of the gun and the whiz of the bullet.

At half-past 11 that night the private bar of the public house held about half a dozen customers, but it lacked the elevating presence of Oscar Leigh, who always gave the assembly a distinctly intellectual air.

A few minutes later, however, the spirits of those present rose, for Mr. Oscar Leigh came in, rubbing his forehead and complaining of the heat.

"I have only a minute or two. I must be off to wind up," said Leigh. "Ten minutes to 12 by your clock, Mr. Williams; that means a quarter to right time.

"It is, I have heard, the most wonderful clock in Chicago," spoke an acquaintance.

"In Chicago! In Chicago! In the world, sir. It is the most wonderful clock ever conceived by man. Well, my time is up. Good-night, gentlemen."

He scrambled off his high stool and was quickly out of the bar. It was now five minutes to 12 o'clock, right time. He crossed the street, and opening the private door of Forbes', went in, closing the door after him.

As he came out John Timmons turned into the street. He went on until he came opposite the window of the clock-room. Here he stood still, thrust his hands deep down in his trousers pockets, and leaning his back against the wall, prepared to watch with his own eyes the winding of the clock.

In less than five minutes the window of the top room, which had been dark, gradually grew illumined until the light came full through the transparent oiled muslin curtain. Timmons could see for all practical purposes as plainly as through glass.

"There Leigh is, anyway," thought Timmons, "working away at his lever. Can it be he was doing the same thing at this hour last night? Nonsense. He was walking away from this place with me at this hour last night as sure as I am here now. I must be going mad. There, he is turning round now and nodding to the men at the bar. They said he did the same last night, and, as I live, there's the clock we were under striking the quarter past again! I must be going mad. I begin to think last night must have been all a dream with me. I don't think he's all right. I don't believe in witchcraft, but there's something wrong here; I'll watch this out anyway."

Whir—whiz!

"Why, what's that over head?"

Timmons looked up, but saw nothing.

"It's some young fellows larking."

He glanced back at the window.

"What a funny way he's nodding his head now. And there's a hole in the curtain and there seems to be a noise in the room. There goes the gas out. I suppose the clock is wound up now. Strange I didn't hear the clock strike the hour, and yet Leigh's light is out."

And John Timmons walked out of Chetwynd street and took his way eastward.

CHAPTER XXI.

On Saturday morning about 9 o'clock Timmons was reposing on the high stool at his doorway. He had bought a morning paper on his way to business, and he now glanced over it casually. Finally he came upon the place where local news was given. His eye caught a large heading. "Fire and Loss of Life in Chetwynd Street." The paragraph was, owing to the late hour at which the event took place, brief. It ran as follows:

"Last night, between half-past 12 and 1 o'clock, a disastrous and fatal fire broke out in the bakery establishment of Mr. Forbes in Chetwynd street. The top floor, where the fire originated, was occupied by Mr. Oscar Leigh, who has lost his life in the burning. Mr. Leigh was engaged in the manufacture of a very wonderful clock, which occupied fully half the room, and which Mr. Leigh invariably wound up every night between 12 and half-past 12.

"It is generally supposed that the eccentric movements of Mr. Leigh were the result of a fit or sudden seizure of some other kind, and that in his struggles some inflammable substance was brought in contact with the gas before it was turned out."

Timmons flung down the paper with a shout, crying, "Dead! Dead! Leigh is dead!"

At that moment the figure of a man appeared at the threshold of the store, and Stamer, with a scowl and a stare, stepped in hastily and looked furtively, fearfully around.

"What are you shoutin' about?" cried Stamer, in a tone of dangerous menace.

"Leigh is dead!" cried Timmons in excitement.

"I know all about that, I suppose," said Stamer, and you shut up, if you don't want to follow him. I'm in no humor for your noise and antics. Do you want to have the coppers down on us?—do you, you idiot!"

"Who are you calling an idiot?" cried Timmons, catching up an iron bar and taking a few steps towards the burglar.

"You, if you want to know. Put that down. Put that bar down, I say. Can you tell me who killed him? If you can't I can." He pointed to himself.

"What!" cried Timmons, starting back, and not quite understanding the other's gesture.

"Now are you satisfied? I thought you guessed. I wouldn't have told you if I didn't think you knew or guessed. I thought you knew, and that, instead of saying a good word to me, you were going to down me and give me up."

Timmons stepped slowly back in horror. "You!" he whispered, bending his head forward and beginning to tremble in every limb. "You! You did it! You did this! You, Stamer!"

Stamer merely nodded, and looked like a hunted wild beast. He wore the clothes of last night, but was without the whiskers or beard. All the time he cowered in the shelter of the shutters, he kept his right hand behind his back. He looked towards the opening and then his round, bloodshot eyes went back to the rigid figure of Timmons. "I don't mind what you say, if you'll only speak to me, only not too loud. No one can hear us. I know that, and no one can listen at the door, without our seeing him. You don't know what I have gone through. I have not been home. I am afraid to go home. I am afraid of everything."

"You murderous villian!"

"It's enough to drive any man mad. I've been wandering about all night. I am more afraid of my wife than of any one else. I don't know why, but I tremble when I think of her, more than of the police, or—or—or——"

"The hangman?"

"Yes. You don't know all. When you do, you'll pity me——"

"The poor, foolish dwarf!"

"Yes. I was afraid he would betray us——"

"Oh, villain!"

"And I got on a roof opposite the window, and when he was working at the lever, I fired, and his head went so—and then so—and then so——"

"Stop it, you murderer!"

"Yes. And I knew it was done. The neck! Yes, I knew the neck was broken, and it was all right."

"If you don't stop it, I'll brain you!"

"Yes. And I got down off the roof and ran. I couldn't help running, and all the time I was running I heard him running after me. I heard him running after me, and I saw his head wagging so—so—so, as he ran. Every step he took, his head wagged, so—and so—and so——"

"If you don't stop that——"

"Yes. I will. I'll stop it. But I could not stop him last night. All the time I ran I couldn't stop him. His head kept wagging and his lame feet kept running after me, and I couldn't stop the feet or the head. I don't know how long I ran, or where I ran, but I could run no more, and I fell up against a wall, and then it overtook me! I saw it as plainly as I see you—plainer, I saw it——"

The man paused a moment to wipe his forehead.

"Do you hear?" he yelled, suddenly flinging his arms up in the air. "Do you hear? Will you believe me now? The steps again! The lame steps again. Do you hear them?"

"Mad!"

"Mad! I told you. Look!"

The figure of a low-sized, deformed dwarf came into the opening and crossed the threshold of the store.

With a groan Stamer fell forward insensible.

CHAPTER XXII.

Timmons uttered a wild yell, and springing away from the wall fled to the extreme end of the store, and then faced round panting and livid.

"Hsh!" said the shrill voice of the man on the threshold. "Private theatricals, I see. I did not know, Mr. Timmons, that you went in for such entertainments. Don't you think, Mr. Timmons, that you ought to ring down the curtain, and that this gentleman, who no doubt represents the villain of the piece confronted with his intended victim, had better get up and look after his breakfast?" He pointed to the prostrate Stamer, who lay motionless upon the sandy floor.

Timmons did not move or speak. The shock had, for the moment, completely bereft him of his senses.

"I have just come back from the country," said the dwarf, "and I thought I'd call on you at once. I should like to have a few moments' conversation with you, if your friend and very able supporter would have the kindness to consider himself alive and fully pardoned by his intended victim."

The prostrate man did not move. Timmons shuddered. He made a prodigious effort and tried to move forward, but had to put his hand against the wall to steady himself. Leigh approached Stamer and touched him with his stick. Stamer did not stir.

"Is there anything the matter with the man? I think there must be, Timmons. What do you mean by running away to the other end of the place? Why, this man is unconscious. I seem to be fated to meet fainting men."

Stamer did not speak, but struggled slowly to his feet, and, assisted by Timmons, walked to the opening and was helped a few yards down the street. There the two parted without a word. By the time Timmons got back he was comparatively composed.

"Are we alone?" asked Leigh impatiently, on Timmons' return.

"We are."

"Hah! I am glad we are. If your friend were connected with racing I should call him a stayer. I came to tell you that I have just got back from Milwaukee. I thought it best to go there and see again the man I had been in treaty with. I not only saw him, but heard a great deal about him, and I am sorry to say I heard nothing good. He is, it appears, a very poor man, and he deliberately misled me as to his position and his ability to pay. I am now quite certain that if I had opened business with him I should have lost anything I intrusted to him, or if not all, a good part."

"Then I am not to meet you at the same place next Thursday night?" asked Timmons. He had not at this moment any interest in the mere business about which they had been negotiating. He was curious about other matters. His mind was now tolerably clear, but flabby and inactive still.

"No. There is no use in your giving me the alloy until I see my way to doing something with it, and I feel bound to say that after this great disappointment I feel greatly discouraged altogether."

"Then, Mr. Leigh, I suppose we are at a standstill?"

"Precisely."

"What you mean, I suppose, Mr. Leigh, is that you do not see your way to going any further?"

"Well, yes. At present I do not see my way to going any further."

"You went to Milwaukee yesterday. May I ask you by what train you went down?"

"Two-thirty in the afternoon."

"And you came back this morning?"

"Yes. Just arrived. I drove straight here, as I told you."

"And you were away from half-past two yesterday until now. You were out of Chicago yesterday from 2:30 until early this morning?"

"Yes; until six this morning. Why are you so curious? You do not, I hope, suspect me of saying anything that is not strictly true?" said Leigh, throwing his head back and striking the sandy floor fiercely with is stick.

"I mean, sir," said Timmons, shaking his minatory finger at him and frowning heavily, "not that I suspect you of lying, but that I am sure you are lying. I was at the public house last night; you were there, too."

Leigh started and drew back. He looked down ad said nothing. He could not tell how much this man knew. Timmons went on:

"I was in the public bar when you came in. You called for rum hot, and you went away at close to twelve o'clock to wind up your clock. I was out then and saw you at the window winding up the clock. I was there when the light went out just at half-past twelve. Now, sir, are you lying or am I?"

Leigh burst into a loud, long, harsh roar of laughter that made Timmons start, it was so weird and unexpected.

BEAUTIFUL HANDS.

Some Hints on How to Acquire and Keep Them.

We cannot all possess beautiful hands, nor can we alter the form or shape of them, but we can take care of them and preserve their skin and health generally. There are all sorts of hands—the long and short, the plump and thin—the white hand of the dainty lady and the more useful one of her working sister.

It has been said that the hand expresses the nature of its owner more accurately than does the face; that he who knows how to read the language of the hand has the key to one's character.

This, however, is a subject to be dealt with by the palmists. We are going to discuss how we can preserve and make the best of the surface of our hands, for it is the quality and texture of the skin that really makes or mars it.

It is very strange how few women realize what an important part their hands play in their general appearance; others, especially men, notice our hands far more than we give them credit for, and it is most disillusionizing to see a dirty, ill-kept hand. It is against all rules of refinement and delicacy, and lace ruffles ill become the wrist of a soiled hand, or one that is fringed with dirty finger nails or ragged quicks. A well-kept white hand is what every woman should desire and try to have, and most women can do so if they will only expend a short time daily on the care of them. A well-cared-for hand denotes refinement. Many of us are obliged to use our hands daily in the operation of household and other work, which tends to roughen and harden them. And so many women let their hands go, thinking that it is not only difficult, but impossible to attain or keep any degree of beauty on this account. This is a great mistake, for it is quite possible, and really not difficult, for even hard workers to have nice hands without any sacrifice of duty, if they only give a little time and thought to the subject. You will see women who otherwise might lay claim to great personal refinement with hands that could scarcely be called clean. Some women seem afraid to wash their hands often, on the plea that it makes them red and rough. Of course, too much washing has its drawbacks, but it is more often the carelessness in drying that does the mischief. Careful drying is absolutely necessary if we would wish to keep the skin smooth and white. A very good plan is to keep some dry oatmeal and rub them with a little of it after washing.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

A Pneumatic Tunnel.

A curious defect has been discovered in Budapest's underground railway. There is not enough ventilating apertures in the tunnel, and the trains rushing through it compress the air in it like that in the tube of a pneumatic gun. On some occasions the cars have been lifted from the track, and the passengers have been almost suffocated. One stretch of tunnel, two miles long, has only a single ventilating aperture, making it almost an air-tight compartment.

There are baseball clubs in all the mountain towns of Tennessee this year. The craze is more widespread than ever.

Pleasure must first have the warrant that it is without sin; then the measure without excess.

UNCLE SAM'S BIGGEST GUN.

Mightiest of guns ever built in America, and one of the largest yet constructed anywhere, is the 16-inch engine of war on which work is now being pushed at the Watervliet Arsenal. It will be 49.67 feet long, weigh 125 tons, have a range of sixteen miles, and will penetrate 27½ inches of the best steel armor at two miles. Mounted at Fort Wadsworth, in case of hostilities with Spain, this gun would be able to hurl a 2,370-pound projectile at a man-of-war before she got within seven miles of Sandy Hook.

TRAMPS AT WASHINGTON, D. C.

Of Late Years They Gather There in Great Force.

Washington, D. C., has been for years a favorite winter resort for tramps, but since the famous march of Coxey's army it has become a veritable mecca, whither all the bums and hobos turn in fall. Tramps are of two kinds: The unfortunates who want to work and can find no job, and the vicious, who would die sooner than work. Of this latter class are almost all the thousands that are now gathered at the nation's capital.

On the Potomac flats whole companies of them "camp out." They gather boards and boxes and erect shelters, where they contentedly sit and discuss ways and means to beg or steal food. They frequently resort to intimidation when all else fails, and seldom have to go hungry.

Gangs of them go on foraging expeditions, and when they return to the flats with their booty, the pot is made to boil, while the crowd intently watches the culinary proceedings. After dinner the hobo feels that he is a great man, and he lights his pipe and struts with all the self-importance of the "big-headed" society man.

His pipe smoked, he goes out on an errand of a different nature. He has had food—now he must drink. He "works" the avenues, streets and residences until he has collected a quarter of a dollar. If he is social he returns to his chums and the "growler" travels to the saloon of ill-repute, where slop is sold instead of beer, until funds have disappeared or the crowd is so drunk that no one can carry the can. Often the man with the can is overcome by the way and is found by his fellow bums serenely sleeping beside a fence.

Only when the weather is bad do the hobos seek the shelter of the police stations, and even then they are apt to depart with muttered curses if told that a bath would precede a bunk. The real hobo avoids cleanliness as the fawn flies the hunter.

And now in conclusion: There are several hundred thousand of these hobos in this country. What shall be done with them?

A Marvelous Indian Paper.

The marvelous Oxford Indian paper was first introduced in 1875. Since then, says the Paper World, it has revolutionized the Bible and prayer book trade, and it is now used for all the more popular devotional books throughout the world.

In the year 1841, an Oxford graduate is said to have brought home from the far East a small fold of extremely thin paper, which was manifestly more opaque and tough for its substance than any paper then manufactured in Europe. He presented it to the Clarendon Press.

The late Thomas Combe, who had only recently been appointed printer to the university, found it to be just sufficient for twenty-four copies of the smallest Bible then in existence—diamond 24mo—and printed an edition of that number, which bore the date of 1842.

These books were barely a third of the usual thickness, and, although as much as $100 apiece was offered for them, no copies were sold, and they were presented to the queen and other distinguished persons.

All efforts to trace the paper to its source were futile, and as years rolled on the circumstance was forgotten. But early in 1874 a copy fell into the hands of Arthur E. Miles, who showed it to Mr. Frowe, and experiments were at once set on foot at the Oxford University paper mills with the object of producing a similar paper.

The first attempts were failures, but success was achieved, and Aug. 24, 1875, an edition of the diamond 24mo Bible, similar in all respects to the twenty-four copies printed in 1842, was placed on sale.

This was the first Oxford Bible published by Mr. Frowe. The feat of compression was looked upon as astounding, the demand was enormous, and before very long a quarter of a million copies had been sold. The paper, when subjected to severe rubbing, instead of breaking into holes, assumed a texture resembling chamois leather, and a strip only three inches wide was found able to support a quarter of a hundredweight without yielding.

The secret of its manufacture, it may be said, is known to only three living beings.

LIFE-SAVING STATIONS.

How They Are Arranged and the Duties of the Keepers.

The sitation itself is a two-story house built securely and solidly upon some good site along the beach; it is comfortable and roomy, furnished by the government, and has the boat-room and kitchen on the lower floor; a large bedroom for the keeper, another for the surfmen, and a store-room occupy the second story.

The boat-room is large, and opens by great double doors upon the beach. It contains the life-boat and all the life-saving apparatus—always in perfect order and readiness.

The crew consists of a keeper and six surfmen, though some stations number seven surfmen; these men are graduates from no naval college, but have served their apprenticeship with Old Ocean as their master; they must be able to handle a boat in the roughest weather, and to face all the dangers of the deep.

Each man must undergo a strict medical examination, and must bring to the station his certificate of good health; and he is also obliged to sign an agreement to faihtfully perform all duties.

The keeper receives a salary of $900 a year (up to 1892 it was $700); he must be at the station all the year round, but is allowed a month's leave of absence in summer if he gives up his pay. A surfman receives $65 a month, is at the station during eight months of the year, and has the privilege of leaving the station for twenty-four hours every two weeks—but in lonely stations they generally remain for the active season, which begins September 1, ending May 1; when a man leaves in May, he goes where he pleases, and if he does not return in September the keeper gets another man in his place for the next winter season.

The keeper is held responsible for the condition of everything connected with the station; he must drill the men in their duties, divide the work evenly, and see that the men are orderly. No liquor is allowed on the premises; drunkenness or neglect of duty is punished by instant dismissal from the service; the man who is detailed to cook must keep the kitchen in perfect order; and each has his share of the housework to perform, for no women live at the stations.

The crew are numbered by the keeper from one to six, and at midnight preceding September 1 the station goes into commission; at that hour the keeper gives patrol equipments to two of the surfmen, and they start out on the first patrol, and the active season has fairly begun; everything runs like clock-work after that, and as strict a discipline is maintained as on board a man-of-war.—St. Nicholas.

All He Wanted.

Emory Storrs lost a divorce case by the wit of his opponent. He had brought suit for divorce on behalf of a woman, who asked for possession of two children. The husband made a vigorous protest, and employed a young lawyer of ability to defend the suit.

The defense had the best case, so far as the evidence went, but Mr. Storrs made one of his characteristically strong speeches, with an eloquent plea on behalf of the mother and her two children. The effect on the jury was apparent. He concluded his speech with that trite exclamation of Patrick Henry, "Give me liberty or give me death!"

The young attorney arose deliberately and said:

"Mr. Bailiff, you can give me a glass of water."

Bobby—"Papa, what is the difference between an old maid and a new woman?" Papa—"An old maid, my son, is a woman who, having failed to win a man, avoids men. A new woman, having similarly failed, tries to become one of them."—New York World.

TREASURY AT NIGHT.

GUARDING UNCLE SAM'S MONEY FROM BURGLARS.

Although Audacious Cracksmen Have Sized Up the Situation with a View of Making a Big Haul, Not a Dollar Has Been Stolen.

Midnight Among the Money Bags.

Washington correspondence:

ABOUT the most difficult place to penetrate day or night without being seen, watched and guarded is the United States treasury. In all there are seventy guardians of the treasury, under a captain and two lieutenants. Nearly all of the watchmen are men who were in the war as mere boys, and are therefore now in the prime of life. They are thoroughly trained and reliable. Very few treasury watchmen have been discharged for negligence since the foundation of the Government. The possibility of a raid upon the treasury is regarded as remote, but the watch force is disciplined to stand by for such a raid at any time.

Among the old Treasury Department watchmen there is a tradition that the lamented Jesse James made seven distinct tours, on seven separate occasions, of the Treasury Department, with an eye to business. This legend they relate to visitors, who, after having handled a package of greenbacks, said to contain $5,000,000, are willing to believe anything. If Mr. James really did make such visits, he found his presence instantly known to twenty-five men of exceedingly determined appearance, the majority of whom had done too much picket and patrol duty during the war to be caught napping in times of peace, each armed with a persuasive seven-chambered army pistol, and none looking as if he would hesitate the fractional part of a second to use it if occasion required. Once the United States Treasurer himself, while prowling about the vaults on a midnight tour of personal inspection, was challenged and halted, and forced to hold up both hands, under menace of a leveled rifle, until his captor, who did not know him, had sent for the lieutenant to identify him.

AT THE MAIN DOOR.

To observe the fashion with which the night watchmen "cover" their posts, it might easily be thought that the secret service is in constant receipt of information as to contemplated treasury robberies. Yet never a dollar has ever been taken from the treasury by force. A sneak thief once got in his work to the extent of $60,000 in bills, which he expertly plucked from one of the tables in the redemption division. But there has never been a hold-up. The secret service knows that many celebrated cracksmen, including "Little Jimmy" Hope, who successfully pulled off the great Manhattan Bank robbery, have from time to time contemplated the conversion of a few millions of treasury money to their private use, but they all thought better of it. They decided the undertaking to be of too colossal a character.

Down to the incumbency of Secretary Folger there would, it is claimed, have been no great difficulty for accomplished and nervy cracksmen of the first rank to have done a bit of nightwork in the big marble cash repository of the Government. When Mr. Folger took the reins of the treasury the watch actually depended on common police whistles. He completely changed and reorganized the system. An elaborate electrical alarm system was introduced, the force of watchmen was greatly amplified, and the old iron safes were replaced by the modern steel affairs with intricate combinations. The gold and silver vaults were given steel casings around their common shells of masonry, and fitted with time locks. If there were no watch force on constant guard at the Treasury Department, however, burglars could do about as they chose with the safes in the Treasury Building. The safes are as good as any made, but even manufacturers of safes are compelled to reluctantly admit that the safe has not yet been devised that the modern cracksman cannot get into.

An expert manipulator of safe combinations was summoned to the treasury from New York not long ago to open a safe that declined to respond to its figures. The expert opened the safe in half a minute. Then he made a tour of the building, and opened every one of the safes. There was not one of them that he did not get into within fourteen minutes after making the first turn of the combination handle. He modestly stated to the officials accompanying him that he did not amount to much as a safe opener, and that there were cracksmen at large who might have done everything he did in less time.

The watch force is divided into three reliefs, like an army guard, only the treasury watchman is on post longer than the soldier. Each of the night watches is made up of twice the number of men in the day watch. A gang of robbers, to effect an entrance at the main door after nightfall, would have to use a battering ram on the iron outer door, and by the time they had stove it in they would be flanked by the entire police force of the District, the soldiery from Fort Myer and the arsenal and the marines from the barracks, with all of which forces the treasury has direct alarm connections.

There is something eerie about the big treasury building at night. Ten minutes before midnight the watchmen of the "mid" watch are all on hand at the main entrance, and they all make their appearance at the iron door at once, to the very minute of time, apparently springing from the ground. The silence is only broken by the frequent ringing of the post-register above the head of the lieutenant of the watch. Their lowered voices seem to fit with the surrounding solemnity. From their manner one might easily imagine that there was heavy fighting work cut out for them before dawn—a kind of "just-before-the-battle" manner that is distinctly impressive.

Each watchman has a regular permanent post. He is not permitted to smoke, read or write while on duty. His business is solely to watch. If he goes to sleep and is discovered by the watch patrol he is certain to be discharged upon being reported the next day. At the end of each round the watchman touches his electrical button, which informs the lieutenant of the watch at his desk at the main door that everything is well with him.

The two most important posts are those which include within their limits the gold and silver vaults, which are side by side. The watchman who looks after the cash room vault is locked in the cash room when he goes on post, and patrols the gallery at frequent intervals, registering each visit to the door of the vault as he passes the electrical button. Thus, if a robber contrived to get into the cash room and overcame the watchman, the cessation of registering reports would inform the lieutenant of the watch that something had gone wrong on that post. Then, by means of the electrical signals, the lieutenant would quickly assemble a force of watchmen of whatever size he considered necessary. These watchmen would go to the room of the captain of the watch—in which, by the way, is hung, framed, the silk American flag in which Booth's spur caught when he jumped from the Ford's Theater box after having shot President Lincoln—take each a Springfield rifle from the rifle rack, strap on one of the army campaign belts crowded full of cartridges, and proceed in a body to the cash room.

The watchman who stands guard over the gold and silver vaults is locked in an ante-room, the hall end of which is formed of heavy wire, leading to the vaults. He remains thus locked up during the entire eight hours of his guard tour, and is seated beside the vault doors. He touches off his registering apparatus at regular intervals. At the present time the watchman guarding these vaults has the responsibility of $140,000,000 in silver coin and $3,000,000 in gold coin on his hands. The bulk of the United States gold bullion and coin is kept at the subtreasury in New York. The silver is packed in oblong boxes, ten bags to a box, one thousand dollars to a bag. The silence of the tomb reigns in the anteroom where the vault watchman puts in his eight hours.

By pressing his ear against the vault doors, the faint clicking of the time locks, penetrating the six tons of steel, may be heard. The patrol passes the cage very frequently, and somehow it is hard to throw off the impression that this patrolling watchman is a prison turnkey, the chief of a death watch, keeping his eye upon the warder, who, in his turn, incessantly embraces within his view a criminal passing his last night upon earth. The sub-basement of the treasury at midnight is calculated to render the most prosaic and phlegmatic man into a morbidly imaginative person.

Two or three times a month, on an average, treasury employes in charge of safes in their respective divisions forget to lock them up at the close of the day's business. It is the duty of the watch patrol not only to see that none of the safes are open, but to try them to see that they are locked. When one of these patrolmen happens upon an unlocked safe, he immediately informs the lieutenant of the watch, who without making any attempt to lock the safe, places his seal over a point covering the door and the frame, and stations a special watchman to see that it is not tampered with. When the employe who has negligently left the safe open reaches his division the next morning he must stand by for results, for an elaborate report is made of every case of the kind.

It Tickled Boston.

In one of Lowell's letters to Briggs, the former mentions Thackeray's visit to Boston, and says that during the meeting of Thackeray with Ticknor, the latter said: "One mark of a gentleman is to be well-looking—for good blood shows itself in good features." "A pretty speech," replied Thackeray, "for one broken-nosed man to make to another," and in the letter Lowell added: "All Boston has been secretly tickled about it."

A man is hopelessly dull when he doesn't know when he is being made fun of.

The Books

The examination of the books and accounts of Ex-treasurer Fair was finished Saturday, and nothing new was discovered. The papers of the treasurer were carefully gone over, covering all the business of the past two years. The results were then compared with the auditor's books, and lacked only twenty cents of being exactly the same. So all the work so far goes for nothing, but of course it had to be done in a case of this kind. But the shortage in the amount of money turned over by the treasurer still stares the bondsmen in the face.

Indiana's irthday

South Bend Tribune.

Dec. 11 was Indiana's birthday. As a state she is 80 years old having been admitted to the union on Dec. 11, 1816. At that time the population was some 70,000 and to-day it is considerably over 2,000,000. Then there were but a few counties where to-day there are 92 with over 1,000 townships, the combined area of which is 35,912 square miles.

Indiana was settled by the French at Vincennes, down in the southwestern part, 1702, and continued under their control and subject to the governor of Canada until the close of the French and Indian wars in 1763. From that time until 1783, period of 20 years, it was owned by Great Britain. As a result of the conquest of Vincennes in 1779 by Gen. George Rogers Clark, in the service of Virginia, the state became United States territory about 1784. Virginia relinquished her claim to the Northwest Territory in 1784 to the general government and in 1787 the Northwestern Territory was organized. In 1800 Ohio was cut off and the name of Indiana Territory was given to the remaining district. Gen. William Henry Harrison was named for governor. Later on in 1809 other territories were organized which reduced Indiana Territory to its present area. Until 1813 the territorial capital continued at Vincennes when it was removed to Corydon and while there the territory was given statehood. In 1821 the capital was again removed, Indianapolis becoming the seat of the state government and continuing so.

Indiana has always prospered. It is true she is deeply in debt but the debt is being decreased and the state is forging ahead daily. Her magnificent industries are the pride of the west. Her educational advantages are excellent and her people are hospitable, energetic and progressive. Indiana is a good state to live in and the name of Hoosier is an honor of which the native of no other state can boast. Long may it and Indiana live.

Chandler Inquest

There have been many rumors in regard to the death of the late Thomas Chandler, and to set them at rest we give in substence, the result of the coroner's inquest, obtained from Coroner, J. W. Hughes himself. It appears that just before Mr. Chandler's death, he was suffering considerable and the attending physician, Dr. Darby gave him a small dose or two of morphine to allay the pain. Then just before he died, he fell into what is called a "comatose" state, a condition of drowsy unconsciousness, from which he did not arouse. This it appears, was the natural ending of one in his condition but some of the friends seemed to think he had taken an overdose of morphine or some such drug, and they requested a post mortem examination. Dr. Nusbaum did the work mainly, assisted by and in the presence of Drs. Darby, Broughton and Showalter the undertaker, Wm. Ettinger and Ed. Wareham being present. This was held Dec. 11 and 12. The result as testified to, was that there were found indications of great congestion and bleeding in the lungs, and other internal organs were not in good condition. The stomach and other organs were submitted to Dr. L. Park Drayer, city chemist at Fort Wayne, and a full analysis had. Dr. Drayer reported finding only a very small trace of Mophia not enough to do any harm. This was probably the medicine given by the physicians. No other poisons were found and Dr. Drayer agreed that Mr. Chandler died of natural causes and all are satisfied this is so. Dec. 17 a formal inquest was held by coroner, Hughes with W H Less as clerk. A number of the parties above named, were called and testified and the coroner's verdict is that Mr. Chandler died of the hemorrhage of the lungs and Uræmic poisoning.

Fight for Cuba.

A dispatch from Lagrange, Ind., of yesterday, says:—Information received here is that a company of thirty young men is being secretly organized in St. Joseph county, Mich., and LaGrange county, Ind., to join the insurgent forces in Cuba. The terms of enlistment call for service in Cuba until independence is established.

A letter received here says that Miss Coleman has reached Key West, and that she is confident of getting passage to Cuba, where she will join the insurgents as a nurse.

Badly Hurt.

A little son of Dode Lanning at Mooresville, was badly hurt yesterday in a machine used in chopping up corn fodder. In some way we did not learn he got his right hand in the cogs and though no bones were broken the skin was badly torn off and several cogs mashed into the hand seeming to go nearly through. The lad, though but seven years old was plucky and made no fuss when Dr. Hines was dressing the mashed hand. But he earnestly insisted that his finger should not be taken off, for he 'wanted to save that' and if it was on the other hand, he would not care so much.

Obituary.

Barbara Warner was born Dec. 25, 1812, in Frederick County, Maryland, and died at the home of C. C. Buss, in Richland Township, DeKalb County, Ind., Dec. 14, 1896, age 83 years 11 months and 19 days. At about the age of 17 years she with her parents removed to Seneca County, Ohio, where at the age of 21 years she was united in marriage to Wm. Park, Nov. 4, 1833. To this union were born seven children, five daughters and two sons, five of survive her. One son was killed in a battle of the civil war, Oct. 19, 1864, and one daughter died Dec. 4, 1877. Mr. and Mrs. Park moved to Indiana 49 years ago, where they lived happily togather until death removed Mr. Park, Sept. 24, 1887. The first year of her widowhood she resided in Auburn, the remaining eight years on account of failing health she spent with her daughter Mrs. C. C. Buss. Grandma Park was a devoted member of the M. E. church for 64 years, although deprived of the privilege of attending public services often, on account of her age, she was quite patient and longed for the time to come when she could meet her Savior. Her greater fear was that she might offend her God by being over anxious to depart this life and be at rest.

She left an aged brother in his 87th year, who was present, one sister, five children, twenty-one grand children, six great grand children and a host of friends and neighbors to mourn her departure.

CARD OF THANKS.

All the members of the family of the late Mrs. Barbara Park, unite thanking the friends and neighbors for untiring kindness and assistance during her last illness. We shall ever hold them in grateful remembrance.

David B. Olinger

Was born near Hagerstown Washington Md., June 17, 1813, died Dec. 19, 1896, aged 83 years; 6 month and 2 days.

From Maryland, Mr. Olinger moved to Stark, Co. Ohio, where on February 18th, 1836, was united in marriage to Miss Rebecca Swihart, to them an only son J. S. Olinger was born Feb, 2nd 1837. Mr. Olinger and wife were in an early day connected with the New Lutherans, and continued so until death. He moved to Indiana Aug. 12, 1844 and located on the farm known as the St. Clair farm in Union township, DeKalb county. In 1859 he again moved on a farm 2½ miles west of Auburn, where on Feb. 29, 1870, occurred the death of his wife. On Oct. 10, 1878, he was married to Miss Margaret Keistrict with whom he lived until Oct. 12, 1891 when again he was called to mourn the loss of a beloved wife. He afterward went to live with his son J. S. Olinger

He took an orphan child at the age of 11 month, who became the wife of Mitchell Huston, who with 1 son, 4 grandchildren, 2 great grandchildren, 2 brothers and one sister still survive him.

Funeral services were conducted from the Lutheran church Dec. 21. Rev. J. D. Brosy officiating.

CARD OF THANKS.

The members of the family of the late David B. Olinger desire to return heartfelt thanks to all the friends and neighbors who were so kind, thoughtful and helpful during his illness. They will always be held in grateful remembrance.

ONE CURE OF CURES

THE RECORD OF Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

WELCOME CHRISTMAS.

Thrice welcome, day of days! The skies
Ope wide their gates at thy command
And Heaven's sublimest symphonies
Roll grandly over sea and land.
The dews of charity distill
Their incense everywhere, and comes
A universal joy to fill
The highest and the humblest homes.

Thy son doth bless with holier kiss!
Thy breath a grander these doth hymn!
Thy wings do close the black abyss
Of evil, and no longer dim
Are valleys of eternal peace,
Or land where its own restores,
But skies uncurtained show increase
Of glory on thy crystal shores!

And thou dost light for me again
The yule-log on the homestead hearth.
The graves where long the dead have lain
Do open, as a vernal earth,
And bloom for me once more the loves
That roseate made my youthful days;
Within thy firelight lives and moves
My mother, haloed with the rays

Of Paradise, and as her twin Lips with the olden fondlings part,
And I, enraptured, cuddle in
The velvet haven of her heart,
I see the pall of doubt unfold,
And on the pathway of the sun
God's finger writes in lines of gold
The words, "For Home and Heaven are one!"

Then, too, thy chimney glow reveals
My father's face; the old armchair
Is his again, and Lulu kneels
Beside him with her Christmas prayer;
The sweet-voiced pleadings uttered are,
And grandpa's lips do part to say,
"Thank God the gates are all ajar
'Twixt Home and Heaven on Christmas Day!"

Then, welcome, day of days! Thy dawn
Is vibrant with familiar tones,
The veil that dims our sight is drawn,
The farther shore thy sunlight zones.
No growth of skeptic fancy now
Our faith in glad reunion leavens,
For 'tis engraven on thy brow
That Heaven is Home's, and Home is Heaven's!

CHRISTMAS IN MANY CLIMES

IN ENGLAND.

AMONG all the Germanic nations Christmas has ever been the most popular of all church festivals. In England it was, and is, the one great national feast, and in the Anglican church and among the Lutherans of Germany the exclusion of many minor festivals from the calendar has only concentrated the popular affection upon Christmas.

The Puritans made a vigorous battle against what they thought a superstition, and in 1652 it was ordered by Parliament "that no observation shall be had of the five-and-twentieth day of December, commonly called Christmas Day, nor any solemnity used or exercised in churches upon that day in respect thereof." A little before, in 1647, the town crier of Canterbury proclaimed that "Christmas and all other superstitious festivals should be put down, and a market held upon Christmas Day." But none of these orders had much effect. In Scotland John Knox did succeed in pretty effectually suppressing the observance of Christmas, in the Lowlands, at least, but he simply transferred the popular customs and superstitions to New Year's Day. There is an English rhyme of this period that illustrates the popular feeling on the subject:

All plums the prophets' sons defy,
And spice-broths are too hot;
Treason's in a December pye,
And death within the pot.
Christmas, farewell, thy days I fear,
And merry days are done;
So they may keep feasts all the year,
Our Saviour shall have none.

In Germany.

At home around the tree, is the culminating point of Teutonic revelry in Yuletide. The enthusiasm and the sentiment of youth and age have then attained their pitch, and they are permitted to give full vent to it for the evening. The tree is illuminated at the appointed hour; "Still night, holy night," is sung in the domestic circle; a sweet vapor of domestic unity is inhaled amid smiles and tears, and the feast of the Nativity is thus initiated.

In Norway.

One of the prettiest of Christmas customs is the Norwegian practice of giving on Christmas Day a dinner to the birds. On Christmas morning every gable, gateway, or barn-door is decorated with a sheaf of corn fixed on the top of a tall pole, wherefrom it is intended that the birds shall make their Christmas dinner. Even the peasant will contrive to have a handful set for this purpose; and what the birds do not eat on Christmas Day remains for them to finish at their leisure through the winter.

SERVIANS PREPARING THE NATIONAL DISH.

In France.

In Paris Christmas Day is kept as a religious festival, and many who would not dream of going to church on Sundays make a point of attending mass on le Jour de Noel, and the blaze of the tapers falls on crowded congregations, men, women and children, kneeling, standing and sitting on the wide area of the Madeleine and Notre Dame. Of late years it has become chic to attend midnight mass on Christmas Eve, and so, pouring down along the boulevards, all the world and his wife try to find a place in one or other of the fashionable churches, and, after the service is over, all go round to see and criticise the Creche.

In Mexico.

The devout of Mexico go to early mass on Christmas morning. The minority devote themselves to a toothsome breakfast, in which tortillas, chile con carne (boiled beef and red peppers), tomalis (corn husks stuffed with force meat), are the leading features. After breakfast come the festivities. These are of all sorts and are imbued with a religious spirit of almost another age. In each house, where the residence can afford it, a little nacimiento (altar) is raised in parlor, drawing-room or library, which is supposed to typify the birth of the Holy Child. Wealthy people go to great lengths at times, having a manger and a barn constructed, and hire men to play the parts of the wise men of the East and St. Joseph.

Another curious custom consists in friends going from house to house, tapping on the door, and on being asked: "Who is there?" replying: "The Holy Virgin and Saint Joseph ask lodgings in your household." This custom continues for nine days before Christmas to illustrate the journey of Mary and Joseph to Bethlehem

In Servia.

The Servians have many curious Christmas customs, half pagan, half Christian in their origin. There is the Badnjak, a piece of wood, corresponding somewhat to the yule log, cut down and brought into the house with great ceremony, and then, after being basted with honey and butter, in the hope that bees and cattle may be prosperous in the coming year, is burned; and there is a sort of Father Christmas or Santa Claus, in the person of a Polazenik, a specially honored visitor, who is the first person received into the house on Christmas morning. Then there is the cooking of the national Christmas dish. What turkey is to the American, pork is to the Servian. Even the poorest family will save up all the year round so as to be able to purchase a pig at Christmas. On Christmas Eve the pig is killed, and on the following day, after dinner has been served and the roast pig duly discussed, toasts are drunk, and heroic songs sung to the accompaniment of a one-stringed instrument. The room is strewn with straw, in memory of the stable in which our Lord was born.

In Austria.

As early as the 6th of November, Vienna assumes an air of festivity; her citizens have not forgotten that it is the anniversary of their patron saint, St. Nicholas. After a week's intermission, the public squares are once more crammed with booths of all dimensions and description, forming regular avenues, crowded several weeks before Christmas with representatives of every social grade. If we take a stroll through the Ringstrasse, Christmas Eve, we shall find that aristocratic thoroughfare deserted, but all the flats or apartments are illuminated. Christmas trees, loaded with presents, form the evening's chief attraction.

HER FIRST CHRISTMAS VISIT TO HIS OLD HOME

—New York Herald.

FELLOW-TRAVELERS.

HRISTMAS eve away from home and the loved ones is a dreary period of the year. At least so thought Charles McKeena, as he traversed the top of his nine cars of potatoes en route for the Southern market. He was one of the young dealers, and, as his operations were not extensive it was imperative for him to personally "fire" his own cars. If none of the potatoes were frozen before he reached New Orleans, a handsome profit would await him there, for there was a big margin just at this time.

It was lonesome work at the best, not without an element of danger, and work which required constant attention in order to keep the fires from going out. Seated before the fire in one of the cars he rested his head on his hands and meditated about his wife and the two little ones. The fire glowed brightly and his heart was filled with hope, energy and ambition as he gazed into its ruddy depths. The train was speeding along at a normal rate, and the steady rhythmic sound was resumed upon the rails and —then he fell asleep.

How long he rested in his chair he did not know. Then he came to himself with a start, being almost thrown from his chair by a jolt as the train again stopped on a switch. Drawing out his watch he consulted it, and then gave an exclamation of alarm. He had overslept himself; the fires were probably out by this time; the frost had entered the potatoes, and he was ruined. Hastily making his way to the next car, to his surprise the fire in the stove was burning brightly, and the interior, if anything, was too warm. He hurried to the next car. There it was even warmer than in the first car. He stared at the stove in amazement.

"That's funny," he commented, pulling at his mustache.

The next five cars were in a like condition and he was immensely relieved and more puzzled than ever. Who in the world could have fired his stoves for him? He entered the last car, and was surprised to see a tramp seated near the stove, toasting his toes to his heart's content.

"Hello," said McKeena.

"Hello," responded the tramp to McKeena's exclamation.

For a moment they stood there, and then McKeena, waving his hand, said:

"Don't mind me."

"All right," remarked the tramp, and with that he seated himself again before the stove. McKeena also drew up a chair. Then he took a cigar case from his pocket.

"HELLO,' SAID M'KEENA."

"Smoke?" he asked.

"Thanks."

After a few whiffs the tramp remarked:

"Be you the feller that runs the potatoes?"

"I am."

McKeena himself lighted a weed and then said:

"I presume it was you who fired the stoves?"

"It were."

"Much obliged."

"Don't mention it. You lemme ride and I'll call it square, pard."

"Very well. How far are you going?"

"New Orleans."

Then they both smoked in silence. McKeena examined his companion casually. He was a tall man of athletic figure, and it was evident that he possessed enormous strength. His face was covered with a bushy growth of whiskers and with eyes about as bright as two coals. He puffed at his cigar with evident enjoyment.

"How's potatoes?" he said.

"Good."

"Any family?"

"Yes; wife and two, and I miss them especially on Christmas eve."

The tramp took another whiff, and something like moisture appeared in his eyes.

"I had a wife once," he remarked.

"Indeed!" said the other with a show of interest. "Where is she now?"

"She was sent to j—— I mean, she died. She had consumption."

McKeena attempted to give evidence of sympathy and the ragged intruder tipped back his head and his eyes gleamed more than ever.

"Had a kid, too," he remarked.

"What's become of him?"

"He's in the reform—that is to say, stranger, he is now a prosperous merchant in New York. He lives on Fifth avenue, he does, and has an English coachman."

"You don't tell me?" commented McKeena, endeavoring to look as though he believed the other's narration.

"'Pon honor."

Again there was silence, which was finally broken by the tramp.

"Any vittels?"

"Yes."

McKeena produced his lunch-basket and his visitor ate ravenously, as though he had not touched food for twenty-four hours.

"You turn in, pard," remarked the tramp. "I'll keep up the fires."

The other hesitated, but finally laid down and took a nap. All the way to New Orleans this programme was followed. Early one morning as the train stopped, the tramp said:

"Good-bye. I think I'll light out before we git to town."

Then he turned to the other and handed him an envelope. Before McKeena could answer he was gone. The former mechanically handled the envelope and gazed doubtfully at the new, crisp $20 bill and the following message:

"You Did me a good Turn. Bi a Christmas present fur de Kids. i wuz Hard pressed Wen i cum to de train an yu Took a stranger in an Nourished Him. Giv mi Regards to de little wife; Likewise de Kids an Bi a Drum fer de Boy. at first i thought i'd Bore you, But i'm glad i diddent Now. i Had de gun on you wen yu com in, but yu were Kerteous an i diddent Shoot. i wuz thinkin' to Lay yu out an i Ain't sory i diddent. with Kind reggards, From yur ole Pal, believe me, verry Faithfully yours, Bill McGinnissy."

Bill McGinnissy was the name of the train-robber whose misdeeds had made him the terror of the South. He was wanted for about fifty crimes. The young merchant shuddered and then gazed doubtfully at the new, crisp $20 bill.

SURPRISE WAS MUTUAL.

Exchange of New Year's Gifts in the Piffkins Household.

HIS is the first New Year's Day in ten years that Maria hasn't quarreled with me about giving up tobacco, and now I've done it of my own accord. How pleased and how surprised Maria will be" Thus Mr. Piffkins chuckled on the morning of Jan. 1.

It was customary with the Piffkinses to exchange New Year's gifts and not to make the presentation until after breakfast. Therefore, when Mr. Piffkins entered the dining-room, Mrs. Piffkins was apparently unconscious that he carried a bulky parcel, while he in turn was quite unaware that a small, queer-shaped package lay beside his wife's plate.

"My dear," remarked Mr. Piffkins, as he set down his coffe cup and rolled up his napkin, "during our married life there has been only one serious cause for contention—well, perhaps two—but no matter. I intend to remove that cause."

"I have also determined to turn over a new leaf, as you will presently see," and she nodded mysteriously toward the queer-shaped package.

"I have resolved during the coming year to discontinue the use of tobacco." And he awaited the burst of delighted surprise to follow.

Mrs. Piffkins turned pale, doubtless with joy, replying tremulously: "I cannot accept this sacrifice; but I have resolved to yield to your entreaties, abandon society and devote myself in future to my home."

"Say no more, Maria, I have hitherto preferred to remain at home in order that I might smoke, but——"

"No, Silas, it is I who——"

"In token of reformation I have purchased with money I would have squandered on the weed the silk evening dress you so desired."

"And I," cried Mrs. Piffkins, "have also prepared a surprise for you. With the money I had saved to give a reception I have bought you a—a meerschaum pipe!"

WHEN THE STAR SHONE.

'Twas the Signal for Bethlehem's First Christmas.

Nineteen hundred years ago, less four, witnessed one of the most remarkable epochs known to secular history, and the most remarkable period of which spiritual man has ever conceived. It was by the decree of Augustus, then emperor of Rome, that the prophet's words were verified and the Christ born in the town of David. The circumstances were these: By an official order a census of the territory of Palestine was called for, and to that end from every part of the province the inhabitants betook themselves, according to the Jewish custom, to the town from which they claimed their origin.

From Nazareth in the north to Bethlehem in the south was a long journey, eighty miles over wintry roads and up and down the hills of the rolling country. But Joseph, who was as good a subject as he was a Hebrew, obeyed the command, and started for the city of David at the bidding. The first stop was probably at the house of Chimham at Bearoth, which is fifteen miles from Nazareth, where, a thousand years before Ruth gleaned for Boaz, and where Jesse and David had rested. The remainder of the journey was made by easy stages, the humble couple stopping to rest at such quarters as their means could afford.

They arrived in Bethlehem in the afternoon and found the little city crowded with a host of people bound on a mission similar to their own. Every caravansary was filled. The streets were thronged with people seeking accommodation, and after repeated efforts to obtain quarters in the city proper, which numbered at that time only about 3,000 inhabitants, and was, therefore, unprepared for an emergency of this sort, the footsore wanderers struck out into the country. After traveling about a mile they found the little khan, which is now known as the "Chapel of the Nativity."

The little inn which was thus destined to be famous over the round world was set in a hollow over which waved the branches of an olive grove. It was built around a court whose open sides, cut in the limestone rock, were designed for the stabling of horses and cattle which belonged to the guests who patronized the establishment. The rooms in that tavern were all bespoken, and the sole place of shelter left to the travelers was one of these cell-like apartments, in which there was neither couch, table nor chair.

It was understood that any guests who would accept these lowly quarters should provide their own bit of carpet as a protection against the damp and would be content and satisfied with the bundle of straw which served as a bed. These were the surroundings of the Virgin Mother on the night of the advent of the Son of God.

NOTES ABOUT SCHOOLS AND THEIR MANAGEMENT.

Reading Work Is the Most Far-Reaching of Any in the School—Lafayette College to Suppress Hazing—Truant School at Buffalo.

Some Simple Devices.

The work in any school which is the most far-reaching is the reading work. The teacher combines her reading and nature work. It is always a language lesson. Now, to determine one of the most useful devices, that is, one of the most general, "all-purpose" materials to have on hand, it will be worth while to examine some of the aids offered for the reading work.

There are charts that are to be used during the reading recitation. There are many advantages to be derived from this chart, but many of the most sucessful primary teachers prefer to make the lessons themselves, which they wish to use. Then, all the material the children bring to school, all the holidays and circuses can be utilized, and the interest in the reading lesson be increased. Probably the most useful material is made by having the letters of the alphabet printed on cardboard and cut so there is but one letter on a card. We have our alphabets printed so the small letter is on one side of the card and the corresponding capital on the other. There are three e's, two each of the a's, o's and u's and one each of the consonants of the alphabet. The letters should be good, plain type, about a half inch long. Eight or ten of these alphabets put into an ordinary spool box (which is thrown away at the dry goods stores), are prepared for each child. This kind of work is suitable for the First Reader children, so it does not require very many.

The busy work with the very smallest pupils may consist in having the children make lessons from the readers or from the board on their desks, each using the letters from the box given him. A little later the teacher may put stories on the board, leaving blanks to be filled, which the children make on their desks, putting in the proper words. Still later, when they have learned to spell, or when they can hunt up words which they can't spell, they can make their own stories about the flower, the bird, or the squirrel. There are teachers who object to having the children do any of this purely copy work in making their stories exactly like those of the book or on the board. Of course, such work as this is most elementary, and just as soon as the children can spell the necessary words they should be encouraged to give stories of their own. When they put these stories into letters they frequently wish to use words they cannot spell. It is hardly advisable for them to spell the words as they may think them likely to be. It is better for them to leave blanks and read the stories just as if the words were really there. If a word is misspelled for a few times it is a very hard matter to correct.—Inland Educator.

A Truant School.

Buffalo, N. Y., is to have a truant school, which will be a temporary home for boys who persist in running away. Arrangements are being made to enforce the new truant law. Every patrolman will carry a book of blank reports, which will be filled out and returned each day to the superintendent of schools. These reports are worded as follows: "The following children, apparently between the ages of eight and sixteen years, have been found wandering about the streets and public places of the city during the school hours of the school day, having no lawful occupation or business and growing up in ignorance, and are reported as proper subjects for investigation by an attendance officer of the department of education. * * *" Each truant officer is required to send a written notice to the parent or guardian of a non-attendant. If the notification be to an employer of child labor, it is sent by the superintendent, and warns the employer that if he continues to employ a child who has not attended school eighty consecutive days during the present school year, he will subject himself to a fine of $50. When the parents or guardians are unable to compel the child to attend school, they must present a certificate to that effect to the superintendent, who will send the boy to the truant school.

Suppress the Hazers.

Lafayette is dealing severely with those engaging in hazing at the college this year. This is right. The boy who is not civilized enough to behave himself and guard instead of invade and abuse the rights of others is not worthy the money spent on him to give him a collegiate education. The chances are against his being a useful citizen in the future. The old adage that you cannot make a silk purse of a sow's ear has no more forcible application than in the case of the college yearling who makes his cowardly attack on the new students at the institution. Any college that suppresses hazing deserves credit. One of the city papers in speaking of the hazing at Lafayette says:

"These hazings are reported to have been in some cases of a most vulgar nature. The faculty is intent on breaking up hazing, and it was thought it had been driven from Lafayette, for there was none for a year that was worthy of notice of action by the college authorities, but it has suddenly broken out again and the faculty will take heroic steps to stop it."

And yet these young men would be surprised if the world at large would call them rowdies instead of gentlemen.—Educational News.

Education in China.

They have no conception of learning as understood in the West—of mathematics, chemistry, geology, or kindred sciences, and of universal history. Indeed, they have a very imperfect knowledge of geography. Their curriculum of study embraces the Chinese classics and philosophy (a voluminous compilation, especially holding in eminence the teachings of Confucius), the theory of government, and Chinese poetry and history. It is the standard fixed 2,000 years ago, and has undergone little change in the succeeding centuries.

One of our diplomatic representatives tells of a conversation had with one of the most distinguished scholars and highest officers in the empire, in which they canvassed their respective systems of education; and he reports that his Chinese friend had never heard of Homer, Virgil or Shakspeare; knew something of Alexander having crossed the Indus, had a vague knowledge of Caesar and Napoleon, but none whatever of Hannibal, Peter the Great, Wellington, or other modern soldiers, and he was ignorant of astronomy, mathematics and the modern sciences. When the American Minister expressed surprise at these defects in Chinese education, the mandarin replied: "That is your civilization, and you learn it; we have ours and we learn it; for centuries we have gone on, satisfied to know what we know. Why should we care to know what you know?"

Yet it must be conceded that the Chinese scholars and officials are usually men of decided intellectual ability, and they cannot be set down as uneducated because they have not followed the curriculum of study marked out by European civilization. It is a source of natural pride that they possess a literature and philosophy older than any similar learning in the West, which even at this day are not obsolete, but exercise an elevating moral and intellectual influence on a vast multitude of the human family.—The Century.

Big School Debt.

The Connecticut School Journal says: "The good people of New Haven are worrying over their school indebtedness, which now amounts to nearly $800,000. That's a pretty big load to be sure, but it isn't necessary that this generation should pay it. Twenty years ago the indebtedness was only $20,000, but would the voters of New Haven exchange the assets represented by their magnificent schools and the intelligence of the young men and women of the city for twice or thrice $800,000?" It adds the good advice: "Don't worry." Why should the present generation take on itself the responsibility of paying the debts of the future? The coming generation will be all the stronger for having something to do for itself.

Poor Stuff for Children's Books.

Nothing is more unwholesome than dejection, nothing more pernicious for any of us than to fix our consideration steadfastly upon the seamy side of life. Crippled lads, consumptive mothers, angelic little girls with spinal complaint, infidel fathers, lingering death-beds, famished families, innocent convicts, persecuted schoolboys, and friendless children wrongfully accused of theft have held their own mournfully for many years. It is time we admitted, even into religious fiction, some of the conscious joys of a not altogether miserable world.—Scribner's.

Notes.

Mrs. Hearst, wife of the millionaire Senator from California, gives a large share of $4,000,000, which has recently been given to the University of California.

A Western farmer wrote to his lawyer as follows: "Will you please tell me where you learned to write? I have a boy I wish to send to school, and I am afraid I may hit upon the same school that you went to."—Yonkers Statesman.

A new scheme is proposed for grading salaries of teachers in New York City. The grade in which the work is done is not to be taken into consideration. The points that are to be considered are length of service and excellence of work. The maximum salary is to be reached in twenty years.

Laundry classes, at which pupils may acquire at least one useful accomplishment, have been established in various parts of London, and, according to the annual report of the school management committee, have proved thoroughly satisfactory. During the year they were attended by 12,262 aspirants to proficiency in the art of cleansing and beautifying articles of every-day wear. —School Register.

Jealous of the Widows.

Sixteen of the marriageable girls of Charleston, S. C., presented the following petition to the Governor of the State in 1733: "The humble petition of all the maids whose names are underwritten: Whereas, we, the humble petitioners, are at present in a very melancholy disposition of mind, considering how all the bachelors are blindly captivated by widows and our own youthful chances thereby neglected, the consequence of this, our request is that your excellency will for the future order that no widow presume to marry any young man till the maids are provided for; or, else to pay each of them a fine to be laid on all such bachelors as shall be married to widows. The great disadvantage it is to us maids is that the widows, by their forward carriage, do snap up the young men, and have the vanity to think their merit beyond ours, which is a great imposition on us, who ought to have the preference. This is humbly recommended to your excellency's consideration, and hope you will permit no further insults. And we, poor maids, in duty bound, will ever pray."

Indefinite.

"Lounger," of the Critic, who has been passing a vacation abroad, says that while the better class of English people have learned that America is a big country and has in it more than one big city, there are still many to whom such knowledge has never penetrated.

The neat little London chambermaid who "slopped" my room—I use her own word—told me that she had an aunt and a cousin in America.

"Indeed," said I, "and whereabouts in America?"

"In Cherry street," answered the girl, promptly.

"In Cherry street! But where?"

"I have forgotten the number. We 'aven't 'eard from them for many years, though we 'ave sent several letters to Cherry street."

I tried to explain to her that America was a big place, much bigger than all the British Isles put together, but I don't think she believed me. The fact that I didn't know Cherry street proved me an ignoramus.

The Wonderful Churn.

I want to add my testimony to the list of those that have used the Lightning Churn. It does all that is claimed of it; you can churn easily in one minute and get a large percentage more butter than with the common churns. I never took the agency for anything before, but so many of my neighbors wanted churns that I ordered 30 and they are all gone. I think in a year nearly every farmer will have a Lightning Churn, in fact they can't afford to be without one as they make so much more butter, and a good little bit of money can be made in every township selling these churns. By writing to J. F. Casey & Co., St. Louis, Mo., you can get circulars and full particulars about the churn A READER. 3

CUBA.

Volunters for Cuba, are being enlisted all over country, though it is against the law. Yet few stop to think of that. Our people all sympathize with the struggling Cubans, but it is questionable whether these volunteers will not add more to the complications already existing, rather than be a benefit to the cause. The same may be said of the resolutions in congress. We may have a right to pass resolutions, but we take our chances of getting into war, and that too, as the aggressors. We have never entered on a war as aggressors, and hope we may not now. But should Spain become the aggressor, she will find a nation of willing hands to welcome a hostile invasion. But Spain is in a poor shape for a war. She has a big rebellion in the Phillippine Islands in the Pacific on her hand, besides the Cuban trouble. And in Cuba, she finds the rebels in possession of three-fourths of the island, while her own troops are largely shut up in Havana and other cities. Sickness has been great in her army and it is stated that at present 20,000 men are disabled at Havana alone, by wounds or sickness, two-thirds of whom are in hospital. Spain would do well to sell out the island and rid herself of an expense she can ill afford.

There is Nothing as Good

There is nothing just as good as Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, so demand it and do not permit the dealer to sell you some substitute. He will not claim there is anything better, but in order to make more profit, he may claim something else to be just as good. You want Dr. King's New Discovery because you know it to be safe and reliable, and guaranteed to do good or money refunded. For Coughs, Colds, Consumption and for all affections of Throat, Chest and Lungs, there is nothing so good as Dr. King's New Discovery. Trial bottle free at Robbins & McCord's drug-store. Regular size 50 cents and $1.00.

Mentone Gazette:—Harry Lewis blew into Elkhart lately and advertised that he would teach young ladies how to make wax flowers for a $3 fee in advance, with the agreement that after the pupil became competent he would give her $3.50 for her first week's work. He secured several confiding girls and their dollars and then decamped, also taking a watch belonging to a young lady.

The company that owned the Montana, Silver Statue of Ada Rehan at the World fair is in the hands of a receiver, and the life-size silver girl that so many were willing to elope with, will be sold by the sheriff.

The wife of Mr. D. Robison, a prominent lumberman of Hartwick, N. Y., was sick with rheumatism for five months. In speaking of it Mr. Robinson says: "Chamberlain's Pain Balm is the only thing that gave her any rest from pain. For the relief of pain it cannot be beat." Many very bad cases of rheumatism have been cured by it. For sale at 50 cents per bottle by Davenport the Druggist. 52

The assembly grounds of Rome City, Ind., which have been a very popular resort for church people of Fort Wayne and northeastern Indiana for the past few summers, will be sold at sheriff's sale this week to satify claims aggregating $9,000. It is said that a syndicate will buy them and after spending $50,000 in improving them, reopen them on the Chatauqua plan.

In 1892 Mr. A. L. Goldwater, who own s three retail drug stores in New York City, having learned of the great value of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for colds, croup and whooping cough, ordered a supply for his customers. It met with so much favor that he soon found it necessary to order more, and during the winter sold over two gross of the remedy. He says it gives the best satisfaction of any cough cure he has ever handled. For sale at 25 and 50 cts. per bottle by Davenport the Druggist. 52

—The treasury officials at Washington report that the holiday trade is making heavy demands on the treasury, and taxing to the utmost its capacity to furnish small silver change and nickels and pennies. The demand for pennies is greater than ever known before, and for the first time in the history of the treasury a demand comes from San Francisco for pennies, Heretofore the smallest change in use on the Pacific coast has been the nickel. The demand for pennies is accounted for by the great number of stores which use odd figures in selling goods.

When most needed it is not unusual for the family physician to be away from home Such was the experience of Mr J. Y. Schenck, editor of the Caddo, Ind. Ter., Banner, when his little girl, two years of age was threatened with a severe attack of croup He says: "My wife insisted that I go for the doctor, but as our family physician was out of town I purchased a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, which relieved her immediately. I will not be without it in the future." 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by, Davenport, the druggist. 52

—The first newspaper printed by steam was the London Times just eighty-two years ago. An edition of 3,000 copies was printed. The Thunderer was very proud of the achievement and remarked: "Our journal today presents the practical result of the greatest improvement connected with printing since the discovery of the art. The reader of this paragraph now holds in his hands one of the many thousand impressions of the Times newspaper which were taken last night by a mechanical apparatus. A system of machinery, almost organic, has been devised and arranged which, while it relieves the human frame of its most laborious efforts in printing, far exceeds all human powers in rapidity and despatch."

—A man near Wakarusa in Elkhart county got his hand crushed in a corn husking machine the other day. Our older farmers may remember when the first wheat threshing machine came into use, that many a hand was mangled in the cylinders. Now, we seldom hear of it. Perhaps we shall in time become so accustomed to the corn husker that we can use it in safety.

—By the kindness of M. B. Masters, we have been reading a copy of the "Sealy News" a paper published at Sealy, Austin Co., Texas. The editors are Mr. Albert D. Rust, jr and Mrs. Jessie M. Rust, both being relatives of Stephen Masters, of Charleston, Ark. The paper contains an obithary of Mr. Masters' sister, Mrs. Judith S. Rust, at Booneville, Ark. Her death was the result of injuries caused by a fall. It is interesting to read that they had their first ice, Nov. 29th and the first and only little sprinkle of snow so far, was Dec. 1st. and the only frost to kill vegetation was Dec. 2nd.

I know others who have been greatly benefited by its use."—James Nowland, Carrollton, Mo.

BUTLER.

The saloon keepers of Chicago threaten to close their doors for four months, thus depriving the city of $1000000, tax, in retaliation for the effort of the decent portion of their people in trying to keep them in ordinary, even illegal bounds. If they do so, it would be their death knell, for that great city released from the cankering sore of their saloons, would save five dollars in expenses, where it would lose one from this death tax, and its people relieved from this incubus would make such strides in moral improvement that the saloon would lose its hold altogether.

In anticipation of merry Christmas the young people of the Lutheran church held a Christmas tree party at the residence of Fred Gengnagel on East North street last Tuesday evening.

Daniel D. Knisely an old and very highly respected citizen of Troy township lies dangerously ill at his farm residence. He is receiving all the medical care that our vicinity affords and his many friends are hoping for the best.

The writer has been wrestling with the grip, for a month or more, and on last Friday was compelled to succumb, and remain indoors and undergo a vigorous course of treatment, with the result of coming out best.

The New Hook Spoon Free to All.

I read in the Christian Standard that Miss A M Fritz, Station A., St. Louis, Mo., would give an elegant plated hook spoon to anyone sending her ten 2-cent stamps I sent for one and found it so useful that I showed it to my friends, and made $13,000 in two hours, taking orders for the spoon; it is a household necessity. It cannot slip into the dish or cooking vessel, being held in the place by a hook on the back. The spoon is something that housekeepers have needed ever since spoons were first invented. Anyone can get a sample spoon by sending ten 2 cent stamps to Miss Fritz. This is a splendid way to make money around home. Very truly, —The Anderson Herald says that 1,800 prisoners have been confined in the county jail there during the past year. Such a showing would make DeKalb county kick. And we presume Madison county wishes it were less.

—Rev. J. W. Bloyd, pastor of the Church of God made us a brief call this forenoon, in company with the former pastor, Rev. Joseph Neil, of Montpelier, Ohio, and Rev. W. P. Burchard, of Findlay, Ohio. Mr. Neil and Mr. Burchard have been visiting the great meeting now in progress and visiting friends.

—The talk in political circles about making a "fair apportionment" by the legislature this winter, still goes on. But it is not likely to turn out that way except so far as they find it absolutely necessary to make it safe with the supreme court, should the new law ever get into court. In this part of the state the present districts are as fair as they can well be, but we predict that very decided changes for the worse will be made.

The Sunny South.

The Courier's Special Correspondent Gives His Impressions of Dixie Land.

BIRMINGHAM ALA., Dec. 18

To the Courier:

We started southward last Tuesday afternoon in one of the splendid parlor cars of the C. H. & D. R. R., and although the weather was stormy and cold, these cars were so comfortable and home-like that the trip to Cincinnati was rendered quite enjoyable.

From Cincinnati, we took the Louisville & Nashville R. R., which leads through the picturesque hills and the famous blue grass regions of Kentucky to Nashville; here we stopped several days and looked over the city and surrounding country. The weather was lovely, dust instead of snow was flying. The roads being toll roads, are of the very best character and makes vehicle and bicycle traveling very pleasant; to say nothing of the great saving to man's Sunday school vocabulary, this system of road making is certainly preferable to the Indiana system of road building. The citizens of Nashville, remind the traveler with a great deal of pride that this is the old home of Andrew Jackson and James K. Polk, and they point you to their old homes and tombs as places of interest to visit. The city is 116 years old and the state has been a member of the union 100 years. We visited the centennial grounds in which is to be celebrated the one hundredth anniversary of the state. It is a marvelous reproduction of the buildings of oriental days and lands. On an elevation forming the center piece of the grounds is a reproduction of Grecian Parthenon with its many fluted columns, set as it is upon this hill [illegible] the acropolis at Athens, recalls the glory of Greece. Spanning Lake Watanga is the bridge of Venice, known as the Rialto with its broad roadway and its handsomely decorated booths on either side, in which will be exposed for sale the goods and wares of Venice. The Egyptian Pyramids are mammoth affairs and impress the observer with the skill and perseverence of the ancient builders. The Chinese Village the Spanish Mirror Ma e are also interesting copies. The student of the oriental will find a great field for study among these tall columns of Roman Doric style and the products of those lands.

The city of Nashville is beautifully located, but lacks the enterprise of our northern cities. Nature does all the holiday decorating here, the business men do not utilize these facilities of attractiveness as would the northern merchant, as is shown in the fact that the northern business rooms are now beautifully attired in holiday garb procured from the south, while the southern business room is entirely destitute of decorating. A dog farm seems like a peculiar sort of a farm yet there are many such in the south. I met one man who has 45 blood hounds valued at from $200 to $1000. He had recently shipped 11 to Ohio; a dog farm ranks as big here as a horse farm in the north.

Farmers have a peculiar way of doing things in this country. I saw no farm barns after I left Nashville. Neither crops nor stock are housed here like in the north. Hay is stacked up in careless piles. Cotton bales are ranked up along the railroad like wood, and corn is unloaded in rail pens. Judging from the corn stalks standing a big crop was produced this year, and wheat now looks about like our May wheat. Many once fertile dollar farms were cultivated by slaves. [illegible] the [illegible] of [illegible] city on fire as the [illegible] forth the [illegible] columns [illegible] fire. The supply of iron [illegible] United. Birmingham [illegible] become the greatest [illegible] We leave to-morrow for Florida.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

PURELY VEGETABLE.

The cheapest, purest and best family medicine in the world! An effectual specific for all diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Spleen. Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common, as a bad breath; and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect to cure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your appetite, complexion and general health.

CONSTIPATION

should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact, nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache, for the relief of which take Simmons Liver Regulator.

THE CHANGE OF LIFE.

INTELLIGENT WOMEN PREPARE FOR THE TRYING ORDEAL.

A Time When Women Are Susceptible to Many Dread Diseases.

The anxiety felt by women as the "change of life" draws near, is not without reason.

When her system is in a deranged condition, or she is predisposed to apoplexy, or congestion of any organ, it is at this period likely to become active and with a host of nervous irritations, make life a burden. Cancer often shows itself, and does its destructive work.

Such warning symptoms as sense of suffocation, headache, dread of impending evil, timidity, sounds in the ears, palpitation of the heart, sparks before the eyes, irregularities, constipation, variable appetite, weakness and inquietude, dizziness, etc., are promptly heeded by intelligent women who are approaching the period in life where woman's great change may be expected. Thousands at this critical time consult Mrs. Pinkham, and conduct their habits according to her advice, and with the Vegetable Compound go through that distressing time with perfect safety and comfort. Mrs. W. L. Day, of Bettsville, Ohio, says:—

"When all else failed, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound saved my life. It carried me through the change of life all right, and I am now in good health. It also cured my husband of kidney trouble."

Syrup of Figs

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills, which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge, that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, laxatives or other remedies are then not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

The Only Photograph Ever Taken of a Man at the Instant of His Death.

An extraordinary photograph is that taken a few days ago of the execution of a Seminole Indian in the Indian Territory. This is a picture which shows a man at the instant of his death.

Death in this instance was almost as quick as the camera, for the man was shot in the heart, and died, as it is said, "instantly." The method of execution was peculiar.

The prisoner, who had been condemned for murder, was taken out to the foot of a tree and seated upon a small rock. A large white heart had been cut from some calico, and this had been carefully stitched upon his coat just over the heart.

This made an unmistakable mark for the executioners to fire at. There is no other photograph of this kind in existence, for pictures of death scenes are rare.

The quickest form of execution now in use is, says its advocates, electrocution. New York is the only civilized state which kills its murderers by an electric shock. The law under which this system was adopted is stringent and makes it impossible to take photographs of a man in his dying moments.

It is doubtful, however, if electrocution kills its victim so quickly as a bullet fired into the heart, as was done with this Seminole Indian. The instant of death would not be so accurately known.

About a year ago a photograph was taken of a negro being burned at the stake in Texas. This was not an official execution, but a terrible form of lynch law, and the unhappy victim of the mob's violence was tortured for many minutes before his death.

In France the condemned criminal is executed with the guillotine. Placing his head upon a block, in which a space has been carefully hollowed out to receive it, the murderer exposes his bared neck under the glittering knife.

The knife is suspended at the top of a slot and the edge is set at an angle. The knife of the guillotine is as sharp as a razor.

It descends with incredible speed and force, and slices off the head of its victim as neatly as if it were a head of cabbage. The guillotine has been the official instrument of death in France since the Revolution. No photograph has yet been taken of an execution by the guillotine.

In Germany the condemned criminal is beheaded with an axe. This custom has come down from the Middle Ages, and is supposed to have many advantages, although it is not very humane for certain.

A REAL FREAK OF NATURE.

We Have Just Experienced the Most Remarkable Weather in Centuries.

Never in its history since the flood, so far as is known, has the world experienced such remarkable weather as during the past nineteen months. Nature seems to have shifted her weather methods entirely, and to have made up her mind to show all creation just what she can do.

The tornadoes which afflicted the Middle States last spring ended a drought which affected a large portion of the same area so severely as to allow the bed of the Ohio River to be worked for coal, reduced the fall of Niagara and lowered the St. Lawrence River in unprecedented degree.

Investigation also shows that ever since February, 1895, equally abnormal conditions have been prevalent over India, Australia and the Pacific and Indian Oceans.

On the Australian side of the high pressure atmospheric wall bounding the southeast trades, an extraordinary prevalence of hot, dry northwest winds occurred right on to April, 1896, throughout Australia and New Zealand, raising the temperature in New South Wales to such a height that the government actually carried people free from the interior by rail to the coast in order to save their lives.

The temperature in Sydney ran up to such record heights as 106 and 108 degrees; and even in New Zealand, except at the extreme southern end, the famous hot northwesters of the Canterbudy district dried up the crops, while the North Island, especially near Aukland, looked as though it had been toasted in front of some Titanic fire.

In contrast, but evidently in correspondence with these abnormal features, the North Pacific was unusually stormy. Honolulu receiving quite an unusual supply of "Koua" or winter storms; while California, at the boundary of the oceanic area, came in for a similar excess of its curiously marked winter rains.

A general survey would appear to show that the equatorial rain belt has been less developed than usual, and that the atmosphere over the continents on either side of it has been less heaped up into narrow belts of high pressure and more uniformly spread over large surfaces.—New York Journal.

The first public library was established in New York in the year 1700.

Through the temptation to be coquettish with her lover they had parted, and it was a question which was the most miserable, Mary Derwentwater, who had trifled with his love, or Henry Ashton, now wandering abroad in search of forgetfulness.

Ashton went forth upon the world an altered, almost a misanthropic man. His hopes were withered, his first dream of love had vanished, he felt as if there was nothing for him to live for in this world. His mind became almost diseased. He loathed society, then he veered to the other extreme and craved after excitement. He sought relief in travel. Like the fabled victim in the olden legend, he spent years in the vain search after that Lethe whose waters are reserved for death alone. He found it not.

And Mary, too, was changed. She rose from that bed of sickness an altered being. Never had she known the full depth of her affection until the moment when she found herself deserted. The shock almost killed her, and though she recovered after a long and weary sickness, it was to discard all her old habits and to assume a quieter, yet, oh! how far more beautiful demeanor than in her days of unmitigated joy. She felt that Henry was lost to her forever, yet she derived a melancholy pleasure in living as if the eye of her absent lover was upon her. She directed her whole conduct so as to meet his approbation. Alas! he was far away; she had not heard from him for years; perhaps, too, he might be no more; then why this constant reference of all she did to his standard of excellence? It was her deep abiding love that did it all.

Four years had passed when Ashton found himself again in America, and, sitting, after dinner, with one of his most intimate friends at the table of the —— hotel. For some time the bottle passed in silence. At length his companion spoke.

"You have not seen Mary Derwentwater yet, have you, Harry?"

Ashton answered calmly, with a forced effort, in the negative.

"You must not positively delay it. Do you know how beautiful she has grown?—far more beautiful than when you went away, although you thought her surpassingly lovely." He paused.

"I have not heard from the family for years," said Ashton at length, feeling that his companion expected some reply.

"Then you know nothing of her—push us some of the almonds—why, dear fellow, she is irresistible. But she is different from what she used to be; her beauty is softer, though not so showy, and whereas she once would flirt a little—mind, only a little, for she is a great favorite of mine—she now goes by the name of the cold beauty. A married man, like myself, can speak a little warmly, you know, without fear of having his heart called in as the bribe of his head. And do you know that my wife suspects you of having worked the reformation?"—Ashton started, and was almost thrown off his guard—"for it began immediately after a long illness that happened a few weeks after you sailed."

Ashton was completely bewildered. He had now for the first time heard of Mary's sickness. His eye wandered from that of his companion, and he felt his cheek flushing in spite of himself. He covered his embarrassment, however, by rising. His companion continued:

"And now, Harry, let us stroll down Broadway, for, to tell the truth, I promised my wife to bring you home with me. Besides, Mary is there, and I've no doubt," he continued, no doubt," he continued, jocularly, "you are dying to meet her."

Ashton could not answer, but he followed his friend into the street, conscious that Mary and he must meet, and feeling that the sooner it was done the better. His companion, during their walk, ran on his usual gay style, but Harry scarcely heard a word that was said. His thoughts were full of his cousin. Had she, indeed, become cold to all other men from love of himself? Strange and yet delicious thoughts whirled through his mind, and he woke only from his abstraction on finding himself in the presence of his cousin, in Seacourt's drawing-room.

Mary was on a visit to Mrs. Seacourt, and did not know of Ashton's intended coming until a few minutes before he made his appearance. Devotedly as she loved her cousin, she would have given worlds to escape the interview; but retreat was impossible without exposing the long-treasured secret of her heart. She nerved herself accordingly for the meeting, and succeeded in assuming a sufficiently composed demeanor to greet her cousin without betraying her agitation. He exchanged the commonplace compliments of the occasion with her, and then took a seat by Mrs. Seacourt, who had been one of his old friends. Mary felt the neglect; she saw he did not love her. That night she wept bitter tears of anguish.

Ashton did come daily, and although his conversation was chiefly devoted to Mrs. Seacourt, he seemed neither to seek nor avoid his cousin. Now and then he found himself in a conversation with her, and he thought of old times. But the memory of their last interview came across him at such moments like a blight.

"How wonderfully Ashton has improved since his travels," said Mrs. Seacourt one morning as she and Mary sat tete-a-tete, sewing; "and do you know," continued she, looking archly at her companion, "that I deem myself indebted to you for his charming visits?"

Mary felt the blood mounting to her brow, and she stooped to pick up a stitch.

"Oh! you are always jesting, Anne; you know it is not so."

"We shall see. I prophesy that this afternoon, when we go to the exhibition, he will escort you and leave Miss Thornbury to Seacourt's nephew."

Mary's heart beat so she could scarcely answer, but she managed to reply:

"Don't, my dear Mrs. Seacourt! don't tease one this way! You know, indeed you know, Ashton cares nothing for me," and she felt how great a relief would have been a flood of tears could she have indulged in them.

Mrs. Seacourt smiled archly and said no more.

The afternoon came. The little company were assembled in the drawing-room. Ashton entered just as the last moment had come, and when the ladies were rising to go. Mary was almost hidden in one corner, so fearful was she of attracting the raillery of Mrs. Seacourt, by placing herself near the entrance and in Ashton's way. Her very sensitiveness produced the effect she wished to avoid. The gentlemen naturally sought partners near them, and for a moment she was left almost alone. She thought she would have fainted when she saw her cousin cross the room and offer to be her escort.

They proceeded to the exhibition. For the first time for years Ashton's arm upheld that of Mary. At first both were embarrassed; but each made an effort, and they soon glided into conversation on different subjects. What a relief it was to Mary that night to think she had been alone, as it were, with her cousin without being treated with neglect.

From that day the visits of Ashton to Mrs. Seacourt's increased in frequency, yet there was nothing marked in his attentions to Mary. Indeed, he still continued to converse chiefly with his friend's wife, though he did not openly avoid her guest. Mary grew more and more tremblingly alive to his presence, and at times, when she would detect his eye bent on her, half sadly, half abstractedly, her heart would flutter wildly and a delicious hope would momentarily shoot across her mind; but soon to fade as quickly.

One morning Ashton entered the drawing-room and found her alone. She was untangling a skein of silk. She arose and said, with some embarrassment:

"Mrs. Seacourt is upstairs; I will ring for her."

"Not for the world, if she is in any way engaged. I can await her pleasure."

There was silence of some minutes. Mary could scarcely breathe, and knew not what to say. Her fingers refused to perform their duty, and the skein of her silk became more and more entangled.

"Shall I help you?" said Ashton, approaching her. "My patience used to be a proverb with you."

Mary could not trust herself to answer, for her fingers were actually trembling with agitation. She felt she could have sunk into the floor. She proffered the silk without looking up. Ashton took hold of one end while she retained the other. Neither spoke; but Mary's bosom heaved tumultuously, while Ashton felt his heart in his throat.

"Mary!" he said.

She looked half-doubtingly, half-timidly, up.

"Mary, we love each other—do we not?"

There was no answer, but as he pressed the fingers lying passively in his grasp, the pressure was gently returned, and, bursting into tears, his cousin fell upon his bosom.

Jules Simon's Modesty.

By his power of intellect and nobility of soul the late Jules Simon, the French statesman and philanthropist, raised himself to a high station, yet he remained to the close of his life a simple, modest man. This is what his friend, Baron Pierre de Coubertin, writes of him in the Review of Reviews:

Jules Simon was as modest as he was able. He had often expressed a wish that there might not be too much laudation around his tomb. He had often mentioned a desire to be told when death was approaching. A friend fulfilled this sad duty. The philosopher showed no signs of emotion or fright on hearing the terrible news.

As he could speak no longer, he motioned for a pencil and a sheet of paper, and with a steady hand wrote his own epitaph:

JULES SIMON. 1814-1896.
Dieu, Patrie, Liberte.

His name, the year of his birth and the year of his death and the beautiful motto that had commanded and ruled his whole life: God, Country, Liberty!

The Sure Cure.

Dear boy, I will give you a tip
About a sure way to cure grippe!
Buy some greese at a dollar apiece,
And then bury your nose in the grease;
Melt some butter in streaming hot rum;
And drink till you hear your ears hum;
Mix some mustard and salt piping hot,
And sit with your feet in the pot;
Snugly under three coverlets creep,
And indulge in a long, dreamless sleep!
If all this the grippe's grip doesn't shake,
Then for Florida's brakes make a break!
—The Doctor.

True to His Vow.

She—Come, dear, here are some nice fresh biscuits I cooked myself. Put on your slippers and come to the table.

He—Excuse me, dear; I don't think I'll put on my slippers. I've always made the boast that I'd die with my boots on!—Yonkers Statesman.

Nobody who is in love knows anything.

The Blue and the Gray.

Both men and women are apt to feel a little blue, when the gray hairs begin to show. It's a very natural feeling. In the normal condition of things gray hairs belong to advanced age. They have no business whitening the head of man or woman, who has not begun to go down the slope of life. As a matter of fact, the hair turns gray regardless of age, or of life's seasons; sometimes it is whitened by sickness, but more often from lack of care. When the hair fades or turns gray there's no need to resort to hair dyes. The normal color of the hair is restored and retained by the use of

The Cause of Rheumatism.

The cause of rheumatism is lactic acid in the blood. To this acid are due the aches and pains, the swollen joints, the sharp, agonizing twinges. Rheumatism effects the limbs, arms, back and hips, causing misery day and night; stiffness of the joints, lameness, swellings, agony. Rheumatism can be cured only by purifying the blood. Do not waste time and money on liniments or other applications. Do not dally with unknown medicines. Cure rheumatism at once, surely, safely, promptly permanently, by purifying the blood with Hood's Sarsaparilla. Thousands of cures of this and other blood diseases conclusively prove that Hood's Sarsaparilla has wonderful curative power. The great merit of Hood's Sarsaparilla has given it the first place among medicines. It is the reason for its wonderful cures. It is the explanation of its enormous sales. Hood's Sarsaparilla stands not only upon its record of cures in the past, though this is unequalled by any other medicine, but it is to-day curing thousands of cases of catarrh, rheumatism, scrofula, dyspepsia, and many other blood diseases. It is to-day the medicine which the people take to give them health, strength, pure blood, good appetite and digestive power.

Cycle Hooks.

In some parts an excellent innovation has recently been made, with a view of pleasantly transporting the cyclist to the roads where the pleasure of a day's outing begins. The street cars are provided with exterior hooks, on which cyclists may hang their wheels. The plan is a great success, and is an accommodation greatly appreciated by all lovers of the wheel.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of Testimonials.

Broken Chain

The family circle is never so happy after the chain is broken and a link taken. Some family chains are strong, others weak. Have you a good family history? Or is there a tendency to coughs, throat or bronchial troubles, weak lungs? Has a brother, sister, parent or near relative had consumption? Then your family chain is weak. Strengthen it. Take SCOTT'S EMULSION of Cod-liver Oil with Hypophosphites. It makes rich blood, gives strength and vigor to weak lungs and run-down constitutions. With its aid the system throws off acute coughs and colds. It prevents the chain from breaking.

Putting the Sheet to Press.

The Print grabbed hold of the lean and the fat
And hustled them into the forms—
Locals and liners, Editor's Chat,
And a screed on "Iowa Storms."

"Two hours late," says the Print—"no less!"
To the Devil he shouted:—"Bill!"—
Go get Pete Jackson to twist the press,
And you've got no time to kill.

The Old Man studied the proof sheets through,
And he said, with a sunny smile:
"Not very fine, but I guess it'll do;
People want facts, not style."

P. Jackson strode through the sanctum door
With an odor of gin in his wake;
He carefully folded his coat on the floor
And earnestly started to slake

The remains of his thirst at the battered tank
That stood on the broken stool.
The Old Man wandered across to the bank,
The Devil juggled a rule.

P. Jackson sighed as he gripped the wheel
With a hold that was half caress;
"All right," said the Print, "let the old girl spiel!"
And the Sheet went into the press.

The old press sullenly creaked within,
But Pete was still at his toil;
"I guess," said the Print, "that we'll give her gin Hereafter, instead of oil."

Two hours crawled by as the hours crawl
When the earth lies brown and dry,
And the air sinks low like a fiery pall
And the sun hangs dead in the sky.

"At last!" cried the Devil, "the last rag's run
And wrapped and sent to the mail."
P. Jackson left with his coin hard won,
And the Boy went out with the pail

Spanish Caroons.

The Spaniard has an exalted opinion of himself and his country, but appears to be densely ignorant as to other nations. The Chicago Record in speaking of the cartoons in the Spanish papers of Cuba as well as those in Spain says:

"Every issue of these papers contains cartoons of our public characters and criticising everything except the Spanish government. In a recent issue of the Don Quijote appeared a great black bull, upon either horn of which was transfixed a squealing hog. These were fancifully clothed with stars and stripes and their facial expressions caricatured President Cleveland and Senator Sherman. To the ordinary observer this cartoon represented Spain and her contempt for American interference. To the Spaniard this cartoon conveys an entirely different significance, as not only does it express an insult to the American government but a personal insult to Mr. Cleveland and Mr. Sherman. The writer has personal knowledge, too, that this issue was sent to Mr. Cleveland from the consul's office.

By means of these cartoons the average Spaniard is led to believe that the United States is a third-rate country, and that so soon as the rebellion is ended and indemnity demanded by Spain the United States of America will plead for mercy. In order to sasisfy myself as to the general opinion of the Spaniards relative to the United States and to the comparative strength of the two countries, I began a series of inquiries. The first gentleman I approached on the subject said:

'Spain has two enemies, one of which pretends to be her friend, and which it suits her to accept as true for the present, but the time is drawing near when Spain will demand of her hypocritical neighbor indemnity for her entire loss in this war. If it is refused the United States must suffer the consequences. Spain will declare war, blockade American ports, destroy the American navy, and New York and other large cities will be at her mercy In such a position we believe that the States will gladly pay the amount which we will ask."

Fifty Years Ago.

Grandfather's hat! And within it you see,
Grandfather's favorite cough remedy.
Whether 'twas Asthma, Bronchitis or Croup,
Or baby at night waked the house with a whoop,
With Ayer's Cherry Pectoral Gran'ther was sure
That no cold or cough would e'er fall of a cure.
In hats the styles change, but the records will show
Coughs are cured as they were 50 years ago.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has no equal as a remedy for coughs, colds, and lung diseases. Where other soothing elixirs palliate, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral heals. It is not a cheap cough syrup, which soothes but does not strengthen; it is a physician's cough remedy, and it cures. It is put up in large bottles, only, for household use. It was awarded the medal at the World's Fair of ninety-three. It has a record of

Obituary.

Thomas Chandler was born in the City of Philadelphia, Pa., on the 9th day of September 1825 and died at the home of Lorenzo Snyder in Smithfield township on the 10th day of December 1896, at the age of seventy-one years three months and one day.

At an early age Mr. Chandler evinced a disposition to show his loyalty to his country. We find that he enlisted as a private in the Mexican war and served in that capacity for two years and received an honorable discharge from the American Army. At the close of that conflict he had moved to Chicago prior to the late war, and when the call for troops was made we find that he again took up arms in defense of his country. He enlisted as a soldier in Co. E. of 7th Ill., cavalry and served for over four years and until the close of that critical period of his and our country and received an honorable discharge some time in April, 1865.

As we all know that for many years Mr. Chandler has been blind, I wish on this occasion to say that the loss of his eyes as I am informed was sustained while engaged as a soldier in 1864."

In the city of Chicago on Sept. 9th 1860 Mr. Chandler was married to Mrs. Elizabeth Jane Tice, a lady who had formerly been married and who had a large family of children. In 1864 Mr. Chandler and his family moved to the city of Kendallville, Indiana where they lived until 1888, when they moved upon a farm in Richland township in DeKalb County, Indiana, where they resided until the month of March 1894 when Mr. Chandler bought the farm on which he died and moved to that place. There was born to Mr. and Mrs. Chandler one child which lived until it was five years old when it departed this life, his aged widow Elizabeth Jane Chandler and four of her children and a large number of friends are left to mourn his untimely death, for Mr. Chandler was a man to know was to be his friend.

Thus has gone out from among us an honorable man, an upright citizen, a good neighbor, a kind father and an affectionate husband. May we all unite and trust that the world may be the better for his having lived among us, and while he has gone from this world we know that he is now among the blessed. Peace be to his ashes and rest to his soul.

The remains were interred in the Union Cemetery in Richland Township on the 12th of Dec. and a large congregation was in waiting to attend his funeral and pay the last tribute of respect to the departed.

J. A. BARTON, Pastor.

A Dandy Thing to Sell!

I have been doing so well this summer selling combination dippers that I think it is my duty to tell others about it. I have not made as much money as some I read about, but I never made less than $3 and often $5 a day; the dipper can be used as a fruit jar filler; a plain dipper; a fine strainer; a funnel; a strainer funnel; a sick room warming pan, and a pint measure. These eight different uses makes the dipper such a necessary article that it sells at nearly every house, as it is so cheap. You can get a sample by sending, as I did, 18 two-cent stamps to pay postage, etc., to W. H. Baird & Co., Station A, Pittsburg, Pa, and they will mail you a dipper, and you can go right to work. Any one can make $3 or $4 a day anywhere. READER. tf

How the Dipper Saved the Farm.

Father was sick and the mortgage on the farm was coming due, I saw in the Christian Advocate where Miss A. M. Fritz, of Station A, St. Louis, Mo., would send a sample combination Dipper could be used as a fruit jar filler a plain dipper a fine strainer; a funnel; a strainer funnel; a sick room warming pan, and a pint measure. These eight different uses makes the dipper such a necessary article that I went to work with it and it sells at very near every house. And in four months I paid off the mortgage. I can clear as much as $200 a month. If you need work you can do well by giving this a trial. Miss A. M. Fritz, Station A, St. Louis, Mo., will send you a sample for 18 two cent samps—write at one. C. F. Mosier.

The Goshen Daily Times, Dec. 10, says: Capt. Cyrus F. Mosier of Elkhart, was taken to the Logansport asylum today by Under Sheriff Chatten. Mr. Mosier is afflicted with paresis and his malady is incurable. He has required the constant attention of an attendant for several months. At times the unfortunate is quite violent. He imagines that he is a millionaire but that his family has robbed him of large sums. The other day he went to an Elkhart drugstore and purchased ten gallons of castor oil to grease his carriage. At another time he has his hair cropped close to the scalp and then pushed a wheel-barrow around the city in the rain until his clothing was drenched. At another time he went to a hardware store and purchased five axes and thirteen helves. He smokes almost constantly. Mr. Moser has a wife and son residing in Elkhart and was at one time quite wealty.

Churning Done in One Minute.

I have tried the Lightning Churn, you recently described in your paper, and it is certainly a wonder. I can churn in less than one minute, and the butter is elegant, and you get considerably more butter than when you use a common churn. I took the agency for the churn here and every butter maker that sees it buys one. I have sold three dozen and they give the best of satisfaction. I know I can sell 100 in this township, as they churn so quickly, make so much more butter than common churns and are so cheap. Some one in every township can make two or three hundred dollars selling these churns. By addressing J. F. Casey & Co., St. Louis, you can get circulars and full information so you can make big money right at home. I have made $80 the past two weeks and I have never sold anything in my life before.

1 A FARMER.

A Chance to Make Money.

I have made $1,640 clear money in 87 days and attended to my household duties besides, and I think this is doing splendid for a woman inexperienced in business. Anyone can sell what everyone wants to buy, and every family wants a Dish Washer. I don't canvass at all; people come or send for the washer, and every washer that goes out sells two or three more, as they do the work to per minutes. I am going to devote my whole time to this business now and I am sure that I can clear $5,000 a year. My sister and brother have started in the business and are doing splendid. You can get complete instructions and hundreds of testimonials by addressing the Iron City Dish Washer Co., Station A, Pittsburg, Pa., and if you don't make lots of money it's your own fault. MRS. W. MARRIED.

Fred. I. Willis a Waterloo boy, but now of Indianapolis, was married last evening to Miss Mattie E. Rothrock, of that city. The ceremony took place at the residence of the bride's sister, Mrs. C. W. Slocum, No. 1227 No. Pennsylvansa St. There were present, of his people from Waterloo, Raymond E. and Edward D. Willis, brothers, and his mother, Mrs. F. W. Willis. His sister, Mrs. Hornady, of Indianapolis, came up with the party to-day, and to-morrow evening, there will be a reception for them, and for his brother Clyde and wife, at the parental home, the residence of Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Willis. The COURIER joins with many other friends, in congratulations and good wishes.

Court.

The two cases against Albert Harding at Corunna, about which so much scandal grew last fall, have been "nolled" by the prosecutor, as it seems he concluded there was nothing in them.

The man who stole clothing from Lœwenstein at Waterloo, got two years in the pen.

The contempt case of Edward Kennon has been dropped.

Jacob Nichols who stole the clover seed has given bond of $500 for appearance from day to day.

Delbert Davis, the man from Michigan who is up for trying to kill his partner near Al. St. Clair's, as he had been in jail 60 days, it was decided to give him a term of only 5 days more in jail and let him go.

Union Central Life Insurance Co. vs John Huyck was left off docket as was also the case of C. Wyland vs Peter Ankney.

The cases against the ex-trustees of Smithfield and Jackson, are to be tried before Judge Watkins of Huntington.

W. E. Kimsey, receiver of the Ashley Furnituse Co., vs Syvester Gardner will be kept in Steuben county, as change of venue, has not been perfected.

Mollie Berry was divorced from Samuel Berry.

MONDAY MORNING

When the jury was ready, the first case that came up was that between Geo. McIntosh and his brother in regard to some wheat. Phil Ginder and Jeff Beard were objected off, and in their place were taken 'Squire Pugsley and another then and business proceeded.

Among the attorneys present were: from Columbia City, T. R. Marshall and W. F. McNagny; Ft. Wayne, Judge Lowry; Waterloo, W. H. Leas, C. M. Phillips and W. XX. McDonald; Butler, A. J. Baxter. Also Gen. Blair, of Waterloo; Roby of Angola and Henry Colerick of Ft. Wayne.

The case to follow the McIntosh matter was that for "contempt" brought against, T. R. Marshall, J. W Baxter, Cal. Husselman, Karl Gerner, J. J. Gunsenhouser and others.

Marry The Girl Quick.

I saw in your paper that a 13 year old boy made $1.25 the first hour he worked selling the Perfection Metal Tip Lampwick. I ordered a sample and went to work and the first week I cleared $10, the second week I cleared $15. I expect to run it up to $25 a week in the near future, as the Perfection Metal Tip Lampwick makes such a beautiful white light and does away with smoky chimneys and bad oder and saves oil, it is easy to sell. If you wish to try it send 13 cent stamps to Miss A. M. Fritz, Station A. St. Louis, Mo, and she will send you sample outfit, this is a good way to make money around home.

Wednesday's Daily.

If this could be spelled "pie" it would be more popular, but in this vale of tears and things we can't have it all our own way. The common varities of pie being familiar to our readers, especially at this holiday part of the year we give them the benefit of inspecting some of our own manufacture, the kind known as "printer's pie." Of course we can't show them anything but the best, for type that is wholly knocked over, cannot be put into paper at all. Last evening while washing the DAILY forms, the "Devil" had the misfortune to have one page get away and fall. After straightning up a stickful of it, so as to put it into the paper, it stood this way:

Something to Depend On.

Mr. James Jones, of the drug firm of Jones & Son, Cowden, Ill., in speaking of Dr. King's New Discovery, says that last winter his wife was attacked with LaGrippe, and her case grew so serious that physicians at Cowden and Pana could do nothing for her. It seemed to develop into Hasty Consumption. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in store, and selling lots of it, he took a bottle home, and to the surprise of all she began to get better from first dose, and half dozen dollar bottles cured her sound and well. Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds is guaranteed to do this good work. Try it Free trial bottles at Robbins & McCord's rugstore. 5

THE NEWS RECORD.

SUMMARY OF A WEEK'S HAPPENINGS.

The Latest News as Flashed Over the Wires from All Parts of the World—Regarding Politics, Religion, Casualties, Commerce, and Industry.

Trolley Car Collision.

Allentown (Pa.) special: A trolley car coming to this city from Bethlehem was struck by a Jersey Central passenger train on a grade crossing in East Allentown. The trolley car conductor had run ahead and signalled to the motorman to proceed. He changed the signal upon seeing the approaching train, but it was too late. Motorman Lawrence J. Ware stopped the car with the front platform on the track. The train was running at the rate of twenty-five miles an hour, and when the locomotive struck the car it broke the platform off, carrying it 150 feet. The motorman was dragged almost as far and killed almost instantly. The car was broken to splinters. Conductor George Gresser had his face slightly bruised, and four passengers from Bethlehem were injured.

The Drop in Oil.

Lima (Ohio) special: The reduction in price of oil made by the Standard Company will have the effect of putting a check to operations in this part of the field. Pennsylvania oil is now worth only 93 cents per barrel under the new price and North Lima 61 and South Lima and Indiana 56 cents. There is not much money in producing oil at the latter figure, especially when the cost is estimated at 40 cents per barrel. A great many orders for derricks and rigging outfits have been cancelled since the decline was announced, as operators can see no hope in the future for the present at least.

Bloodhounds are Sold.

Sheriff Ben Hayes of Crown Point, Ind., has sold "Buck" and "Jim," his two man hunting bloodhounds, to the State of Minnesota for a handsome price. That State will use the dogs to watch the State prison and track criminals who escape. A great many have recently succeeded in getting away and the State will now adopt this method in catching them. "Buck" and "Jim" received their training on a Texas criminal farm.

"Didn't Know It Was Loaded."

Minnie Ritter, aged 18 years, the pretty daughter of John Ritter of Chillicothe, Ohio, was shot and instantly killed by her 12-year-old brother. The boy found an old 32-caliber revolver and pointed it at his sister. It had one cartridge in it. The ball struck Miss Ritter in the neck, severing the carotid artery, and she died almost instantly. The shooting was accidental, and the boy is almost crazed with grief over his deed.

Indiana Fee and Salary Law.

The Supreme Court of Indiana has affirmed the decision of the Circuit Court of Vanderburgh County, refusing to allow the claim of the Auditor of that county for services under the provisions of the fee and salary law of 1879. The Court holds that the fee and salary law of 1885, which provides that county officials shall receive a fixed salary without fees, is constitutional and valid.

General Harrison's Watch Returned.

Several weeks ago Gen. Harrison's house in Indianapolis was robbed of a gold watch belonging to his wife. He offered a reward for its recovery, and the other day he received a package from Chicago containing the watch. The local police had nothing to do with the recovery, and Gen. Harrison would say nothing except to admit the receipt of the watch.

Cracked Two Safes.

The office of the Grove Company of Salem, Ohio., was burglarized. There was two large safes in the office. One was blown with dynamite and several thousand dollars in notes and checks were taken. In the other safe, which had been left unlocked, were fifty gold watches and other valuables, which fell an easy prey to the robbers.

Six Robberies in a Row.

The Postoffice, Villard & Kline's hardware store, Lehman Levy's clothing store, Scott & Munson's mill office, Charles Wagner's hotel and the C., A. & C. depot were burglarized at Apple Creek, Ohio. Over $100 was taken in stamps and money at the Postoffice. No arrests were made.

Spain Preparing for War.

A dispatch from Rome says: Spain is preparing for an event of warlike complications with the United States. The manufacture of large quantities of cartridges has been ordered and four cruisers have been ordered from the Ansaldo yards in Genoa.

Killed at a Dance.

A bloody battle took place at a dance at the home of David Williams, in Letcher County, Kentucky. Over one hundred shots were fired, and Charles Hogg, a mountain teacher, was mortally wounded. Hogg's friends swear vengeance.

An Explosion.

A special from Montpelier, Ind., says that George Hickok, a well shooter, and Harry Woods, helper, were killed there by an explosion of glycerine at the magazine of the Empire Glycerine Company. Windows for several miles around were shattered and the magazine building was completely demolished.

Three People Drowned.

Allen Greer and the wife and daughter of Bud Owens were drowned in Clark's River, six miles from Paducah, Ky. They were in a canoe and the craft overturned.

EASTERN.

Train No. 71 on the Grand Trunk Railway was derailed about two miles below Danville Junction, Me., Monday and four cars were partially wrecked. Seventeen passengers were hurt, but not seriously. The injured were taken to Boston. The cause of the accident was a broken rail. The traffic was delayed for several hours.

The employes of the Hampton House, at Boston, detected a strong smell of gas in the corridor early Tuesday morning and found that it came from a room [illegible] gas pipe. [illegible]

Entrance was gained by the fire escape and they were found lying in bed, the women dead and the man unconscious. Gas was escaping from an open burner. The man's case was pronounced critical.

Frank C. Miles, Treasurer of the Boston Safe Deposit and Trust Company, is a confessed defaulter for a sum approximating $100,000. The defalcation was discovered late Friday afternoon by President Stone and a meeting of the directors was immediately called. The company holds a responsible bond of indemnity in the sum of $30,000. Miles has been Treasurer of the institution since it began business in 1875. The company has a capital of $1,000,000 and does a regular trust company business.

Edward M. Field, favorite son of the late Cyrus W. Field, college graduate and one-time owner of a beautiful residence on the Hudson, stood in the prisoner's dock in Yorkville Police Court in New York Friday a pathetic figure. He was there under the old blanket charge of drunk and disorderly. The memory of his father and the assurance of his attorney, J. I. Connaughton, saved him from a serious sentence. He was released in the custody of his attorney. Ed Field has been on the down-grade for some time. When his firm—Field, Lindley, Wiechers & Co.—failed in 1891 serious charges were made against the senior member. His subsequent history includes a sojourn in an insane asylum at Buffalo. His wife and two children live in up-town New York, but his haunts are mostly in Eighth avenue Raines law hotels.

WESTERN.

At Thermopolis, Fremont County, Wyo., B. F. Hanson, deputy sheriff, owner of the town site and a wealthy man, gave a dance Sunday night to which Thomas Bird, a wealthy cattleman and rival magnate, came uninvited. Bird was promptly shot twice and killed by Hanson, who is now in custody. The shooting was the result of a trivial quarrel.

Warrants for the arrest of E. S. Dreyer and Robert Berger, members of the firm of E. S. Dreyer & Co., mortgage bankers, who closed their doors at Chicago Monday morning, were issued Tuesday afternoon on the sworn information of Frank Kennedy, who charged the bankers with receiving deposits when they knew the concern was insolvent.

Judge Tuley, of Chicago, decided against the owners of grain elevators who have been dealing in grain, and against whom a strong fight has been waged by the Board of Trade. An injunction was granted restraining the elevator men from dealing in grain, as prayed by Attorney General Moloney and the Board of Trade. So far the elevator men have sustained defeat, but they will take the case before the next session of the State Supreme Court.

A mining company has been organized at Marlow, O. T., with $500,000 capital. The gold fever has run high since reliable reports have reached Guthrie of rich finding at the head of Otter Creek on the north side of Wichita Mountains, and there is talk of an organized rush of several thousand men to capture the rich gold discoveries. Marlow is the nearest railroad point to the mountains, being only about four hours' drive to the nearest mines, fourteen miles northwest of Fort Sill.

Alfred Wilson, aged 70, one of the best-known residents of Andrew County, Mo., was murdered Monday night by robbers at his home, one mile northeast of Avenue City. Wilson was a bachelor and was rich. Some time ago he became so embittered against banks that he drew out all his deposits and was supposed to have concealed the money about his home. A bloody footprint on a newspaper in the room is the only clew the officers have. It is not known whether any valuables were secured by the robbers.

Four more Chicago failures were recorded Tuesday as a result of the suspension of the National Bank of Illinois. The American Brewing Company, the George A. Weiss Malting and Elevator Company and George A. Weiss made assignments in the County Court. George A. Weiss is president of both corporations, and their business is closely connected. Weiss is a son-in-law of George Schneider, president of the National Bank of Illinois, and in the schedule of accounts made by the clearing house is shown to owe the bank $500,000.

The popular success of Mark Twain's "Pudd'nhead Wilson" has been well proven by the excellent business the Missouri people have drawn to McVicker's Chicago Theater. Mr. Theodore Hamilton, as the misunderstood old village lawyer, is without doubt giving one of the most artistic characterizations the American stage has known. The company is excellent, and Mark Twain's story as told by them reaches right out and lays hold on the affections of its audiences. There is that happy admixture of laughter and tears in "Pudd'nhead" that makes an entertainment perfect. "Madame Sans Gene," with Kathryn Kidder in the title role, will follow "Pudd'nhead Wilson" at McVicker's.

Thomas McLaughlin, the Guthrie, O. T., negro suspected of the murder of Freeman Morrow, has been removed from the Stillwater jail to guard against lynching. His present place of confinement is kept a secret. As a result of evidence developed at the coroner's inquest, Howard Clements, a negro schoolteacher, who came near being lynched on the day following the murder, has again been taken into custody. Eva Morrow, the murdered man's little girl, spoke Monday night for the first time since the tragedy. While the doctors were dressing the terrible wound in her head she murmured: "He hit papa with the ax and then hit me." The physicians now hope that she may be able to identify the murderer.

James Preston, aged 40, shot his wife, Amanda, aged 37, and the latter's son, William Bryant, aged 19, at the residence of Mrs. Preston, in Cincinnati, Tuesday morning. Preston is a farmer near New Richmond, Ohio. His wife left him some time ago and went to Cincinnati, taking quarters with her son and making a living dressmaking. Preston followed his wife and tried to effect a reconciliation. He called at the house and a quarrel followed, during which he began firing. When the neighbors came in they found the three on the floor wounded and bleeding. Preston had evidently first shot his wife, then his stepson and then himself. The hospital physicians say that Preston and his wife will die. The stepson has a wound in his left elbow. It is evident that Preston was actuated by motives of jealousy, as he had in his possession a letter written to his wife by another man.

The National Bank of Illinois, located at 115 Dearborn street, Chicago, and one of the oldest and best-known banking institutions in the city, with assets amounting to nearly $15,000,000, did not open its doors Monday morning. This action was decided upon by the directors of the bank Sunday night, after the bank had been suspended from the Clearing-House Association of Chicago at a meeting of the Clearing-House Committee held at the home of Elbridge G. Keith. The cause of the suspension, as given in the resolutions adopted by the Clearing-House Committee, are "unwarrantable and injudicious loans," through which "the capital and surplus of said bank is seriously imperiled, if not absolutely lost." At the last statement of the bank its capital was shown to be $1,000,000, with a surplus of $5,000,000 and undivided assets of over $400,000. It is thought probable that none of the depositors will suffer great losses by the suspension, as the bankers who were present at the meeting of the committee have recommended for consideration the proposition to advance 75 per cent. on all adjusted claims against the National Bank of Illinois. Also, they have agreed to use their influence with all other members of the Clearing-House Association to accept all such claims as collateral at the same ratio.

SOUTHERN.

The Illinois Central Railroad freight depot and contents at Jackson, Miss., were burned Sunday. The origin of the fire is unknown, but it is supposed to have been caused by a lamp explosion. The loss is estimated at from $50,000 to $80,000. The books and records were saved.

At Littleton, W. Va., a wire suspension bridge over a creek broke down while crowded with people returning home from a church entertainment and about thirty or forty persons were precipitated into the bed of the stream. One young man was killed, two persons were probably fatally hurt and eight or ten others injured.

Jim Stone, a negro, was taken from jail by a Mayfield, Ky., mob Sunday night and lynched. At 10:30 o'clock about 500 masked men assembled a few hundred yards from the courthouse and marched to the county jail, and after breaking the doors of the prison entered and secured the negro. He was carried to the courtyard and swung up to a limb at 2 o'clock. Several of the mob fired shots through his body. The jailer attempted to defend the negro, but the mob overawed him and he was forced to surrender him. The prisoner made a statement to the effect that another negro committed the crime, but the mob paid no attention to his words. The negro offered prayer while knives were being plunged into his body. A placard pinned on the body contained the names of several other negroes residing in the city, who were notified to take fair warning. Stone was charged with assault Nov. 24. He was arrested by Sheriff Cook the day after the crime was committed. Stone denied his guilt but the evidence was overwhelmingly against him. Three attempts had previously been made to lynch him.

FOREIGN.

At Barcelona an additional batch of anarchists was sentenced. Forty of them were condemned to twenty years' imprisonment and twenty-eight to eight years in prison.

El Heraldo asserts that the minister of war at Madrid, General Azcarraga, is preparing numerous pamphlets on the geography, topography and miltary condition of the United States to distribute to the chief officers of the Spanish army.

Brazil has declared to the Spanish Government that she will not recognize Cuban insurgents as belligerents. Italy has informed the Spanish envoy at Rome, the Count de Benomar, that she will prohibit the embarkation of Italians for Cuba to aid the insurgents.

Madrid dispatch: The explicit announcement is made that Senor Dupuy De Lome, the Spanish minister at Washington, has telegraphed to his government that he had a conference with Mr. Olney, the Secretary of State, in the course of which the latter assured him that Spain might rest tranquil until March at least, since, despite the attitude of Congress, President Cleveland would not recognize the independence of Cuba.

There is a big field in Germany for American rubbers, says United States Consul Monoghan at Chemnitz in a report to the State Department. At present Russia is supplying most of the rubbers worn in Germany, selling through agencies all over the empire, but neither the Russian nor the German made article is as good as the American product, being clumsy and lacking in durability, although it commands the market just now by reason of its lower price.

IN GENERAL.

Obituary—At Beaver Dam, Wis., John G. Williams; at Joliet, Ill., Max Braum, 90; at Canton, Ohio, Paul Field; at Monticello, Ill., Dr. B. B. Jones; at Whitewater, Wis., Rev. James Delaney, 96.

The American Sugar Refining Company, better known as the sugar trust, has closed a deal for 1,100 shares of stock of the Woolson Spice Company of Toledo, Ohio, being eleventh-eighteenths of its total stock. The price to be paid is $1,265,000. Some time ago the Arbuckles, "the Coffee Kings," branched out into the sugar business. A large refinery was built in New York and thereby the Arbuckles became the competitors of the American Sugar Refining Company. Then the refining company concluded to flank the movement of the Arbuckles and hence this deal. The other houses of the Woolson Spice Company have also joined in the war on the Arbuckles, and at New York Friday reduced the price of its produce one-half cent per pound. The cut was met by the Arbuckles, and it is thought a fight is on to the bitter end.

CUBA'S BENEDICT ARNOLD.

Man Who Is Alleged to Have Led Gen. Maceo to His Death.

Dr. Maximo Zertucha, the supposed Benedict Arnold of the Cuban revolution, who is alleged to have betrayed the gallant, fearless Maceo and his staff to death, looks like a man who would not only betray his patient and see him slaughtered, but would present a bill to the widow for professional services. After Maceo's death he "surrendered" himself to the Spaniards and was protected by them. It was on the information given them by Zertucha that the story sent out by the authorities at Havana was made up. The doctor, in telling how Maceo met his death, said that the general had a force of 2,000 Cubans who were attacked by 600 Spaniards. Maceo and his staff were in the center of the forces. In the battle that followed, Maceo and his entire staff were killed. The Cubans fled. Dr. Zertucha, say the Cubans, has been varinble in his sympathies for years, at one time holding to Spain, at another allying himself with the islanders. The doctor was formerly a surgeon in the army of Spain. Many years ago he went to Cuba, and by political intrigue was made the mayor of the town of Melena in the province of Havana. He has been more or less intimately associated with every political party in Cuba. When the present revolution was sprung, Zertucha changed into an outright rebel and offered his services to Maceo. He freely gave his services for the cause of liberty, but his alleged treason has made his very name odious throughout the world, and it is thought vengeful Cubans will never be satisfied until his body fills a dishonored grave.

BROOKLYN IN COMMISSION.

Newest Addition to the Navy Turned Over to the Government.

The fighting cruiser Brooklyn, the newest addition to the United States navy, was towed from Cramp's shipyard to League Island navy-yard Tuesday, where she was formally placed in commission. Blowing of whistles, ringing of bells and the shouts of thousands gathered on the boats and docks marked her progress down the Delaware.

After the commandant at the navy-yard, Commodore Howell, had receipted for and taken possession of the Brooklyn for the United States Government Capt. F. A. Cook, Commodore Howell and the ship's officers gathered on her deck and went through the ceremonies which formally placed the ship in commission. The flag of the Union was run up at her masthead, the sailors were lined up for a salute to their commander and the Brooklyn was a part of the navy. Much of the provisions and furniture, as well as the ammunition for the guns, has been at the yard for some days, and it is expected that all will be in readiness to sail in about two weeks.

The Brooklyn is an armored cruiser of the same general type as the New York. There are improvements of an important character, which will give her a big advantage in time of war over the sister ship. The cost limit, not including armor, is $3,500,000, and the contract price $2,986,000. She is designed to have a minimum speed of twenty knots an hour, with a displacement of 9,150 tons. Four triple expansion engines, which will work in pairs on the twin screws, furnish the tremendous power required. The battery of the Brooklyn will comprise eight eight-inch guns mounted in four turrets; ten five-inch guns mounted in sponsons on the gun deck similar to the four-inch guns of the New York, and sixteen six-pound rapid-firing machine guns.

Although the full complement of men is 500, there is room for the accommodation of 1,000. In time of war this feature would be of tremendous value at distant stations, enabling a considerable reserve force of enlisted men to be carried for any squadron of which she may be the flagship. There are two evaporators and two distilleries on board which have a capacity of 10,000 gallons of potable water daily, and a refrigerating plant which will turn out 2,000 pounds of ice every twenty-four hours. Electricity will be used in lighting the new cruiser. The Brooklyn's coaling capacity is 1,750 tons of coal, or 470 more than that of the cruiser New York. Two hoisting engines, each capable of lifting 1,000 pounds at the rate of 300 feet a minute, will handle the coal aboard ship.

RULE OF THE SEA PATHS.

Brazil and Holland Make Acceptance Nearly Universal.

With Brazil and the Netherlands, the latest additions to the list of nations which have accepted the new rules of the road at sea, practically the entire tonnage of the world will obey these rules when they go into effect on July 1, 1897.

The State Department is informed of the official acceptance of Brazil and the Netherlands. The latter government, it was thought, might refuse to join in the movement, but the authorities were not greatly concerned about the matter, in view of the fact that her tonnage represented only two per cent. of the total tonnage of the world.

There are still a few more governments, such as Siam and China, having practically no shipping, to be heard from regarding their attitude in relation to the new rules. It will make no difference, however, what action they take, as it is the intention of the President and the heads of all the other governments which have agreed to the proposed changes to issue a proclamation early in the new year setting forth the new rules and directing their observance by the shipping of the several nations interested in the movement.

ALL INDIA SUFFERS FAMINE.

Trouble Is More Widespread than Had Previously Been Supposed.

The Calcutta Englishman contends that the home officials are utterly at fault in regard to the dimensions of the famine. It adds that practically every province is involved, and asserts that such errors at the outset may result in irretrievable disaster and suffering before the crisis is over.

The Mark Lane Express in its crop report says that the rather heavy rainfall of December is welcome, and will give the November-sown grain a hopeful start. "Spain," the Express continues, "has enjoyed an extremely heavy rainfall since October, and the benefit to the agriculture of that arid peninsula is likely to be very great. Central Europe has seen a rapid rise of temperature, and rather heavy rainfall."

Referring to the Indian outlook, the Mark Lane Express says: "The India rains are too late to allow of anything like the average area of sown wheat for 1897." Regarding the South American outlook, the Express says that the new wheat is now being reaped in the warmer provinces of Argentina, and adds that it learns that from 300,000 to 400,000 quarters of wheat may be expected from Montevideo.

TO AMEND THE BANK ACT.

Comptroller Eckels' Annual Report Suggests Several Changes.

The annual report of James H. Eckels, Comptroller of the Currency, submitted to Congress, contains information in detail in regard to the organization, supervision and liquidation of national banks for the year ended Oct. 31, 1896.

The Comptroller suggests the following amendments to the national bank act:

That the loans and discounts of banks to their executive officers and employes be restricted in amount and secured by proper collateral.

That no loan be made to a director, not an executive officer of the bank, except upon collateral security or a satisfactorily indorsed note.

That directors be required to make an examination of their banks once each year.

That in places having a population of less than 2,000 inhabitants national banks shall be permitted to be organized with a capital stock of not less than $25,000, and with a corresponding reduction in the amount of bonds required to be deposited.

That national banks be permitted to establish branch banks in towns and villages where no national bank is established and where the population does not exceed 1,000 inhabitants.

That the semi-annual tax on circulation be reduced to ¼ of 1 per cent.

Concluding, he says: "It is respectfully submitted that legislation by Congress, based upon safe and prudent lines, having in view the gradual payment and cancellation of the credit currency now maintained by the Government and the issuance hereafter of all such currency through the banks, with full responsibility therefor placed upon them, should be had at the very earliest practicable moment. The results which would follow such enactments would be beneficial, and neither would monopoly be created nor favor shown thereby."

Cuban Resolutions Adopted by the Senate Committee.

RESOLVED, By the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the independence of the Republic of Cuba be and the same is hereby acknowledged by the United States of America.

Section 2. That the United States will use its friendly offices with the Government of Spain to bring to a close the war between Spain and Cuba.

EXPORTS AND IMPORTS.

Chief Ford of the Bureau of Statistics Makes His Report.

Worthington C. Ford, chief of the bureau of statistics at Washington, has issued his report on imports and exports of the United States for November, 1896, and also the eleven months from Jan. 1 to Nov. 30, 1896, corrected up to date.

The following shows the exports and imports for November: Merchandise exports, $109,091,937; imports, $50,038,052. Gold coin and bullion exports, $423,399; imports, $7,347,547. Gold ore exports, $44,611; imports, $143,072. Silver coin and bullion exports, $4,974,411; imports, $1,776,699. Silver ore exports, $148,232; imports, $1,338,333.

For the eleven months preceding Nov. 30, 1896: Merchandise exports, $888,680,369; imports, $622,593,660. Gold coin and bullion exports, $56,336,988; imports, $100,197,486. Gold ore exports, $183,651; imports, $1,736,048. Silver coin and bullion exports, $56,209,791; imports, $11,224,776. Silver ore exports, $892,120; imports, $16,069,271.

CARLISLE IS HOPEFUL

SECRETARY REVIEWS NATIONAL FINANCES.

Despite a Deficit of $25,203,245 at Present and Larger Deficiencies Probable in 1897 and 1898, He Takes a Cheerful View.

Talks of Money.

The annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury, as transmitted to Congress, deals extensively and in detail with the financial situation. Mr. Carlisle summarizes the condition of the treasury, and after reviewing his former recommendations for early and effective legislation to provide for the retirement of treasury notes, goes on to say:

"The maintenance of a policy which necessarily imposes upon the government the burden of furnishing gold at the public expense to all who may demand it for use or hoarding at home, or for export to other countries, cannot be justified upon any ground of expediency or sound financial principles, and even if the periodical and frequently recurring demands for gold did not weaken the foundations of our entire currency system, thus imparing confidence and depressing business, it would nevertheless be the duty of all who are charged with any degree of responsibility for the adoption of proper financial methods to insist upon the reformation of our laws on this subject at the earliest possible day.

"The issue and redemption of circulating notes is not a proper function of the treasury department, or of any other department of the government. While the government has power to borrow money, it is not its duty to issue public obligations merely for the purpose of providing a paper currency for use in the transaction of business, nor has it the constitutional power, in my opinion, to make its promise legal tender in the payment of private debts.

The Secretary refers to the "peril" in which the entire financial system has been placed by the "constant agitation" of the currency and favors the retirement and cancellation of government notes. He says the people will not consent to be taxed merely for the purpose of accumulating and holding a large and useless surplus in the treasury.

He claims that no system of coinage that can be devised will furnish the government with either gold or silver, unless it pays for it with means already collected by taxation, or by contracting an indebtedness to be paid by the people in the future.

He goes at length into the subject of the demand and supply of money, the matter of imports and exports as affecting currency supplies, and the crops in Europe.

The Secretary holds that without a reformation of our currency we cannot safely rely upon permanent accessions to our stock of gold from abroad in settlement of trade balances in our favor. He refers to his recommendation of last year that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized to issue from time to time bonds payable in gold and to exchange them for United States notes and treasury notes, and again indorses that plan, but adds that it may be that so radical a measure would not receive the assent of Congress, in the present state of the public mind on the subject.

Mr. Carlisle renews his recommendations for such amendments to the national banking laws as would permit the issue of circulating notes equal in amount to the face value of the bonds deposited and reduce the tax on notes to one-fourth of 1 per cent. per annum, and that authority be given to establish branch banks for the transaction of all kinds of business now allowed, except the issue of circulating notes. No good reason now is perceived, he says, why this limitation upon the required amount of capital should not be reduced to $25,000, without regard to population. He again refers to and renews his suggestion that the issue of United States notes, treasury notes and national bank notes of lower denominations than ten dollars be prohibited in order to secure a large and more permanent use of silver coin and certificates.

In closing he says: "For more than a century our tariff legislation has been designed, to a great extent, at least, to acomplish objects other than the raising of revenue for public purposes. The protection of capital invested in our native industries and the protection of labor employed in the United States against the competition of the products of foreign industries and foreign labor have been alleged as the paramount objects in many cases, and urged as a justification for the progressive increases of tariff taxes and commercial restrictions when revenue was not needed, or when the rates imposed were so high as to reduce the revenue. In other instances, revenue duties have been abolished in order that protective duties might be retained or increased, and the necessities of the government and just principles of taxation have been subordinated to the demands of special interests."

"Mr. Timmons," he said, "you have a just right to be angry with me for mismanaging our joint affair, and I own I have not told you quite the truth. I did not go to Milwaukee by the two-thirty yesterday. I was at the public house last night just before twelve, and I did go into Forbes' bakery as you say. But I swear to you I left the city last night by the twelve-fifteen, and I swear to you I did not wind up my clock last night. It was this morning between four and five o'clock I found out in Milwaukee that the man was not to be trusted."

"But who wound the clock? I saw you do it, Mr. Leigh—I saw you do it, sir, and all this Milwaukee tale is gammon."

"Again you are wrong. And now, to show you how far you are wrong, I will tell you a secret. I have a deputy. One I told Williams about. He is ill-formed as I am, and so like me when we sit that you would not know the difference across your own store. But our voices are different, very different, and he is more than a foot taller than I. You did not see the winder last night standing up. He always takes his seat before raising the gas."

A light broke in on Timmons. This would explain all. This would make Stamer's story consistent with his own experience of the night before. This would account for this man, whom Stamer said he had shot, being here now, uninjured. This would make the later version of the tale about Milwaukee possible, credible. But—awful but!—it would mean that the unfortunate, afflicted deputy had been sacrificed! Yes, most of what this man had said was true.

"What's the unfortunate deputy's name?" he asked, with a shudder.

"That I will not tell."

"But it must come out on the inquest, to-day or to-morrow, or whenever they find the remains."

"The remains of what?" asked Leigh, frowning heavily.

"Of your deputy. They say in the paper that it was you that lost your life in the fire."

"Fire! Fire! Fire where?" thundered the dwarf, in a voice which shook the unceiled joists above their heads and made the thinner plates of metal vibrate.

"Don't you know? Haven't you seen a paper? Why, Forbes' bakery was burned out last night, and the papers say you lost your life in the fire."

CHAPTER XXIII.

The morning following Hanbury's visit to Grimsby street saw the order of arrival of the ladies in the sitting-room reversed. Mrs. Grace was there first. Edith had been too excited when she went to bed after the young man's disclosures to sleep, and it was not until the small hours were growing big that the girl could close her eyes. As a consequence she was late.

Neither grandmother nor granddaughter was in humor to talk. Edith was occupied with her own thoughts. They had nothing to do that day, for Edith had made up her mind to do nothing about a new situation until Monday. It being now Saturday, there was no time to take any steps that week.

They had not sat down to breakfast until half-past nine, and by ten they had not finished. As the little clock on the mantel-piece struck the hour the landlady's daughter entered to say a lady was below who desired to see Mrs. and Miss Grace.

"I have taken the liberty of coming up without permission," said a voice at the door, and a tall, stately lady, with white hair and dressed in black, appeared at the threshold of the door left open by the attendant.

Mrs. Grace invited her to enter and be seated.

"I need not introduce myself further," the visitor said with a smile, as she sat down, after shaking hands with the two, "than to say I am the mother of Mr. Hanbury, who had the pleasure of calling upon you yesterday evening. I am afraid my visit this morning is as inconveniently early as his last night was late. But the discovery of my dead husband's knowledge of your family affairs, is so extraordinary that I could not deny myself the happiness of calling at the very earliest moment I could get away. You have not even finished breakfast. I fear you will find it hard to forgive me." Her words and smile and manner were so friendly and unassuming that grandmother and granddaughter felt at ease immediately.

That morning John Hanbury awoke to the most unpleasant thoughts about Dora. What ought he to do in the matter? Had he not acted badly to her in not writing the next morning after the scene in the drawing-room?—the very night?

He was wrestling and groaning in spirit when the servant brought a letter to his door. He recognized her writing at once, and tore the envelope open hastily.

He read the letter slowly and with decaying spirit. When he had finished he folded it up deliberately and put it back into the envelope. His face was pale, his lips were apart, his eyes dull, expressionless.

"Be it so," he said at length. "She is right," he added bitterly. "She is always right. She would always be right, and I when I differed from her always wrong. That is not the position a husband should occupy in a wife's esteem."

He went out with no definite object except to be free of interruption. His mind ran on Dora. Now he thought of her with anger, now with affection, now with sorrow. He had no thought of trying to undo her resolve. He acquiesced in it. He was glad it came from her and not from him.

He passed in review the pleasant hours they had spent together. He took a melancholy delight in conjuring up the things they had said, the places they had gone to, the balls, and theaters, and galleries and meetings they had been at with one another. He thought of the last walk they took the walk which led to the present breach between them. It was in this neighborhood somewhere. Ah, he remembered. He would go and see the place once more.

This was the street. What was the meaning of the crowd? When she and he were here last there had been a crowd too. Was there always a crowd here? There had been a fire. Policemen were keeping people back from the front of Forbes' bakery, which was completely gutted, standing a mere shell, with its bare, roofless walls open to the light of heaven. All the floors had fallen, and a fireman with a hose was playing on the smoking rubbish within.

"An unlucky place," thought Hanbury, and at that moment there was a cry of dismay from the crowd. Hanbury drew back. He thought the walls were falling. Presently the cry of dismay changed to a cheer, and the crowd swayed and opened, and through it, from a cab which had just drawn up, walked hastily towards the smoking pile, Oscar Leigh.

"All gone! All gone! The work of seven years! The result of a lifetime! Gone! gone! gone!"

He reeled and would have fallen but that Hanbury caught him and supported him.

Williams appeared, and between Williams and Hanbury the dwarf was led into the private bar in which his learning and occult knowledge had brought him distinction and respect.

A chair was fetched and Leigh was set upon it with his back to the window, so that his eyes might not look upon the grave of his labor.

"All gone! All gone! Nothing left! Nothing left! The work of seven years, day and night! Day and night! Day and night! Gone, all gone!"

"But, Mr. Leigh," said the pale-faced Williams, in a low and very kindly voice, "it might have been ever so much worse."

"Worse! How could it be worse? There is nothing saved."

"Why, thank heaven, Mr. Leigh, you are saved. It was said in some of the papers—and we believed it—that you were burned in the fire."

"And what if I was?"

"Well, your friends are very glad, anyway. Didn't you hear how the people cried out with fear first, for they thought you were a ghost, and didn't you hear how they cheered when they saw it was yourself, alive and well?"

"I! Who am I? What am I? My clock, sir, was all I had in this whole world. It was the savings bank of my heart, my soul, and now the bank is broken and I am beggared."

"But how did you escape, Mr. Leigh?"

"Satan takes care of his own, Mr. Hanbury," he said, speaking for the first time to the young man. "Whatever way you are going, I should like to go, if you would have no objection! I have no way of my own now except the way common to us all."

"I shall be very glad to have your company," said Hanbury, who was sincerely moved at the loss and grief of the little clockmaker.

And leaning on the arm of John Hanbury, Oscar Leigh limped out of the private bar of the public house.

CHAPTER XXIV.

When the two men gained the open air no cab was in sight.

"If you will rest awhile here," said Hanbury, "I'll fetch a cab. I cannot see one up or down the street."

"No," said Leigh, a shudder passing through his frame. "Let us walk, if you do not mind. I could not bear to stay near this place any longer. Is it not strange that you should have wanted a cab in this spot forty-eight hours ago, and I should want it here now?"

"It is strange," said Hanbury, "but the world is very small, and our absolute wants in it are very closely circumscribed." The manner of Leigh had changed in a marked manner. His steps had become slow and more dragged, his breathing more labored, and he had lost all swagger and bounce, and self-assertiveness.

"Sir," said Leigh, "this slow pace befits a funeral. This is my funeral."

"Oh, you mustn't say so. I am sure your clock must have been a terrible loss, but not irreparable."

"I shall begin no other clock. The sands in my own hour-glass are running low already. When a man of my make endures a great shock and a great disappointment he does not endure much more. He dies. Now I am too weak to be your enemy, and I am fit only to be your friend. You will not spurn me?" He paused in their walk and looked up anxiously into Hanbury's face.

"Assuredly not. I will do anything I can for you."

"You will be astonished to hear that I was attracted towards you from the moment I saw you—the attraction of repulsion, no doubt. I have had so long a life of loneliness and repression, I want a few hours of companionship and free-speaking before I die."

"Anything you may tell me to relieve your mind, I shall treat as a secret of my own."

"I know. I wish I were as sure of anything else as I am of you. I lied to you very considerably. I lied because I had imagination; because I had vanity; because people are such idiots."

"What I said about Miracle Gold was mostly a lie also."

"I knew that."

"All right. Most of what I told you about Miracle Gold was a lie. All I told you about making it was a lie. I was about to enter into a league with thieves to take stolen gold, and pretend to make it. I was going to do this for the sake of the fame, not the profit."

"A very dangerous kind of alchemy."

"Anyway I have told you what my scheme was. I told Mrs. Ashton that my clock was independent of my hands for winding up. You heard Williams, the publican, say they saw me wind up my clock last night. Well, I was not near my clock last night."

"But he said he saw you."

"He did. Now you can understand how necessary it was for me to lie."

"I candidly confess I cannot."

"Well, when I conceived the notion of making Miracle Gold I knew I ran a great risk. I thought it might become necessary to prove affirmatives at all events. The proposition of an alibi is an affirmative, the deduction a negative. I told you my clock was my friend. Well, I made it help me in this. I gave out in the public house that my clock had now become so complicated that I had arranged to connect all the movements. The clock was to be wound up by a lever fixed near the window, at which I sat when at work, the only window in the room. Night after night I worked at this lever for half an hour, turning round exactly at a quarter-past twelve to nod at the people. Meanwhile, I was busy constructing a life-sized figure—the body of a man every way as like me as possible. I have skill, a good deal of skill, in modeling. It was made to be moved by the lever, not to move it. I easily timed the head so as to turn at a quarter-past. I inserted in the neck of the figure like myself a movement which would make the head nod before turning away to go on with the winding. You now see my idea?"

"Not quite clearly. But I suspect it."

"Suppose I had to meet one of my clients about the gold, I should make an appointment with him at a quarter past twelve elsewhere. My clock, at twelve o'clock, slowly raised the figure from the floor to the place in which I sat in my chair, turned up the gas, which had been dimmed to the last glimmer that would live, and then released the weight in the chimney and set the figure moving as if working the lever, instead of the lever working it. Thus you see I should have a dozen to swear they saw me in my room, if anything went wrong in my interviews with my clients, or if from any other cause it became necessary for me to prove I was in my workshop between twelve and half-past twelve at night."

"Very ingenious indeed."

"There is not much more to tell. Owing to a reason I need not mention, I made up my mind on Thursday morning to go on with the production of Miracle Gold. I resolved against my better judgment, and gave the word for the first lot of the gold to be delivered at my place at midnight exactly. You know how my afternoon was spent. While at Mrs. Ashton's my better judgment and my worse one had a scuffle, and I made up my mind to decide upon nothing that night, and certainly to commit myself to nothing that night. What you would call the higher influence was at work."

"Pallas-Athena?"

"Yes, if you think that a good name. Any way, I made up my mind to do nothing definite in the interest of Miracle Gold that night. I set my dummy figure—that figure was burned up; not I. I am going fast. Is there no cab? I can hardly breathe. Have you seen Miss Ashton since?"

"I have."

"Since yesterday afternoon?"

"No."

They were standing at a doorstep. Leigh had leaned his side against the area railings for support. His breathing was terrible, and every now and then he gasped, and clutched his hands together.

"If you come to see me to-morrow, perhaps you may not come alone?"

Hanbury flushed. He did not want to make his confession just now.

"Perhaps I may not," he said. "Good-by now."

"Good-by; and thank you for your goodness. You know whom I hope to see with you?"

"Yes."

"Who?"

"Pallas-Athena, of course."

"Of course."

DR. LIVINGSTONE'S HEART.

A Journey to the Tree Under Which It Is Buried.

The second article made up from the journals of the late E. J. Glave, who crossed Africa in the interests of the Century, appears in that magazine. It is devoted to the journey to the Livingstone tree, and gives the following account of this great missionary:

July 8. This is a red-letter day in my career. I have visited the place where Dr. Livingstone's heart is buried beneath a big tree, called mowula, and by the Ilala mpundu. Although done twenty years ago, the inscription is in a splendid state of preservation. The tree shows no disfigurement, and, moreover, the carving is not on the bark, but on the grain of the tree itself. It is a hardwood tree, three feet in diameter at the base; at thirty feet it throws out large branches; its top is a thick mass of foliage. When Livingstone died the heart and other viscera were buried beneath this tree, and the bark was cleared off for a space of two and a half feet square; in this space Jacob Wainwright (whose account my discovery verifies to the letter) carved the inscription with no dunce's hand, the letters being well shaped and bold. The tree is situated at the edge of the grass plain, and is very conspicuous, being the largest tree in the neighborhood. It is about five miles south-southwest from the present site of the village of Karonga Nzofu, an important Bisa chief, whose father was a friend of Livingstone. Chitambo's is now ten miles away. It was originally near the tree; in fact, Livingstone died a few minutes' walk from the old village of Chitambo. About ten years ago Chitambo was so harassed by the Awemba raiders of Chiquanda that he left his village. The sacred tree has often heard the fierce yell of the man-hunters, and the screams of women and children and wounded men.

Livingstone's long prayers for Africa's deliverance have not yet received fair response. Since his death new raiders have appeared in the shape of Awemba from the north. There is now no vestige of Chitambo's old village standing—merely a big space covered with young timber. The Livingstone tree looks sturdy and healthy, and likely to last many years. I do not see how I can contribute to the future recognition of the place; metal, if I had it, would be stolen. There are no stones in the district to make a cairn. The tree will outlive any wooden cross I might erect. Several of the older men at Karonga Nzofu's remember Dr. Livingstone, and describe his appearance very well indeed; they mention the cap he always wore.

July 9. To-day I revisited the tree where Livingstone died, and in order to guide others to the exact spot, in case this tree should disappear from any cause, I selected another big tree likely to last many years, cleared away two and a half square feet of its bark, and in the space marked as follows: "This tree is magnetic southwest of the tree where Livingstone's remains are buried, and is forty-five paces from it." I brought away a bit of the bark of the memorable tree—a dead part, so as not to be guilty of vandalism.

Livingstone's grave is in a quiet nook, such as he himself desired, in the outskirts of a forest bordering on a grass plain where the roan buck and eland roam in safety. When I visited the place turtle-doves were cooing in the tree-tops, and a litter of young hyenas had been playing near by; in the low ground outside the hole leading to the cave were their recent tracks; they had scampered into safety at our approach.

A well-known oculist says that opera glasses which may be hired in most theaters frequently become the medium of spreading very serious eye diseases.

GREAT WINTER SPORT

ICE BOATS SKIM THE NORTHERN FROZEN LAKES.

Go Faster than the Wind, and Because of the Great Speed Are Difficult to Manage—Danger Lies in Cracks and Obstacles.

On Wings of Wind.

With winter comes the ice, and there is nothing that affords more sport than a well-constructed iceboat in the hands of an experienced person. Ice boating is not as dangerous as some other sports on the ice, but one must always be on the lookout for cracks in the ice, logs of wood and other obstacles. The iceboat, under favorable conditions, travels nearly ten times faster than does the ordinary sailboat, and therefore it is more difficult to handle. They have been known to attain a speed of nearly 100 miles an hour, while it is no uncommon thing for an ordinary iceboat to jog along at a speed of fifty miles an hour. While flying at a high rate of speed the least turn of the tiller may cause the boat to change its course, capsizing it, or, perhaps, running it into some obstacle.

SPEEDING BEFORE THE GALE.

Like sailboats, iceboats are of various designs, each having some particular advantage, but invariably the owner will tell you that his is the best possible method. The momentum of a boat depends largely upon its size and the breadth of its sails in proportion to the dimensions of the boat. Nearly all standard boats are rigged alike, or nearly so, but the cheaper boats are more for experiment and are often arranged differently. Most people imagine that after the first heavy fall of snow ice boating must be dispensed with, but such is not the case. The iceboats are so constructed that they will plow through a foot of snow, the skates being attached to a flange which raises the body of the boat about eighteen inches above the ice.

An iceboat is simple in construction, being in the shape of a triangle. There are three skates under it, two of which are at the front. The fore runners are generally much heavier and larger than is the hind runner, for the reason that they bear a larger proportion of the weight. The tiller is at the extreme end of the boat, so that it requires little force to steer the boat. The average head of the iceboat is from 12 to 18 feet long, and from 5 to 8 feet wide. The spar is at the bow of the boat and the sail projects half way over the bow. Most of the boats have only one sail, which consists of about 50 yards of canvas, but in many instances a jib, foresail and topsail are used. All sails may be reefed.

There will be a greater variety of iceboats this winter than ever before. They range from the small boy's boat, which may be considered a toy, to the larger ones which carry nearly as much canvas as do some of the large schooners.

ICE YACHTING ON LAKE WINNEBAGO.

A Glimpse of Rosa Bonheur.

Mr. Vanderbilt and Mr. Avery went down to By one morning to see Mme. Rosa Bonheur at her country place on the outskirts of the Forest of Fontainbleau. Her well-appointed trap met them at the station, and carried them to the house in time for luncheon. Mme. Bonheur poured out their wine for them herself, and they talked of the forest and the beautiful surroundings of her home. "Yes," she said; "but I hear them cutting down trees in the forest sometimes, and every blow of the ax hurts my heart." She had met Mr. August Belmont, and had received commissions from him to paint two pictures when he was United States minister at The Hague. She had told him that she was exceedingly busy and couldn't paint them very soon, and he had said: "How long must I wait? One year—two years? I am getting old, and I want them soon." She asked him how old he was, and when he said, "Seventy-one," she replied, "That is my age, too." So she shook hands with him, and told him she would paint the pictures for him at once. Mme. Bonheur related this incident to her visitors, and added: "Mr. Belmont is a great Democrat, isn't he? When will he be elected President of the United States?" She evidently thought his chances were very good, but Mr. Vanderbilt told her he thought they were about as good as his own, and his he considered painfully small; so Mme. Bonheur was enlightened on American politics. "At this time," says Mr. Avery, "she did not seem at all old. She had a refined, womanly face and a very sweet voice. Her temperament was bright and gay, and her manner charming."—Century.

Success Is Easily Attained.

"The appearance is that only a comparatively small number of people ever quite realize what an easy thing success would be if only they made effective the means to it which they have already in hand," writes Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, D. D., in an article on "The Young Man on the Fence," in the Ladies' Home Journal. "Differences among people in respect to efficiency are far less an affair of resources than they are a matter of getting those resources trained upon a particular point, and of getting that point so close to the eye and the heart that it shall be able to draw those energies along convergent lines, like a sun-glass that will convert ordinary temperature into heat by contracting solar lines to a focus. It is worth a whole fortune to get well stirred up, to get all the energies of one's being drawn out in warm intensity up on a single object. A good deal of the success of even a man like St. Paul is due to that posture of mind and of life which he expressed when he said, 'This one thing I do.' He was wholly drawn in under the power of a single purpose. He was aglow with that purpose. Everything within him was combustible material, which he laid upon the crackling bonfire of that purpose. Success was, therefore, easy to him."

Race Track Veterans.

When the racing career of a horse is over he is seldom, if ever, heard from again. The stallions, if of good breeding, go to the stud and often become famous through their posterity, and the mares of every class go to the stock farms. Very few of the geldings are killed outright, yet a broken-down thoroughbred is about of as much use as a last year's sunbeam.

Jay Eye See may be seen nearly every day on the streets of the city where J. I. Case makes his reapers. Parole, the winner of eighty-seven races in this country and in England, is on Pierre Lorillard's place at Jobstown, N. Y.

Patrick, the property of Pat Dunne, Chicago's famous horseman, has been turned out to end his days in peace and plenty of grass on Eugene Leigh's farm.

Old Barnum, who ran until he was 16 years old, earned the title of the Iron Horse long before "Pa" Bradley's Blitzen was foaled. Barnum's last appearance in a race was at East St. Louis, where he was beaten by a lot of cheap skates, a sad end to the racing career of the conqueror of Hanover.

Lexington, Longfellow, Glenco, Bonnie Scotland and Leamington died on the farms they helped to make famous.

But to old Sunday belongs the honor of dying under saddle in the field of battle. Sunday, by Sun Dance, was a big, handsome bay horse. He was a terror in the ring for several years, until at last he outlived his usefulness and died from poison administered in an apple. In the inclosure, just at the head of the home-stretch, the old sprinter lies buried. A marble slab marks the spot, which is fenced with iron as a result of a contribution from many admirers of the old campaigner who had profited by his gameness and speed.—Boston Standard.

The Deadly Stamp.

One of the newest diseases is the postage stamp tongue. The credit of discovering it is due to English physicians.

It appears that the mucilage itself is injurious, and that, further, it is an excellent cultivating medium for germs of the worst character. In the ailment called postage stamp tongue the latter is sore and covered with red spots. A bad sore throat is likely to follow if great care is not taken. Apart from the specific disease of the tongue, any contagious disease may be acquired through the medium of the mucilage.

Never lick a postage stamp with your tongue, say the physicians. It shows a great lack of cleanliness and hygienic knowledge.

M. Maxime Avoine, the Paris sculptor, committed suicide over his dismissal from the Ecole Des Artes Decoratifs for expressing revolutionary views of the Carmeaux troubles.

The Constitution.

"The makers of our constitution, instructed by the experience of the colonies, by the State constitutions already adopted, and by earlier lessons from British history, found an easy agreement upon the general principle that the judicial power of the United States should be vested in a separate and independent department," writes ex-President Harrison in his "This Country of Ours" paper in the Ladies' Home Journal. "The division of powers will be made plainer by bringing together the opening sentences of the first three articles of the constitution:

"'Article 1. All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States.'

"'Article 2. The executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America.'

"'Article 3. The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish.'

"Upon this threefold frame the other provisions of the constitution are hung. The limitations upon the powers of the United States courts will be more clearly understood if what has been before said in another connection is recalled here—namely, that the powers of government in this country are divided between the nation and the States upon the principle that certain powers are set off to the United States, and all other powers, save a few that are prohibited, are retained by the States. The constitution enumerates the powers which the people have given to the nation. The judicial power of the United States is, therefore, such power of a judicial nature as the constitution gives to the United States—no more. The residue of the judicial power the people have reserved in the grant to the United States, and have given the whole, or such part of this reserved power as pleased them, to the State courts."

The Civilizing Power of Irrigation.

The evolution process of the last twenty years has brought out some very valuable lessons for the future of California. It has demonstrated that irrigation is essential to the highest standard of civilization. The census of 1890 revealed the fact that two-thirds of the gain in rural population stood to the credit of eight counties where irrigation prevailed. The counties which rely upon rainfall had about reached a standstill or scored a loss. The people have always been divided on the question as to whether irrigation is necessary. Those who oppose urge that it breeds malaria and injures the quality of the fruit. Those who favor insist that it is essential to the most scientific agriculture, and to the maintenance of dense population. The last twenty years have answered the question forever. The answer consists of a comparison between the South and the North. The one was born of the irrigation canal; the other of the mining camp and the wheat ranch. The one is characterized by a high civilization; the other by a low one.—Century.

Here's a Cool House.

The house of the water tubes is the remarkable building freak of a German inventor, who claims that he has solved the problem of a constant temperature that may be regulated at will, and incidentally secured a structure that combines the elements of strength, comfort and beauty.

He first put up a skeleton of his house, the frame for walls and floors being of water tubing, connected with a pumping and boiler system in the basement. Around this skeleton he put up his house in the ordinary way. The tubes were within the walls and between the floors and ceilings. In the summer time this tubing is connected with the regular water supply and a steady stream flows through the pipes in the walls and under the floors, circulating under pressure, absorbing the heat of the walls and floors as it flows. During the long and severe winter the tubing is connected with the boiler and water heated to 100 degrees forced through the circuit of pipes. The water at the outlet is found to have decreased to 40 degrees, the remaining 60 degrees having been distributed throughout the house. The speed of the circulation of water can be regulated so as to allow the fixing and maintenance of a certain temperature throughout the building.

Killed 'Em with Clubs.

Jeff Hardin, a farmer who lives on the River road, opposite the Six-Mile Island, went to Louisville recently with a wagon load of squirrels, all of which he disposed of, and in consequence the squirrel market was glutted. Mr. Hardin killed the entire lot in a few minutes, and with a big stick at that.

He said that he had a six-acre field of corn on his farm, but that during the past few weeks the squirrels had come from the neighboring woods in great droves and had all but devastated his crop. He tried every means known to frighten or drive the frisky little pests away, but without avail, so he finally determined to turn the cornfield into a slaughter-house.

Early one morning, before the sun had fairly got his sleepy face above the horizon, Mr. Hardin and his 17-year-old son armed themselves with sticks and moved off in the direction of the cornfield. The field is bounded on two sides by the river, and on the other two by open fields. Mr. Hardin approached from one of the open sides and his son from the other. At the sight of the farmers the squirrels leaped nimbly from the stalks and scampered off across the corn rows. Mr. Hardin and his son pursued and finally cornered them down near the river. There the slaughter took place, and for a time the field ran rivers of blood, so Mr. Hardin says.

At any rate a wagon load of squirrels was killed by the two farmers, who say that nearly as many more dodged by them or jumped into the river and were drowned. The wagon contained exactly 763 of the dead pests, so Mr. Hardin says, and he is responsible for the statement that there are thousands more in the neighborhood that he will bring in if his cornfield is again molested.—Louisville Post.

Worked by Water Power.

The importance of employing good engineering skill, where, although the first cost of professional fees is large, the amount may ultimately be saved many times over, is well illustrated in the case of the Comstock silver mines, which, according to the Age of Steel, was much troubled with water, although situated in a mountainous country. The engineers suggested that by driving a tunnel through the hill not only could the mines be drained, but the troublesome overflowing water be utilized. A tunnel was accordingly made, the overflowing waters and adjoining stream were diverted down a shaft to the bottom of the mine, some 1,700 feet under the level, and in chamber excavations at the bottom of the shaft were placed several pelton water wheels, against which this heavy fall of water was directed. The wheels drove electric generators, which in turn, by an electric cable running up the shaft, drove electric motors, and in this way all steam machinery was dispensed with, the expensive cost of all fuel avoided and the entire pumping machinery done away with. But, more than this, the entire mines can now be worked by water power at a great financial saving.

Not Worth It.

Judge Walton, who presides over a court at Washington, is a man of grim humor. One time, in the lobby, a member of the bar was seeking to convey the impression to a group, of whom Judge Walton was the center, that his income from his profession was very large.

"I have to earn a good deal," the lawyer said; "it seems a large story to tell, Judge, but my personal expenses are six thousand dollars a year. It costs me that to live."

"That is too much, Brother S——," said the Judge; "I wouldn't pay it; it isn't worth it."

Not to Be Thought Of.

Miss Marion Peck, niece of Ferdinand Peck, of Chicago, two years ago began sitting for a full length portrait to James McNeil Whistler. In all there were ninety sittings, extending over a period of two years, in London and Paris. The portrait was finished last spring, and the price, a big sum, was tendered the artist. He refused to part with the portrait, however. "What!" said he, "send this masterpiece to Chicago? No, indeed!" He has steadily refused to part with it.

Chinese Tea Shops.

The tea shop in China is an important institution, for it serves as a news depot where people go to hear the latest gossip; it is, moreover, a business house, where men buy and sell, discuss the financial situation and otherwise make it serve the purpose of a club.

She—Isn't it wonderful to think of the achievements of science? So many things have been brought within the reach of the masses. He—Yes, indeed! Some years ago golden hair was the boast of a favored few; now, anybody can have it that wants it.—Puck.

Merchant—What position do you desire in our establishment, sir? College Graduate—Oh, something like confidential adviser or general manager. Merchant—Good! You may have both jobs. I will make you an office boy.—Judge.

The season is rapidly approaching when people lie about doing better next year.

CASH! WHY? CASH!

We have discovered that we can save our customers money by doing away with our books entirely. Everybody wants to buy CHEAP and we know we can sell you enough CHEAPER to more than offset the inconvenience (if it is an inconvenience) We desire to state briefty why we are changing to a STRICKLY CASH BASIS on HARDWARE and cash or notes for farm machinery, wagons and buggies.

1st Nearly all other stores in Auburn are doing a cash business and we have to carry more accounts than we can afford to do. at the prices we have been getting.

2d .It takes an extra man to keep books and we propose to do with one less man and cut the profit that much, thereby SAYING YOU MONEY.

3d In a busy day we quite frequently forget to charge as we afterwards find out when men come to pay for goods and we have nothing charged to them.

4th Some few people when they owe an account and have not enough money to pay it and buy the articles they need in our line will go some place else and buy and pay them the cash, and still owe us on account.

5th A few accounts get mixed as for instance J. Jones buys something and it is charged, and when we start out to make our collections, we wonder whether it is John, Joseph, Jacob or Jonathan Jones. We try all of them, get CURSED by most of them, and paid by none of them, sometimes.

6th We meet all competition in price and now we propose to beat all competition by buying for cash and selling for cash.

7th We are going to sell at such close margins that we will get the hardware trade because prices will tell.

Come and see us when you want anything in our line and we will explain our system more fully to you.

Very Respectfully Yours.

THEY WORKED WONDERS.

That is What the Physicians of the Howard Institute Did Last Night at Henry's Opera House.

M. N. WARD WALKS AGAIN.

Without the Aid of Crutches —An Almost Helpless Rheumatic Invalid For Years.

Bad Weather, But a A Big Crowd —Lecture and Clinic For Ladies Only To Night.

Wednesday's Daily.

Although the weather was bad for people to turn out, a large audience assembled last night to hear the finest lecture and see the first clinic given by Prof. Z. L. Howard given at Henry's Opera House. Last evening's entertainment began promptly at eight o'clock with a short introductory talk by Prof Z. L. Howard, principally on the business and cures effected by the Howard Medical Institute of Cleveland, Ohio. Dr. Zaro L. Howard is one of the most gifted talkers ever heard here, and he was ably assisted by E. E. Beeler.

Prof. Howard had hardly got started in his talk when M. M. Ward who lives at the corner of VanBuren and Third streets, was carried into the Opera House on a cot bed by four men. He was carried upon the stage to be given treatment by the physician. Mr. Ward is known here as a good honest citizen; he stated to the Doctor that he he had been affected with rheumatism so bad that he had not been able to work for four years, and has been confined to his bed for months, so he could turn over in bed or feed himself. He stated last evening that he had not taken a step for over three months, could not even sit up in bed a few moments as a time. He was taken into a private room and given treatment lasting not over twenty-five minutes, and the man was able to get up from his bed of sickness and walk without aid of any kind, stamp his feet, all pain and stiffness was gone. The large audience were electrified at this more than wonderful cure, and Mr. Ward's wife and friends were more than pleased. Prof. Howard stated that one treatment would not cure Mr. Word, but that it would take three month to do so, and the Doctor then announced, amid much manifest enthusiasm for Mr. Ward, that instead of giving the sick man the trial treatment free only, that he would be given the entire three months treatment and all necessary medicines free.

The work done last evening was of a nature that deserves only words of praise, and the "COURIER" has only words of praise for this work, for they proved last night that they could do all they claim to do.

There will be a private lecture for ladies only this evening at Henry's Opera House, the subject is, "Maid Wife and Mother." The lecture will be illustrated by some of the most wonerful views ever brought to this country, a lecture every lady in the city should hear. Dr. Howard will be assisted at this lecture by his wife, Mrs. Z. L. Howard, the eminent complexion specliast. An admission of 20 cents will be charged to this lecture, no reserved seats. Office hours at the Swineford Hotel 9 a. m. to 6 p. m. Consultation free to all. Door open this evening at 7:30. Clinic at 8. The Doctor will be here for ten days yet.

Remembered.

Rev. J. D. Brosy pastor of the Lutheran churh, and his family were kindly remembered by friends of Auburn. On christmas evening he was the recipient of a fine $18.00 overcoat; Mrs. Brosy of a handsome hamper; and Paul the baby of a nice baby toilet set. Each year since we lived in Auburn, we have been kindly remembered by the church and by friends outside. The presents received have all been very valuable and they assure the friends that they are highly appreciated by us. All we can do, is to say to the donors, many thanks for your kind remembrance. You shall ever live green in our memories. One loves to live where friends greet him on every side, surely our lot was cast in pleasant places, and for this we thank God. Again we say to the friends many thanks for your kind remembrance.

The Contempt Case

This was called up yesterday afternoon and Judge Penfield announced that a statement in writing disclaiming any intention of bringing the court into disrepute would be accepted by the court and no further prosecutions would be held against them. Later on these papers were prepared and read. Judge Lowry acting for J. W. Baxter read a statement prepared by the latter. Mr. McNagny then read a similar statement prepared by T. R. Marshall; Mr. Roby read one prepared by D. M. Link. The only one of these statements that the Judge would accept was that of Mr Link, which he at one declared was satisfactory as it made an apology in addition to the statement made by the others. Judge Lowry and Mr. McNagny then made pleas for their clients, and before the trial stopped, Judge Lowry made a second speech. It was the most able, eloquent and fervid speech we have heard for many a year, his chief line, being to cite cases of well known and eminent jurists, who had acted on the principle that the dignity of their court would be better preserved by a dignified silence, rather than by an exercise of the power to punish, which is undoubtedly lodged in the hands of any judge. Mr. Hartman read a statement by Cal. Husselman and another by Karl Gerner, but neither of them was considered by the Judge as sufficient and when McNagny arose to make a further expanation, he was not allowed to proceed. After working awhile on the McIntosh case, the parties read amended statements, which were accepted. There is a good deal of favorable and unfavorable comment made as to this case. It is no doubt an unfortunate thing for all concerned.

Caught a Badger.

J. M. Carmer returned from Lagrange county the other day and brought word that his brother-in-law, Fred Krum had caught a large badger The animal was known to be in the section of the country near Lima and old hunters had been after him with guns, dogs and traps. But he outwitted them all. When Fred found the badger had dug a new home near him, he borrowed a big wolf trap and set it in the mouth of the hole covering it deep. He finally got his game. The badger is a very large one, and being taken alive is quite a curiosity. Fred will sell him, as plenty of people would like to have such a rare animal.

Changes Management

Tomorrow, there is a change of management in the Swineford Hotel, Mr. Forkner retiring from the management and being succeeded by Geo. Swineford. Mr. Forkner retires from this, his second term, with the good will of the patronizing public. He has been very successful in keeping up the prestige of this popular hotel. We do not know, as to what he will now turn his attention, but trust some good place is open to him.

George Swineford, the incoming manager, is also well known to the public, as he has been in the hotel also, a previous term. He made a good record then, and we have no doubt will be successful now, and that the Swineford House, under his management, will retain its high place in public favor.

B. & O. Wreck

The Courier's Correspondent Gives some Newsy Items from St. Joe.

The B. & O. people had a little taste of the old time wreck at this place Sunday evening about 8 o'clock. A freight train going east was standing on main track with the caboose, and an old passenger coach near the elevator. It is said that the coach had no rear lights and could not be seen by train following, which came around the curve a half mile west at a 20-mile an hour gate. The crew of the train following the one standing on the track did not perceive their danger until within a few hundred feet b it in time to jump and thereby save themselves. The engine crashed into the coach driving the the back trucks forward and the coach into the rear end of a freight car loaded with oats, the oats were unloaded in a twinkling and lay strewn along the track for two hundred feet. The wrecking train was promptly notified and had the main track clear by midnight. The coach was torn all to pieces and is being burnt up by the section hands. Happily no one was in the coach at the time and no one was hurt except the engineer of the rear train who jumped and was somewhat banged up thereby.

BUTLER.

Butler people were remembered by a host of their friends from distant point during the holiday season.

Health seems to have been once more restored to our people. But few cases of illness are reported in town or vicinity.

Our rural friends, not to be out-done by our urban population, have purchased the old "New Beech," school house, and removed it to Creager's corners two miles northeast of Butler, and fitted it up for a farmers hall, in which to hold friendly discussions about the best manner of husbandry and other kindred topics, sandwitched with an occasional, oyster supper or other festive occasion. We commend their enterprise and feel assumed that good will flow from such intercourse among themselves.

Recent advices, report Daniel D. Knisely as being on the mend.

John Plowe has given up his work as oil man, for the Wabash at Ashley, on account of age and illness, and has returned to his home at Butler.

Major C. T. Picton is manager of the State Hotel, at Denison, Texas, which traveling men say is one of the best hotels in that section. In speaking of Chamberlin's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy, Major Picton says: "I have used it myself and in my family for several years and take pleasure in saying that I consider it an infallible cure for diarrhœa and dysentery. I always recommend it and have frequently administered it to my guests in the hotel and in every case it has proven itself worthy of unqualified endorsement. For sale by Davenport the Druggist. 52

—An exchange says: "A piano tuner working the moth and mice fake has been doing the good people of Portland. His method is to examine a piano and pretend to find evidences of mot[illegible]ice in the instrument. If giv[illegible] of cleaning he produces a mou[illegible] or some dead moths to prove his sto[illegible] These he carries with him and deft[illegible] moth-balls in the piano while pretending to clean it. He may be headed this way and the ladies are warned to be on their guard. Never intrust your piano to a tuner or repairer you do not know anything about. Your piano is more apt to be injured than helped. The only safe way is to trust your piano to some responsible local tuner. Then if it is wrong you have recourse.

—There are a great many of the unfortunate ones in this world, greater in number than those who are blessed with good digestion. To some people the greatest misfortune is not to be able to eat everything set before them "I suffered for years with Dyspepsia, and everything I ate disagreed with me. I was induced to try Simmons Liver Regulator and was cured. I now eat everything." M. Bright, Madison Parish, La.

—Mr. and Mrs. Leyda returned this morning to Huntington, going via Columbia City.

—Leveret Williams, of Troy remembered the WEEKLY to-day, as he generally does about this date.

—Mr. and Mrs. S. L. Gibson spent Christmas with the family of Fin Gibson in Angola, returning home yesterday afternoon.

—ONE GRAND CONCERT SIZE WASHBURN GUITAR can be bought less than wholesale price at D. A. Hodge's This is a rare bargain.

—P. L. Gibson attended the concert on the 24th at Ft. Wayne given by the Princeton College Glee, Banjo and Mandolin Clubs.

—Prof. J. C. Teeters and wife have a new arrival at their home in the person of a bright little girl. The COURIER with their many friends welcomes the little miss.

—G. S. Elsten at Chicago Junction writes of the irregularity in getting the COURIER. We will see that it leaves the office properly wrapped and labeled and hope he will get it O. K. hereafter.

—MARRIED:—At the the Lutheran parsonage this afternoon at 3:30 by Rev. J. D. Brosy, George W. Rakestraw and Elvesta Grogg. They will make their future home on the old Rakestraw farm two miles west of Auburn.

—Philip Fluke has been confined to his house on west Seventh street the past three weeks with rheumatism. He has been missed on our streets of late as it has been almost a month since Mr. Fluke has been able to walk up town. At this writing he is feeling somewhat improved.

—Miss Marcia Gray, an old time teacher in Auburn died today 11:30 a. m. at the home of her sister Mrs. Wallace in Ft. Wayne. She was a sister of Truman Gray an old resident of Richland. Mrs. J. R. Steves went down in answer to a telegram, on the afternoon train. Deceased will be buried at Kendallville.

—Dun's Review speaks rather gloomily of business prospects. It says many branches of business show reductions in wages or a stop of work. Steel has gone down in price and the volume of business in general is smaller. But they said business would be greatly improved if McKinley was elected. Evidently they didn't know what they were talking about.

—The U. S. and Canadian Customs officers cannot agree as to what duty if any should be paid on natural gas. There is a pipe line from Shirkston, Canada to Buffalo that carries gas and if 'natural gas' comes under the head of "crude minerals" it goes free. But the officers at Buffalo think it should be classified as "raw unmanufactured articles," on which a duty of 10 per cent must be paid. The matter is now before the supreme court of New York.

—Kendallville Sun:—Mr. Geo. Strayer of Ashley, is in the city to-day, in conference with our people concerning the new railway project, the Ashley, Kendallville & Southwestern railroad. Much of the preliminary work was discussed, and the prospect for earnest and decisive action soon is very flattering. Mr. Strayer and several of our citizens will visit Albion tomorrow to confer with the people at that place. As we have observed on former occasions, keep your weather on our new railroad.

—Kendallville Sun:—On Saturday we received a call from Mrs. Sherwood and Mrs. Snyder of DeKalb county. The former is a grand daughter and the other a step daughter of the late Thomas Chandler, whose death took place suddenly a few weeks ago. Mrs. Sherwood is the wife of Mr. Sherwood, who recently brought suit against Mr. Chandler for alienating the affections of his wife from him. Both ladies are feeling quite keenly the stories that were put into circulation that Mr. Chandler's death was due to poisoning, etc. They produced a copy of the coroner's verdict, which showed that his death was due to an internal hemorrhage and that no trace of poison was found in the stomach and no circumstances indicated that the death was due to other than natural causes. Mr. and Mrs. Sherwood are still living apart. The child which he kept from her for a time is now in her possession, she having secured it by stratagem, and she insists she will keep it.

—Dr. James Squires was a caller Monday. He has some interest in court. He has recently spent a few weeks in Arkansas, where he and his son Lloyd put in their time hunting. They got three deer during the trip. Lloyd has been teaching in the south.

—George Kennedy, formerly of Waterloo was here Monday, visiting friends. He is now located at Kent, Ohio practicing dentistry, and was back for a Christmas visit with his parents.

—Good Rubber's at Wilson's.

—Get ready to turn over a new leaf to-morrow.

—Many of our merchants will adopt the cash system on January 1, 1897.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

PURELY VEGETABLE.

The cheapest, purest and best family medicine in the world! An effectual specific for all diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Spleen. Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common, as a bad breath; and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your appetite, complexion and general health.

CONSTIPATION

should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact, nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache, for the relief of which take Simmons Liver Regulator.

DIED

Helmuth Schutt, an aged gentleman who resided on south VanBuren street died last night. Particulars concerning the funeral will be announced later.

Wedding Bells

A very pleasant affair took place at the commodious home of Mr. and Mrs. Gustis Shultz in Franklin township Thursday evening Dec. 25, it being the marriage of their only daughter, Miss Alice and M. A. Faucett of Waterloo. Miss Alice is a young lady highly esteemed and respected by all who know her and who was ever ready to lend a helping hand to the educational social and moral influences of her neighborhood. Mr. Faucett is a young man of moral temperate and industrious habits, having been an employe of the Lake Shore Company at Waterloo for a number of years. A. L. Shultz and Miss Effie Loutzenhouser acting as grooms man and idesmaid; the wedding march was played by Mrs. Chas. Barr, of Waterloo, and the ceremony performed at 7 p. m. by Rev. D. E. Zechiel, of the Evangelical church, of which Mr. Faucett is a member, in the presence of about thirty friends and relatives after which all were seated to a grand feast which was well prepared and fitting for the occasion. The evening was spent in music and songs. A number of valuable and useful presents were received. Mr. and Mrs. Faucett will make their future home in Waterloo, and we all join in wishing them a happy and prosperous life.

Swearing off.

(Chicago Record.)

I'm goin' to be meaner 'n I was last year!
I don't give a durn for New Year's day
If every man walked in the narrer way
Angels'd be wantin' to move down here;
This swearin' off bizness don't pay—
I don't give a cuss for New Year's day.

I'm sorry I didn't smoke more last year,
An' I know I didn't swear half enough
Things kep' agoin' so daggone tough;
It's kinder gettin' that I don't keer
If I'm meaner 'n pizen to the jays
Who're always "quittin'" on New Year's days.

I ain't got a thing that I'm takin' back,
An' I'll keep my pipes, 'n jug 'n jaw;
I'm goin' to quit bringin' myself up to taw,

The total Japanese railway mileage on March 1, 1896, was 2,290 miles, says Consul Uchida. At the same time 1,368 miles were under construction, and charters have been applied for covering an additional 655 miles. A ship canal from Osaka, across to the west coast of the island is also under discussion. The actual cutting would be about twenty-two miles.

In the course of a talk in New York Moody said: "I received from Texas this morning a letter saying there had been 100 conversions last week in one Texas prison, and I guess they'll hold out about as well as New Yorkers. I believe that if an archangel were flying over New York to-day he would not pay any attention to any of these places up on Fifth avenue. Why should he?"

A genius, Frank Lynch, sprang a new flim game that showed enterprise, if not honesty. He bought drinks, covertly placed the change in his mouth and demanded his money, offering to let his victim search him. It worked well until he struck a barkeep who was on to a few tricks himself. He jabbed the flimmer in the side and the latter began to choke. He had swallowed about 75 cents and was led a penitent to the station-house.

A society for the study of mushrooms has been organized in Philadelphia. It will meet every two weeks and members will read papers on such topics as "Mushrooms That Have Helped Me." The organizers say that there are about 235 edible kinds of mushrooms to be found about Philadelphia and that tons of the delicious food go to waste simply because people have a horror of what are known as toadstools, only four kinds of which are really poisonous.

Speicherville, a village on the Big Four Railroad, four miles north of Wabash, Ind., which has been a station on the old C., W. & M., and now the Michigan division of the Big Four, for twenty-five years, is no longer a railway station or a postoffice. The postoffice was abolished several months ago because no one could be found to take it, and now the Big Four Railroad has issued a bulletin which removed Speicherville from the time card. No trains will stop there hereafter.

A young son of Captain William Creighton, in the lower part of Dorchester County, Maryland, has an unusual amount of stubbornness and also considerable nerve. He peremptorily declined to go to school, whereupon his father told him that he would compel him to go. He replied if force was used he would cut off one of his toes, so that he would be unable to walk. No attention was paid to this threat, and his mother accompanied him to school. When he returned in the evening he deliberately got a sharp hatchet, went to a chopping block and coolly chopped off three of his toes.

The marvelous skill with which nature adapts means to ends is especially illustrated in the case of the eye of the mole. Burrowing, as he does, in light, often sandy, soil, highly organized vision would be of no particular use to him, especially as he depends on his nose for following and obtaining his prey. The eye of the mole is, therefore, very small, merely a black dot, and, is believed by comparative anatomists to be incapable of accurate vision, serving only to give the animal the impression of light, an impression which is probably painful, as for a mole to be in the light of day subjects him to deadly peril from predaceous birds and animals.

England's stamp collectors, as their part in the celebration next year of Queen Victoria's attainment of the "record" as tenant of the British throne, are to hold an international philatelic exhibition. It will begin late in July in the galleries of the Royal Institution of Painters in Water Colors, and the duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha and the duke of York are among the prominent collectors who have promised to support the enterprise. It will embrace British, colonial and foreign postage stamps, envelopes, postcards, news bands, philatelic appliances, literature and curiosities and objects of interest in connection with the postal service.

War on British dredges has been declared by some of the leading dredging companies of the United States. These companies have filed protests at Washington against permitting dredges from Canada working upon the government contract in the Delaware river and bay. The dredge lately towed from Montreal has been seized by the Philadelphia customs officials for violating the customs laws of the United States. Other dredges are on their way from Canada. A transfer to American owners is now being examined by the authorities, the new owners claiming that they have the right to use the plant in American waters. At the bottom of this trouble lies a row between rival American dredging companies and contractors for dredging.

A Fight in the Transvaal.

The stories of fighting between Boers and English in South Africa have a strong resemblance to those of Indian fighting in the old days in New England. Bullets are exchanged between excellent marksmen concealed behind stones and bushes, and each bullet has, under such circumstances, an immense value.

The Cape Mercury says that Mr. Sampson, one of the Johannesburg "reformers," still in prison at Pretoria, is the hero of a famous combat with old Botha, a Boer fighter of renown. In the Boer war of 1881 Sampson and Botha found themselves behind stones on a level plain, shooting at each other. Sampson presently made sure that he had hit Botha and raised his head a little, when a bullet plowed his neck.

"My man is dead," exclaimed Botha, and exposed himself. At the same instant a bullet from Sampson's rifle struck him.

"This time I've got him!" shouted Sampson, and raised himself up, but a bullet grazed his side and he dropped. Botha now had no doubt that he had ended his antagonist, and jumped up on his feet, only to be again laid low.

Though the men were now past fighting, with two bad wounds apiece, both recovered, and when Sampson settled in the Transvaal they became great friends, and often chaffed each other about this encounter.

No Danger for Him.

A certain doctor had occasion, when only a beginner in the medical profession, to attend a trial as a witness. Counsel, in cross-examining the young M. D., made several sarcastic remarks, doubting the ability of so young a man to understand his business. "Do you know the symptoms of concussion of the brain?" asked the learned counsel. "I do," replied the doctor. "Well," continued the attorney, "suppose my learned friend, Mr. Bagwig, and myself were to bang our heads together, should we get concussion of the brain?" "Your learned friend, Mr. Bagwig, might," said the doctor, quietly.

Politics of the Day

MEXICO'S PROSPERITY.

Mexico is satisfied with the silver standard. The government, said President Diaz, in taking the oath of office for the fourth consecutive term on December 1st last, will stick to the silver standard, as being, in the opinion of the administration, the one best adapted to the country, and as affording it, at the present rate of exchange, an immense protection to home industries, while at the same time securing for its exports a gold premium, which operates as a bounty to tropical planters.

Now, how does this gold premium operate as a bounty? Take the coffee planter. The silver cost of production is no greater to-day than ten or twenty years ago, though the gold for which he sells his coffee is worth twice as much as it was prior to 1873. So the coffee planter sending his coffee to New York or London, and selling it for a gold price but very little short of that obtained twenty years ago, gets twice as much silver, gets twice as much money for his coffee. Thus it is that the premium on gold not only has nominally but actually doubled the value of the crops of the Mexican coffee planter. Is it any wonder he prospers and is enlarging production and increasing shipments to a marvelous extent?

And if we now turn the case around, and look at the effect of this premium on gold on imports into Mexico, what do we find? We find that though British and American manufactured goods are offered for a smaller gold price than ten or twenty years ago, the price to the Mexican has increased, for he has to pay twice as much for the gold he must give in payment as he was required to pay in 1873. The result has been a rise in price to the Mexican of everything bought from abroad. And as silver has kept a stable purchasing power in Mexico, this enhanced price of foreign goods has served as a powerful stimulant to domestic manufacturing, and Mexico, as all silver countries, is making marvelous industrial strides.

Another cause of the prosperity of Mexico is that the country is not run in the interest of stock and wheat gamblers, who regulate matters to suit their interests rather than that of the general public.—Utley's Weekly.

Republican Policy.

There are strong indications that an understanding has been reached between the leaders of the national Republican committee and President-elect McKinley as to the policy to be at once carried out at Washington at the close of the inauguration ceremonies. The principal features of the program, from what has been made public, appear to be an extra session of Congress, a new tariff bill and an effort to restore prosperity on protective lines. It is believed that this policy will appeal strongly to some of the bolting Republican silver Senators, and have an effective tendency to divert public attention from the financial issue, or, at least, the silver phase of it.

It is not believed that the Republicans will favor the retirement of greenbacks as part of a plan to "take the Government out of the banking business," and to give the national banks a monopoly of issuing the paper money of the country, although strong pressure will be brought to further such legislation. However, the Republicans will take up the money question and make a move to increase the volume of the circulating medium, probably by a larger use of silver as subsidiary money, retaining, of course, the present gold standard system. It is evident that silver is to have a sop. A show will be made to prove the sincerity of that plank in the Republican platform favoring international bimetallism, but if Mr. McKinley has his way, which is more than probable, since he is backed by Chairman Hanna, the tariff question, with strong protection features, will hold the front position. Therefore, a Republican policy is shaping up which indicates a greater degree of prosperity for the trusts and combines and a larger measure of poverty for the masses.

No Regard for the Consumer.

The almond growers of California ask for a higher tariff than fixed by the McKinley law. They put the demand on the ground, not only that [illegible] paid those employed in the almond industry are higher in Europe than in California, but also that almonds can be brought to the Eastern markets more cheaply from Europe than from California. In other words, the Eastern consumers of almonds ought to consent to be taxed not only for the benefit of the California capitalist who grows almonds but also for the benefit of the transcontinental railroads that transport them.—Buffalo Courier.

Replenishing the Stock of Fat.

If, instead of rushing into fresh tax levies every time the government is in straits, Congress would consider how the expenditures may be judiciously trimmed, the people would be saved from increased burdens of taxation and the temptation to jobbery and robbery offered by enormous revenues would be removed. The trouble with the Republicans is that they do not merely want the revenues and the expenditures to fit, but they want the excuse to levy new taxes for bounty purposes. They want to recruit the sources of campaign slush funds.—St. Louis Republic.

What the People Will Not Stand.

If the financial policy of the new administration is to be a policy of let-alone, a policy of maintaining our wretched patchwork as it is, a policy of hoping that another crisis will not come for four years, a policy of delay and cowardice, then we can say to Mr. McKinley and to Mr. Hanna as the agitated man in the congregation said to the revivalist who pictured the torments of the lake of fire and brimstone, that "the American people will not stand it."—St. Paul Globe.

Republican Blunders to Come.

The thing for Democrats who have fallen in the future of the party to do is to be patient, watch developments and leave it to time to bring about an adjustment of the difficulties and differences that have disturbed the party. Not for nearly two years will the Democracy be required to make another general demonstration of its party strength. Meanwhile many things may happen. It is by no means a reckless prediction that the radical course of the Republican party will do more to solidify the Democratic ranks than would 100,000 peacemakers.—Rochester Herald.

Coinage and Bullion Value.

In one week during June, 1893, the commercial ratio between gold and silver changed 20 per cent. On Monday it was 24 to 1, and on Friday following it was 30 to 1. Why? India had in the meantime closed her mints. It stands to reason, surely, that if India had immediately reopened her mints—on the Monday following, say—the ratio would have again become 24 to 1. In other words, free coinage resumed in India (by no means a first-class commercial power, and a dependency politically) would have increased the commercial value of silver 20 per cent. India has no gold at all to give off.

The question arises: If India, with no gold, could, by the mere free mintage of silver, increase its relative value to gold one-fifth, could not the United States, a mighty commercial nation, independent and non-tributary to any power, holding one-seventh of all the gold money in the world, practically dictate a ratio? We think so.

Papers, pamphleteers and politicians of major and minor grade harped on a "50-cent dollar" during the canvass, arguing that free coinage would in no way affect the price of bullion. They did this when not offering their "silver-mine-owner" conspiracy charges. Attention was called time and again to the fact that the price of silver had invariably fallen after, not before, its exclusion from prestige as a primary money. The Indian incident of 1893 proves this, and Democratic editors will see to it that the people are informed of the fact. The campaign of false pretense is history now. In 1900 we will have a real campaign of education.

Figures that Mislead.

A Chicago paper undertakes to show that those States have the best credit that are arrayed on the side of gold. The table it presents to prove its case is entirely misleading, whether intentionally so or not. It gives a sliding scale of interest charges, showing that some of the States pay on a part of their bonds a very high interest. For instance, in one Southern commonwealth the figures range from 3½ to 8 per cent.

Unquestionably, the high rate is on bonds issued during the carpet-bag regime, when the people were robbed by freebooters and political adventurers—Republicans, every one of them. The lower rate is on a debt contracted by Democratic officials since the people came into possession of their own. The two, taken together, of course, make a sorry showing.

But for daily proof that few Republican newspaper writers possess information extending back to the reconstruction era, we would suspect that the writer knew he was misleading. The more charitable is perhaps the proper view to take. He simply jumbled a lot of figures together without himself understanding their significance. Western States securities are also quoted. Of these it is only necessary to say that since the beginning of our constitutional history new States have not been able to float their bonds as advantageously as older ones.

Confidence and Quietude Necessary.

Under the existing tariff our exports of manufactured goods have been steadily increasing. This increase has been very large, and has given employment to a great many people. That we need more employment for our people is true. But when this comes it will not come as the result of a tariff law, but from the revival of business consequent upon the healing of the wounds inflicted by the panic, the restoration of confidence and the relief from political agitation.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Woman at Home

GOTHAM SOCIETY-LEADER.

MISS DE BARRIL has been elected by the New York Patriarchs to fill the place of Ward McAllister. The Patriarchs decided that there must be some one person selected to attend to the details of their future functions. Miss de Barril has been their choice. One of Miss de Barril's duties will be to keep herself informed of the names of those to be invited, so that there will be no repetitions or omissions. Miss de Barril comes of old Spanish stock and her family was at one time wealthy.

MISS DE BARRIL.

Toilet Hints.

If one's complexion is "muddy," sallow or covered with blackheads, the lotion bottle is not the remedy which should be sought first. Instead, the candidate for a complexion of roses and cream should begin to diet. Hot water taken half an hour before breakfast with a little lemon juice in it is better than creams to restore the skin to clearness. Graham and whole wheat bread, fruit, clear tea and coffee, if tea and coffee are used, plenty of green vegetables, lean meat and broiled fish form an admirable complexion diet. Poultry and candies should be avoided.

After diet and exercise have paved the way for other treatment, a weekly face steaming may be tried. The woman whose purse does not permit her to go to the professional beautifiers should fill a bowl with boiling water. Over this she should hold her face, into which a cold cream has been rubbed, for ten minutes or so, covering her head and shoulders and the bowl with a heavy Turkish towel. After drying the face she should rub more cold cream into it and she should not venture out into the air for at least three hours.—American Cultivator.

Making a Wood Box.

Following are directions for making a wood box of medium size from that excellent authority, the Ladies' Home Journal: The box should be 36 inches in length and 18 in width, the height from 16 to 18 inches. The interior may be divided into two compartments—one for wood, the other for coal—and treated to several successive coats of dark paint or asphaltum varnish. An ordinary canned goods box can be fixed up and painted to appear like an iron-bound chest. Cover the surface of the box with heavy builders' paper, gluing it on smoothly, avoiding creases or wrinkles, and paint a rich mahogany brown. Two or three coats, each thoroughly dried and afterward varnished and rubbed down, will make a good, durable surface. Strap iron corners and cross bands, embellished with big rough-headed, hand-made nails, add to the apparent strength of this chest and give it the character of an antique strong box.

ARTISTIC WOODBOX.

A box of this sort may be put to use as a silver chest, and, if so, it should be lined with canton flannel or felt, which may be tacked or glued fast. Several trays may be provided in which to keep spoons, forks and other small articles of plate.

Revolted at the Crinoline.

Sometimes the American woman declines to be dictated to even by her dressmaker or tailor, but with the recent advent of smaller sleeves people begin to wonder if the next step may not be in the direction of those skin-tight abominations worn some fifteen years ago and from then on for five or six seasons. The American woman has shown herself much more independent of late than she was once in matters of comfort or convenience or looks. She, for instance, would not adopt the hideous crinoline recently, although dressmakers and importers tried their best to bully her into doing it. She stood her ground and so absolutely refused that the threatened fashion died in its tenderest infancy. But that was a matter of the becoming. The American woman had sense enough to see that she would make a guy of herself in hoops.

Padding in the New Gowns.

After a woman has been through the hands of her dressmaker it will be more than ever difficult this year to determine her physical proportions, or even to make a reasonably accurate guess as to whether she is plump or scrawny. In the first place, the new sleeves, tight almost to the shoulder, call for pretty good looking arms inside of them or they have about as much style as pump handles. "In the meantime," said a fashionable dressmaker, "we pad. I have sent home but two waists this month that haven't had the sleeves plumply interlined to give a good outline. And then the princess gown that is coming back into favor looks a sight unless the wearer has an ideal figure. It's an art to pad up to the requirements of this dress. Yes, indeed, it's a year of figure padding, sure enough."

Benefits of a Nipping Air.

Women should not be afraid of outdoor exercise, even though the winds may blow fresh and chill from the lake or prairies. The cold aid will do no injury if they are properly protected and take exercise enough to keep the circulation active. On the contrary, it will do good. It will purify the blood, it will strengthen the lungs, it will improve the digestion. It will afford a healthy, natural stimulus to torpid circulation and strengthen and energize the whole system. The injury which often results from going into a cold atmosphere is occasioned by a lack of protection to some part of the body, exposure to strong draughts, or from breathing through the mouth. Avoid these and you are safe.

Madge Kendall's Tea Cloth.

"Promptly at 4 o'clock I serve tea in my English home," writes Madge Kendall to an American friend. "My embroidered tea cloth must be one and one-half yards square, with a plain oval shaped center on which to rest my tray, containing sugar bowl, teapot, cups and saucers, etc. I chose clover for the design, because when first landing in America I was presented with a bunch of the fragrant plants, and I have ever since associated them with your country."

MADGE KENDALL'S TEA CLOTH.

Women Are Good.

Women constitute two-thirds of all the church members of the United States, but only one-thirteenth of all the criminals.

Feminine Fancies.

The new neck fancifuls are more elaborate than ever.

Women who own a superfluity of jewels use real diamond ornaments on their bonnets.

Leather is being employed in the formation of many dainty fancy articles for the boudoir desk.

Facial massage is particularly necessary when wind and cold combine to make the skin rough.

A unique combination of colors is a toque with a steel crown, surrounded by a mass of violets from which spring upright loops of cherry red velvet.

The tailor-made girl does not bundle up until she looks like an Eskimo baby, but she puts on a fleece-lined or chamois jacket under the coat and thus gets all the required warmth without disturbing the graceful lines of her figure.

Two Views of Pensions.

"There may be fair differences of opinion as to the extent and conditions of pension relief, but there is no room for doubt as to pensions," writes ex-President Harrison in the Ladies' Home Journal—"This Country of Ours" article. "Eleven dollars a month for war service implies, at least, relief in case of wounds or sickness for the soldier, and that the public will care for his widow and minor children. When the law of pillage prevailed it was other wise; and when our rich men take to fighting our wars we can abolish the pension system, but thus far it is as historically true of the armies that won our independence, delivered us from the Indians and the British, and saved the nation in the great civil war, as of the kingdom of heaven: 'not many rich.'

"There are two views of the pension question—one from the 'Little Round Top' at Gettysburg, looking out over a field sown thickly with the dead, and around upon bloody, blackened and maimed men cheering the shot-torn banner of their country; the other from an office desk on a busy street, or from an endowed chair in a university, looking only upon a statistical table."

A Joy Forever.

When Gen. Warre was commander-in-chief of the Bombay Division, he once gave a luncheon at Poona, where about forty officers were present. The only lady present was Mrs. Warre, who sat at the other end of the table.

Now the general, in the course of conversation, often addressed his wife, and whenever he did so called her "Joy." Among the guests was a cheeky young subaltern from the gunners, by name Macdonald.

This youth suddenly paralyzed the guests by saying to the general:

"I say, who's 'Joy,' general?"

There was an awful pause, and the general said very slowly and distinctly:

"Joy," Mr. Macdonald, "is a pet name I sometimes give my wife."

"Quite right, too, general," sang out the unabashed subaltern. "A thing of beauty is a joy forever."

This remark saved the situation.—London Answers.

A Dog's Suicide.

Henry Schneider, a well-known dog fanier of Port Jervis, recently purchased a pure bred St Bernard dog. The dog had shown actual signs of melancholy ever since its arrival at the Schneider homestead. The climax was reached the other day, however, when Mr. Schneider had occasion to speak harshly to the dog to get him to obey. The dog seemed to take it much to heart, and, walking deliberately to a large tub of water in the door yard, placed its fore feet in the tub and then held its head beneath the water until life was extinct.—New York Herald.

WOMAN'S LONG HOURS.

SHE TOILS AFTER MAN'S DAY'S WORK IS DONE.

What She Has to Contend With—Work That Sooner or Later Breaks Down Her Delicate Organism.

The great majority of women "work to live" and "live to work," and as the hands of the clock approach the hour of six, those employed in stores, offices, mills and factories, hail closing time with joy. They have won their day's bread, but some duties are yet to be performed, and many personal matters to be attended to. They have mending to do, and dresses or bonnets to make, and long into the night they toil, for they must look neat, and they have no time during the day to attend to personal matters.

Women, therefore, notwithstanding their delicate organism, work longer and more closely than men.

They do not promptly heed such signs as headache, backache, blues, pains in the groins, bearing-down, "all gone" feeling, nervousness, loss of sleep and appetite, whites, irregular or painful monthly periods, cold and swollen feet, etc., all symptoms of womb trouble, which, if not quickly checked, will launch them in a sea of misery.

There is but one absolute remedy for all those ills. Any woman who has to earn her own living will find it profitable to keep her system fortified with this tried and true woman's friend. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound speedily removes the cause and effects a lasting cure.

We are glad to produce such letters as the following from Miss M. G. McNamee, 114 Catherine St., Utica, N.Y.:

"For months I had been afflicted with that tired feeling, no ambition, no appetite, and a heavy bearing-down feeling of the uterus. I began to use Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Soon those bad feelings passed away; I began to have more ambition, my appetite improved and I gained rapidly in every way, and now I am entirely well. I advise all my friends to use the Compound. it is woman's truest friend."

A WOMAN

HESITATES

It isn't to be wondered at that there are so many sick and half-sick women. Most of them suppose their peculiar troubles can only be cured by the physician. That means local treatment and examinations. No wonder they hesitate. And hesitation gives disease a stronger foothold.

The truth is that local treatment and examinations are nearly always unnecessary. They should not be submitted to 'till everything else fails.

McELREE'S
WINE OF CARDUI

cures painful menstruation, irregularities, life-sapping drains, falling of the womb and flooding. It cures all the pains and troubles by making the feminine organs perfectly strong and healthy. Its action is wonderfully beneficial to girls just entering womanhood, and to women passing through the period known as the "change of life." No need to hesitate now. Cure can be had right at home.

SOLD AT $1.00 A BOTTLE BY DRUGGISTS.

THE sunshine is unusually bright to-day. My Uncle Tobe and I are sitting on the balcony which overlooks the broad, fair stream below, adorned with the afternoon sun's last rays.

It is Sunday. In Sunday dress and holiday spirits crowds are hurrying towards the big excursion steamers, panting along the shore.

How I would like to be one of them! I am young and hungry for pleasure. But Uncle Tobe doesn't understand. He doesn't care for such amusement. "It's useless waste of time," he growls.

I might tell him it's just for the sake of innocent frolic, but he wouldn't understand that, either. He understands only the serious side of life, earning money in the sweat of one's brow, and he says such money mustn't be spent foolishly. Uncle Tobe is a bachelor, whom fate has burdened with the care of two homeless children. He might have shaken off the burden, but he was too conscientious, too honorable for that. He was the only relative to whom we could turn—I, the daughter of his sister, and Philip, his brother's stepson.

We were quite small, when he took us into his house, two mischievous wights, for children know little of sorrow. I am sixteen years old to-day, and cannot yet be serious and demure. Philip is more ungovernable even than I. When we are together we laugh and chatter, so unreasonably loud, Uncle Tobe says, that he is compelled to drive us from his presence.

"Silly youngsters! What right have you to laugh?"

When he took us into his home, he turned me over to his old housekeeper, Mrs. Mitchell, saying:

"Take the little thing! Her parents had no business to burden the world with such a useless little worm!"

Mrs. Mitchell shook her white head. "Let her grow up with the flowers," she answered. "All she needs is a little sunshine."

Yes, we needed sunshine, Philip even more than I. He was the elder by four years, and full of silly notions, Uncle Tobe said. He carried home all sorts of animals, much to the distress of Uncle Tobe, but when he infested the house and the entire neighborhood with white mice, it was decided that he should be sent to a boarding school.

Philip was satisfied. It couldn't be any worse than at home, he mused. Henceforth his life took on a different hue. His teachers complained of his careless habits, his boyish pranks, but they could not gainsay his talents and bright, active mind. He was expelled from two schools on account of his unruly conduct, and when he begged Uncle Tobe to send him to college, the latter refused. No, he must learn a trade.

I don't know how many different lines of work Phil tried, but he never remained more than a few weeks in any one. At last he was apprenticed to a druggist. The work seemed to suit him. There were complaints, of course, but of a different nature. Philip was constantly experimenting. He came near blowing up the house once. Yet his employer praised his cleverness and his indefatigable desire for study.

Every Sunday Philip paid a visit to his home, and then he built air castles of wonderful inventions which he was about to make, and begged Uncle Tobe to advance him money. He might as well have preached to deaf ears. I was glad when he was gone, for the scenes that took place between him and Uncle Tobe had become unbearable.

Sitting on the balcony that lovely Sunday afternoon I sighed and gazed dreamily into the beautiful world beyond. My jolly companion I knew was confined to his dingy quarters in town. What was he doing? Concocting some healing draught, perhaps. Perhaps selling a Sunday ration of bonbons to some lucky youngster! What a trial we are to Uncle Tobe! Why didn't he get married and have children of his own, then he wouldn't have been expected to care for other people's waifs?

I lean across the balcony rail to watch a newly arrived boat unload its human freight. And—there is Philip!

"Uncle Tobe," I exclaimed, "Phil is here in the crowd!"

"Of course," he growls, "he is always to be found where he has no business to be. Don't beckon to him, I don't want him up here."

But I had already waved my hand to Phil, and a moment later he stood before us.

His eyes were ablaze with joy. How happy he looked. "Aren't you glad that I am here?" they said, as they beamed down upon my upturned face.

Uncle Tobe knit his brows. "What are you doing here? Why are you not at work?"

"It's Sunday, uncle, and now I have really invented something valuable. My employer says so, too, and all I need is a little money to experiment with and take out a patent. Uncle Tobe, you'll help me out, just this one time, won't you?"

"Not if I had a thousand times the amount you want."

"It isn't a large sum, uncle; try me just once," he pleaded. And I—I pleaded with him.

"Leave me in peace," groaned Uncle Tobe, "I am tired of it all. You forget that you are a poor waif who eats the bread of grace in my house. You'll either go the way I point or choose your own. You are no longer a child!"

"You are right," cried Philip, with cheeks aflame with anger. "I am no longer a child. It's a shame that I should take alms from such a hand as yours. It has been the last time. I'll go my way henceforth."

"And starve at it!" mocked Uncle Tobe.

I trembled in every limb. It had never been as bad as this before. "You cannot mean what you say," I begged.

"Yes, I mean it," declared Philip.

"And so do I," added Uncle Tobe.

For a moment Philip stook stark still looking at me, then he dashed down the stairs and aboard the steamer which was about to leave the wharf.

In the crowd I lost sight of him. The bell rang out sharply. I was alone and in despair. Behind me stood Uncle Tobe.

"Let him go, Vreda; he'll come back, I'll give him the money after awhile, but not now. Young folks are too impatient."

"You should have given it to him now, Uncle," I answered with choking voice.

* * * * * * *

Philip had not returned. The sun had gone out of my life. The rollicking echo was dead. The days were gray and dreary, the nights interminable. We had no friends. There was no one to come to a house that had no open door; no hand of welcome!

Uncle Tobe wrestled with figures half the day, the other half he devoted to business errands. In the evening he read the newspapers. I was like a deaf mute.

"Take a good, long walk every day," suggested compassionately Mrs. Mitchell. "You look like a ghost, and are fading away!"

Alas! there was no one, for whom I would have exerted myself to keep fresh and young. The sooner I grew old and gray the better I would fit into my surroundings.

For Philip I cried bitter tears. Uncle Tobe never mentioned his name.

"Poor old man, he must be fond of you both," Mrs. Mitchell was wont to say now and then when I went to her room to talk of Philip. "He is working himself to death trying to buy this little house. My nephew tells me this; he is employed in the office of his attorney."

"I hate the place since Phil is gone," I cried bitterly. "Everything is gone, the birds, the flowers and the people. Only we—we are chained to this same old spot."

"Wait, Miss Vreda; wait, later on, perhaps——"

"That's what Uncle Tobe says, and then it will be too late."

"Not for you. You are young, Miss Vreda, but your uncle, nobody can make him see what he ought to do."

* * * * * * *

We lived our lonely lives and I had lost all hope that things would ever change.

One morning we found Uncle Tobe dead in his chair. He looked as if he had dropped into a peaceful slumber. Mrs. Mitchell and I seemed turned to stone when we discovered him. I felt no sorrow, but I was terribly frightened. When the doctor came he said that he could do nothing.

The funeral was very quiet and unostentatious. There were no tears, no lamentations, no flowers, no friends. After we had laid him away it occurred to me that the home in which I had lived so long would now be closed to me. But the thought had no terror. It was a relief, rather, to be free. I knew nothing about earning my bread. Freedom was all I craved.

On the day after the burial, Uncle Tobe's testament was opened. Philip and I were his heirs. He had bought the little home and had left us enough money to live in comfortable circumstances.

"May God bless you," he wrote. "I had no one on earth but you!"

I sobbed aloud as I listened. "Oh, if he had only given Philip the money when he needed it!" I must go out and find him.

Mrs. Mitchell soon convinced me of the futility of such a beginning. Philip would come home sooner or later.

"Poor uncle, your happiness was all he worked for!" was Mrs. Mitchell's admonishing cry.

"He has taken it from me," I wailed; "he has made me miserable, and him—Philip! he may be lost forever!"

I lived quietly on with Mrs. Mitchell in the little house by the river. From day to day I waited. The trees took on fresh foliage and then came the autumn and the winter. I waited in silence. With the spring hope was renewed within me.

Suddenly, on the brightest day of all the year, the bell rang with a clang. I knew the sound and hastened to the door. Philip stood before me, but not the rollicking youth whom I remembered. The man in whose arms I lay had a serious, thoughtful face. I cried aloud.

"Be still," he whispered, "I don't want uncle to know. I don't want to see him. I want you, only you!"

"Uncle!" I repeated. "Don't you know that he is dead?"

"I am not sorry," he said bitterly; "he took from me my youth. Want, care anxiety were my companions on the way. After many struggles success crowned my efforts, and now we need no longer depend upon him. My factory is far away. My invention was worth its weight in gold."

His eyes beamed down upon me as they did on that fateful Sunday. He took me into his arms. "I came back for you, my happiness, my youth Come, teach me how to laugh again!"

We cried and laughed in one. When he had told me everything I showed him Uncle Tobe's last will and testament.

"Not a cent of this money will I take," cried fiercely my lover, the companion of my childhood. "He has made our hearts bleed often enough for it!"

We were married and moved to the large city, where Philip had his factory. The little house we turned over to Mrs. Mitchell's care. Every summer we came home, bringing our children with us. My husband's heart has softened toward the lonely old man who had driven him forth into the world and on the anniversary of his death our little Tobe lays sweet violets on his grave.—Sunday Republic.

A BOY AND AN ORANGE.

Laurence Hutton Tells How He Succumbed to a Temptation in Youth.

The Boy was taught, from the earliest awakening of his reasoning powers that truth was to be told and to be respected, and that nothing was more wicked or more ungentlemanly than a broken promise. He learned very early to do as he was told, and not to do, under any consideration, what he had said he would not do. Upon this last point he was strictly conscientious, although once, literally, he "beat about the bush." His Aunt Margaret, always devoted to plants and to flowers, had, on the back stoop of his grandfather's house, a little grove of orange and lemon trees in pots. Some one of these was usually in fruit or in flower, and the fruit to The Boy was a great temptation. He was very fond of oranges, and it seemed to him that a "home-made" orange, which he had never tasted, must be much better than a grocer's orange; as home-made cake was certainly preferable, even to the wonderful cakes made by the professional Mrs. Milderberger. He watched these little green oranges from day to day, as they gradually grew big and yellow in the sun. He promised faithfully that he would not pick any, but he had a notion that some of them might drop off. He never shook the trees, because he said he would not. But he shook the stoop! And he hung about the bush, which he was too honest to beat. One unusually tempting orange, which he had known from its bud-hood, finally overcame him. He did not pick it off, he did not shake it off; he compromised with his conscience by lying flat on his back and biting off a piece of it. It was not a very good action, nor was it a good orange, and for that reason, perhaps, he went home immediately and told on himself. He told his mother. He did not tell his Aunt Margaret. His mother did not seem to be as much shocked at his conduct as he was. But, in her own quaint way, she gave him to understand that promises were not made to be cracked any more than they were made to be broken—that he had been false to himself in heart, if not in deed, and that he must go back and make it "all right" with his Aunt Margaret. She did not seem to be very much shocked, either; he could not tell why. But they punished The Boy. They made him eat the rest of the orange!

He lost all subsequent interest in that tropical glade, and he has never cared much for domestic oranges since.—St. Nicholas.

Retired from Practice.

The Saunterere's friend, the Doctor, has retired from practice. A few years ago he inherited a large fortune, and since then his time has been so occupied managing his estates that it is impossible for him to continue his professional work. Not only has he taken in his shingle, but he also discourages the practice of calling him "doctor"; so that in his neighborhood the title has been generally dropped.

However, every few days the Irish maid of all work, when she answers the doorbell, has to explain that though the proprietor of the establishment is a duly graduated physician, he is not at present practicing his profession, and does not wish to respond to calls for his medical skill.

It happened that one day there appeared at the door a caller of a very different kind. He was the agent of some religious society, anxious rather to bleed others than to be bled himself. So, naturally, he was eager to post himself as to the church relations of his proposed subject in order to make the appeal more effectual.

His first question began in the usual way: "Is—er—Mr. Hammersleigh at home?"

"Sure an' he is, sorr."

"Can you tell me whether or not he is a Christian?"

To Bridget this was something of a poser, but she rose supremely to the occation with her accustomed answer:

"Sure, an' he is, yer honor. But he's not practicin' it lately."—Boston Budget.

One Boy's Feminine Weakness.

Although he became foreman of a juvenile hook-and-ladder company before he was five, and would not play with girls at all, he had one peculiar feminine weakness. His grand passion was washing and ironing. And Ann Hughes used to let him do all the laundry work connected with the wash rags and his own pocket handkerchiefs, into which, regularly every Wednesday, he burned little brown holes with the toy flatiron which would get too hot. But Johnny Robertson and Joe Stuart and the other boys, and even the uncles and aunts, never knew anything about this—unless Ann Hughes gave it away.—St. Nicholas.

A TALK ON DYSPEPSIA.

A Disease of Civilization—Its Symptoms—How to Cure It.

Dyspepsia is said to be a disease of civilization. Savages know nothing about it. The disease has become domesticated in America and we as a people have threatened to monopolize it. Few disorders inflict upon their victims greater suffering, yet dyspepsia is not particularly dangerous and seldom causes death. It permits the sufferer to linger in misery for the allotted term of life.

The complaint usually begins with a sense of fullness, tightness and weight in the stomach after meals, and a diminished or lost appetite. Flatulency and sour stomach are also common, and there is often nervousness, vomiting and general distress. Dizziness is also a prominent symptom, and an "all gone" feeling in the stomach. Sometimes the patient has a bad taste in the mouth, headache, heartburn and palpitation.

Dyspepsia is the result of disturbed or interrupted functions of the stomach and digestive organs. The cure consists in restoring these functions. If the stomach is too weak to digest food it must be strengthened. This must be done through the blood, which is the medium that carries strength and nourishment to all the organs. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the One True Blood Purifier and it cures dyspepsia by purifying and enriching the blood, combined with its direct action upon the stomach and its secretions. Perhaps in no way has Hood's Sarsaparilla relieved greater suffering than in its cures of dyspepsia, which are indeed legion. If you are suffering from this disease, give Hood's Sarsaparilla a fair trial at once. It will tone and strengthen your stomach, give you an appetite and strength and relieve the pains and miseries of dyspepsia.

Japan's Terrible Visitations.

Japan has been the scene of some frightful catastrophes during the past few hundred years. In 1891 an earthquake resulted in the death of about 10,000 people. But this is small compared with the catastrophe of last June, when some 27,000 lives were lost through the great sea wave. This, again, is small compared with the toll of human lives taken by the same instrument in 1703, when the number of those who perished on the coast of Asia exceeded 100,000. South of the region devastated two months ago is the village of Kamakum, hidden among the sandhills and crooked pines. It was anciently the capital of the Empire, with a population of 1,000,000. Earthquakes and sea waves led to its abandonment. In 1293 a wave carried away 30,000 of its inhabitants.

A 50-Cent Calendar Free.

Perhaps the most beautiful calendar issued for the year '97 is the Youth's Companion art calendar, which is given to each subscriber to the paper for the year '97. It is made up of four charming pictures, beautifully reproduced in twelve harmonious colors. It is in form a four-page folder which, when extended, is 10x24 inches in size. The subjects are delightfully attractive. This calendar makes a desirable ornament for a mantel, center-table or writing desk. It is offered for sale only by the publishers of the Youth's Companion at 50 cents per copy. Only because of the enormous number published is it possible for the publishers of the Companion to send it free to all Companion subscribers.

Magnets for Lifting Purposes.

An interesting use of magnetism is being made in England. Electric cranes are operated from the electric power and lighting circuits, along with electro-magnets, which permit the ready lifting of pieces of iron or steel weighing up to two tons. The magnets constructed for lifting purposes are attached to a crane. One magnet takes five and a half amperes at 110 volts to excite it, at which energy it will support a weight of two tons of iron or steel. A switch controls the supply of current delivered to the magnet. By its use three men do the work in one-quarter of an hour which previously took six men one hour and a half to perform.

An Odd Benediction.

The Scotch Archbishop Foreman—in the sixteenth century—was so poor a Latin scholar that, when he was obliged to visit Rome, he found great difficulty in conforming to some of the customs of the Pope's table, to which he was invited. Etiquette required that the Scotch Archbishop should take part in saying a benediction over the repast, and the illiterate guest had carefully committed to memory what he believed to be the orthodox form of words. He began with his "Benedicito," expecting the Cardinals to respond with "Dominous," but they replying "Deus," Italian fashion, so confused the good Bishop that he forgot his carefully conned phrases and in good broard Scotch said:

"To the devil I give you all, false Cardinals."

To this devout aspiration Pope and Cardinals, who understood only their own language, piously added "Amen."

An intelligent matron, a resident of Ithaca, N. Y., makes it very plain to all her neighbors that she thinks there is no medicine like Ripans Tabules.

She believes that they saved the life of her son, a boy of twelve, who had been taken sick with what the doctors called liver trouble and catarrh of the stomach. She says that after treating him a year, without doing him any good, the doctors gave him up to die. About that time his uncle, who had had experience with Ripans Tabules and found that they had done him much good for catarrh of the stomach, insisted that his nephew should try them. After they had been taken two months, according to directions, the boy was able to go to school and four months after he began taking them he replied to an inquiry: "Why, I am just as well as ever I was."

Money Easy.

...—I have read how Mr. C. ...made so much money in the Dish Washer business and think I have best him. I am very young yet and have had little experience in selling goods, but have made over eight hundred dollars in ten weeks selling Dish Washers. It is simply wonderful how easy it is to sell them. All you have to do is to show the ladies how they work and they cannot help but buy one. For the benefit of others I will state that I got my start from the Mound City Dish Washer Co., St. Louis, Mo. Write to them and they will send you full particulars.

I think I can clear over $5,000 the coming year, and I am not going to let the opportunity pass. Try it and publish your success for the benefit of others. J. F. C.-1

MAIL FOR THE ARCTIC CIRCLE.

How Letters Reach the Whaling Fleet in the Far North.

At the office of the Pacific Steam Whaling Company is a series of four rude paintings illustrating the winter quarters of the ten vessels that annually sail into Mackenzie bay, in the Arctic ocean, and "lay to" to permit the freezing waters of the bay to hold them safe and fast till another season opens up, says an exchange.

Five hundred men find lodgment in these vessels, and from convenient storehouses, erected on the adjacent shores, draw such supplies as may be needful in addition to what the hunting and fishing of the region may afford.

It may be imagined that these men lead a solitary life, remaining sometimes five years on a voyage, and as many of them have homes and families elsewhere their task becomes a dreary one.

Once a year vessels leave San Francisco to go thither, carrying supplies to them, and then come the treasured letters from home and dear ones. This usually occurs about the 1st of August. But last Christmas a variation came in the monotony of their lives. In September a missionary to the Point Clarence Indians passed by way of Mackenzie bay overland for Montreal on business. It was his intention to return some time about Christmas, and the inhabitants of the winter quarters at Herschel island exacted of him that on his return he would bring them letters. Accordingly each man was at much pains to write a letter informing all his friends of the fact that letters addressed to him at Fort Edmonton, Northwest territory, in care of the missionary would reach him safely.

The journey from Point Clarence to Fort Edmonton is by no means a pleasure jaunt. As long as there is snow and ice to travel over it is pleasant enough, but once out of the Arctic circle into the desolate region rock-ribbed with mountain fastnesses, rushing torrents in narrow gorges, clefts between high ranges, lakes crossed in rude batteaus hastily constructed, make up this country. Through forest and over plain must the journey be made a distance of over 1,500 miles. It was accomplished in safety, however, and soon friends of the sailors in the north received letters inviting Christmas responses from home on the missionary's return.

The postal authorities were notified that all letters received should be forwarded to Fort Edmonton and held for the missionary. This was done, and when the brave traveler left Fort Edmonton on his return trip in November he bore with him a large package of letters addressed to the whalers at Herschel island.

It is not known yet if he accomplished the return trip in safety, but if he did and arrived before Christmas, as was expected, he carried joy to those isolated men in the words of good fellowship carried by him across half a continent.

New York Sign Statistics.

If statistics of illustrative signs should be taken in New York it is probable that the one found to predominate would be that showing some kind of a representation of the human tooth. They are to be seen everywhere and in all sizes and conditions. Usually the favorite method of advertising in this way seems to be with a gilt tooth in varying degrees of magnitude. Sometimes they are placed firmly in position, sometimes they sway in the breeze, and again the fact that the tooth or the tooth doctor is American is made plain by the figure of a spread eagle with the tooth suspended in his bill. A Fourteenth street dentist has a more unpleasant advertisement at the front entrance to his establishment in a small glass case half full of genuine teeth, which presumably he has extracted. The sign of the automatic jaws—two sets of teeth, which are made to open and shut apparently without rhyme or reason before the public gaze—is unpleasantly familiar. This sign has reference to the more mechanical work of dentistry. But all these signs, which appear to indicate that the people of the city were interested in nothing so much as in having their teeth extracted and replaced, are contradicted by the best dentists of the city, though people as a rule associate a dentist's office with the unpleasant thought of having a tooth pulled.—New York Times.

Money in an Old Gown.

A deposit note for $3,885, dated about ten years ago, has just been found by a woman named Jennings living at Bath, England. She was ripping up an old silk dress found among some rubbish in a box and discovered the note—which was drawn on a Bath bank—neatly wrapped up in one corner. Mrs. Jennings married a widower but is now living apart from her husband and the dress was the property of her husband's first wife, who died eight or nine years ago. She had put the note away, evidently saving it to retire upon, but carried the secret of the note's hiding-place with her to the grave.—Exchange.

Poverty and Virtue

The crowd that followed the Divine Master was of the common people—the poor and the simple hearted, the meek and the lowly. Such was it in olden times; so it is today. If we desire to meet with piety, with faith, with Christianity, it is generally necessary to look for it among the poor.—Rev. Joseph Nunan.

Atmore, Ala.

The New Southern Town As Seen by the Courier's Special Correspondent.

ATMORE ALA., Dec. 22, 1896,

Courier:—There is an erroneous impression in the North that the Southern man is hopelessly and helplessly shiftless and indolent because of the warm climate. In this let our people be undereived primarily. This condition exists, and is due to a social disorder dating back to the first appearance of the dusky race on American shores, rather than to climatic influences. The white man of the South always has, and still depends on the colored race in the performance of all physical labor, and has yet to learn the value of the labor of his own hands. To illustrate, I will cite a few of the many cases where I found black men doing the work and white men doing the bossing. In one of the large iron furnaces at Birmingham are employed four thousand three hundred men; all black except the foremen and time keepers. On the levees may be seen three thousand black men at work, looking like a swarm of black birds on a wheat field. Black hands do our cooking, laundrying and barbering. This will be found to be true in all departments of labor. These colored people command good wages, yet are in most cases totally uneducated and but semi-civilized, in many cases I saw negroes and mules working side by side in these large furnaces and mills and of a truth the intelligence exhibited by the mule was almost equal to that of his negro driver; and his language is quite as intelligent in many cases as that of his black lasher. The nigger (for by this name is he known) is talked to and managed by his foreman as animals are talked to and managed. I am told by their over-seers, that niggers can be controlled in no other way. Several years ago DeKalb county was startled by the brutal murder of a negro at Butler by a southern man. That same affair in the South would excite much less attention. I was told by a number of gentlemen who have employed large gangs of colored people, that when they become involved in a fight among themselves, they are totally deprived of reason, and fight like beasts, and that in such cases they can only be subdued by going at them with a club as you would enraged beasts. If this be true, then the correcting of this social evil, is one of the great problems calling for solution at the hands of the American people. Yet the gentility of the Southern men I have met is unequaled in any other part of the United States. Never have I met better treatment and attention than in the south. Secondarily, nature has done so much for man here, that man has much less to do, than in the North. In a land, which, when first discovered by white man, he found ample provision spread in advance by nature's lavish hand, in the evergreen forests for all his herds without any effort on his part, and that condition existing to-day only in a lesser degree, it is not strange that he is loath to exchange for that condition, requiring exertion on his part even though it bring increased prosperity.

Cattle feed upon wild grass the year around and swine upon nuts and roots. Native butter is rank and cheesy; pork wild and gamy. The leading hotels of the South use Northern creamery butter at 35 cents per pound and Northern meats; while milk brings ten cents per quart. A greater variety of tame grasses can be raised here with success than in the North, yet baled hay is selling for $20 per ton, simply because the majority of the souther farmers do not care to labor for the reward. An ox team satisfies the average farmer, and the ox can live on the wild grass. Wild turkey and duck, and some deer abound in the forests, and fish in the streams to be be had for their catching.

Atmore is a new town on the main line of the L. & N. R. R., one and one half miles from the and the same 40 miles from Mobile from the Florida from Pensacola. This town is an Indiana Colony under the management of F. W. Green a courteous and pleasant gentleman who understands his business thoroughly. The land for 50 miles surrounding this town is as fine as I ever saw, being the Ala. highlands, no swamp sexcept now and then a small draw which they drain by digging a well in the center down to the gravel strata which saps the place dry. The climate is delightful, weather now be about in line with early Oct. weather in Ind. The land is covered with fine pitch pine from which they are daily extracting hundreds of barrels of turpentine and resin; a large refinery being located at Atmore. The salt breeze from the bay and the balsam from the pines put to flight, catarrah, throat trouble and rheumatism on short notice. The land is fertile, just undulating enough to be nice, and produces, rice, cotton, tobacco, grains of all kinds, grasses, sugar cane and fine fruits of all kinds, nuts potatoes and sweet potatoes of fine quality. I saw samples of two crops of potatoes, raised this year and they were magnificient. Sweet potatoes are planted here the same as Irish potatoes, by planting the potato itself; sugar cane grows about 12 feet in height and 1½ to 2 inches thick, it is planted not from the seed as in the north but by cutting the top off then laying one of these longe cane stalks lengthwise in a furrow and covering it over; from each join which are about 8 inches apart will spring up a stalk; when this crop is ready to cut, it is cut close to the ground, the leaves stripped off and dropped down over the stubble which covers it completely; it lays in this condition until spring when the blades are raked off and from the old stubs spring new stock thus giving two crops from one planting; there is a cane mill now in operation at Atmore. Fields are now sodded with spring oats. Turnips, lettuce and onions are growing in the gardens. I visited Maj. Wallace's plantation which is one of the finest in the South. The Major is an up-to-date farmer, and has such a lovely home, and entertains so loyally that I felt like going into winter quarters at his place. Northern enterprise will made this one of the richest producing districts in the United States. The Mortal Ponce DeLeon, in his vain search for the springs of immortal youth must have omitted to visit Biloxi Bay which lies about one hundred miles west of Atmore. Many fruit and nut farms spring up along this bay and its uniform climate, and long stretch of navigable rivers to the north make it a most desirable locality to locate in. These fruit growers located 20 and 30 miles from Mobile have their haptha launches, in which they carry their product down the stream to Mobile; two or three families owning a launch together makes the cost on each nominal. So delighted am I with this place that I expect to invest in a small fruit farm before my return. The large canning factories at Mobile, can fish in winter and fruits in summer, furnishing a fine market for this territory. There is much fine timber along these rivers. A great many Northern people are settling by colonies in the vicinity, of Biloxi Bay and Atmore. Atmore has one saw mill that saws out one hundred thousand feet of lumber every 24 hours, much of which is exported to Europe.

A Wife Equal to a Gold Mine!

Will some of your readers give me a good receipt for making a cold starch? I am selling self-heating flat irons and iron a little at every house and have to use some starch every place and want to know how to make a good cold starch. My husband was in debt and I being anxious to help him thought I would sell self-heating flat irons and I am doing splendidly. A cent's worth of fuel will even heat. You can iron in half the time and no danger of scorching the clothes as with the old iron, and you can get the most beautiful glossy. I sell at nearly every house, as the iron saves so much fuel, everybody wants one. I make $1.50 on each iron and have sold less than ten any day I worked. My brother is doing well and I think anyone can make lots of money anywhere selling irons. J. F. CASEY & Co., St. Louis, Mo., will start anyone in the business, as they did me; if you will address them. MRS. A RUSSELL. 1

Throat Coughs

Is there a tickling in the throat? Do you cough a great deal, especially when lying down? Are you hoarse at times? Does nearly every cold you take settle in your throat? These "throat coughs" are very deceptive. Don't neglect them. Troches, or cough syrups won't touch the spot. You must take remedies that will enrich the blood, tone up the nerves; and heal the inflamed membranes.

SCOTT'S EMULSION of Cod-liver Oil with Hypophosphites contains such remedies. It has wonderful nourishing and healing power. The cause of the cough is removed; the whole system is given new life and vigor; and the danger from threatening lung trouble is swept away.

Indiana Oil.

Hunting on Democrat

The Indiana oil field has a smaller per cent. of dry holes than any territory, and it's yield is above the eastern field. The price is a little over half that of the Pennsylvania product. The Indiana field has the quantity, but not the quality. Every barrel of the Indiana oil must be steamed before it is pumped through the great canals to Lima, O. The Pennsylvania and eastern oil is purer and the second handling is not necessary, hence the higher price. There about 25,000 producing wells in Ohio and Indiana, yielding about 65,000 barrels of oil a day. It is estimated that the cost to the producer is forty cents a barrel for every barrel of oil or gas.

Bread and Water

This Treatment Should be Tried in Auburn.

For several weeks past Marshal West has been bothered quite a considerable by tramps and hobos who apply to him for lodging in his little hotel in the town hall. Then breakfast is wanted and the town is to an expense of several dollars for boarding these chaps. At th elast regular meeting the marshal and councilmen were talking of some way by which these chaps could be put to work, earn their lodging and breakfast. Just now there seems to be nothing that they could do.

In some of the surrounding towns they have adopted the bread and water treatment, which seems to work well. At Fostoria, O., they feed them nothing but bread and water and the bums and tramps have skipped the town. They do not apply to the marshal for lodging and breafast as they desire something better than bread and water.

In Civil Service.

It has just come to the knowledge of the public generally, that the Civil Service rules have been so extended as to apply to various boards of Pension Examining Surgeons. To satisfy himself on this point, Dr. Nusbaum wrote to Senator Turpie and has received the following reply:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 22, 1896.
Hon. W. H. Nusbaum,
Auburn, Ind.

Dear Sir:—I am in receipt of your letter of Dec. 18, touching the Civil Service Commission.

Examining Surgeons were put under the operation of the Civil Service Law by Executive proclamation of the President, on May 6, last, but it does not take effect until Jan. 10, next. This delay was made to allow an eligible list to be made for appointment. After Jan. 10, appointments will not be made upon the recommendation of the Member or Senator, but when a vacancy occurs it will be filled by drawing from the list of eligibles, the same as is now done in the Railway Mail Service, and the other branches over which the Civil Service has jurisdiction.

Yours truly
DAVID TURPIE.

Do You Use It?

It's the best thing for the hair under all circumstances. Just as no man by taking thought can add an inch to his stature, so no preparation can make hair. The utmost that can be done is to promote conditions favorable to growth. This is done by Ayer's Hair Vigor. It removes dandruff, cleanses the scalp, nourishes the soil in which the hair grows, and, just as a desert will blossom under rain, so bald heads grow hair, when the roots are nourished. But the roots must be there. If you wish your hair to retain its normal color, or if you wish to restore the lost tint of gray or faded hair use

Bank Failures.

Four banks failed Monday in the city of Chicago alone. The National Banks of Illinois, with assets reported at 2½ millions went under first on account of missmanagement. Then three other smaller banks went down along with it. And for a month, there have been many bank failures all over the country. Had Bryan been elected, every republican paper in the land would have said his election caused these failures. McKinley was elected. Why not now say McKinley caused these failures? We often said during the campaign that McKinley's election could not bring good times, for the reason that all his supporters both republicans and democrats believed in and promised a continuation of the same condition of things we already had, and which had given us year after year, harder and harder times. But they deceived enough voters, by false cries of alarm, to elect McKinley. The hard times continue of course. Now let them shoulder the responsibility.

Missionary Concert.

There will be a benifit missionary concert at the Presbyterian church, on Monday evening, Jan. 4, at 8 o'clock. The Auburn people know the merits of their musicians and the rare treat they will receive. Mrs. Mary Ehlers will give one of her interesting and instructive talks, on her work in the South. Entire program will be published next week.

A needy Mission-school whose workers are known here and who are earnestly striving to better mankind, has asked for assistance.

The entire proceeds of this entertainment will be immediately sent to this school.

Only 15 cents to hear one of the finest concerts ever given in Auburn, and at the same time helping a worthy cause.

The New Hook Spoon Free to All.

I read in the Christian Standard that Miss A. M Fritz, Station A., St. Louis, Mo., would give an elegant plated hook spoon to anyone sending her ten 2-cent stamps I sent for one and found it so useful that I showed it to my friends, and made $13,000 in two hours, taking orders for the spoon; it is a household necessity. It cannot slip into the dish or cooking vessel, being held in the place by a hook on the back. The spoon is something that housekeepers have needed ever since spoons were first invented. Anyone can get a sample spoon by sending ten 2 cent stamps to Miss Fritz. This is a splendid way to make money around home. Very truly,

A Dandy Thing to Sell!

I have been doing so well this summer selling combination dippers that I think it is my duty to tell others about it. I have not made as much money as some I read about, but I never made less than $3 and often $5 a day; the dipper can be used as a fruit jar filler; a plain dipper; a fine strainer; a funnel; a strainer funnel; a sick room warming pan, and a pint measure. These eight different uses makes the dipper such a necessary article that it sells at nearly every house, as it is so cheap. You can get a sample by sending, as I did, 18 two-cent stamps to pay postage, etc., to W. H. Baird & Co., Station A, Pittsburg, Pa., and they will mail you a dipper, and you can go right to work. Any one can make $3 or $4 a day anywhere. READER. tf

How the Dipper Saved the Farm.

Father was sick and the mortgage on the farm was coming due, I saw in the Christian Advocate where Miss A. M. These eight different uses makes the dipper such a necessary article that I went to work with it and it sells at very near every house. And in four months I paid off the mortgage. I can clear as much as $20 a month. If you need work you can do well by giving this a trial. Miss A. M. Fritz, Station A, St. Louis, Mo., will send you a sample for 18 two cent stamps—write at once. Huge Culbertson, of Auburn, was snooping around down this way one day last week. We suspect he was trying to buy a part of the town and move it over to the Hub in order to liven up things a little.

Chance for the Better

Among the improvements that will be made on the B. & O. is a radical change in running of passenger trains. General Manager Greene has been investigating this matter for some time and contemplates changing the number of cars per train so that they can make better time going up the heavy grades, and as a consequence will not run so fast coming down. Now that the track has been placed in a first-class condition and new motive power purchased for the passenger trains, Mr. Greene is of the opinion that, by equalizing the weight of the trains, a trip over the B. & O. will be made very pleasant.

Woman's Diseases

Are as peculiar as unavoidable, and cannot be discussed or treated as we do those to which the entire human family are subject. Menstruation sustains such important relations to her health, that when Suppressed, Irregular or Painful, she soon becomes languid, nervous and irritable, the bloom leaves her cheek and very grave complications arise unless Regularity and Vigor are restored to these organs.

Bradfield's Female Regulator Is a receipt of one of the most noted physicians of the South, where troubles of this sort prevail more extensively than in any other section, and has never failed to correct disordered Menstruation. It restores health and strength to the suffering woman.

"We have for the past thirty years handled Bradfield's Female Regulator, both at wholesale and retail, and in no instance has it failed to give satisfaction. We sell more of it than all other similar remedies combined."

The Fair Matter

Thursday's Daily.

Perry Fair, was put in jail last evening. As has been expected, the many suspicious things about his connection with the trouble in the treasurer's office, have pointed to Perry Fair, as the first subject for investigation, and following Judge Penfield's instructions the grand jury investigated the matter. Many witnesses were examined, and as a result they found an indictment. Yesterday, he was put under arrest, and about six p. m. went to jail.

Several stories are afloat, there is a well-sustained rumor, that when arrested by Deputy Sheriff Platter he made that officer an offer of $200 to be allowed to escape. This was was not accepted, though to lead him on Platter said that his father, James W. Platter, would probably like to get back the $500 he would have to pay, as one of the bondsmen. At this, it is said that young Fair intimated he was willing to make it $500. Of course he failed to make the bargain.

Saturday's Daily.

Every day this matter gets more interesting as new facts come out. One of the latest of these is the way Perry Fair tried to kill off the effects of his apparent connection with those orders that were raised. It will be remembered, that an order of $19 and one of $29 were each raised $100 and that both those orders had been turned over to Mrs. Archie Smith, of Waterloo, to make good the $500 she had given Fair to get county orders for her. As we said at the time, these "raised" orders like forged orders, would be valueless and she whould lose the total value, $149,70 she had allowed for them under the belief that they were genuine. But of course she might get the county to issue to her two duplicate orders, to cover the proper amount as shown by the stubs in the auditor's office, but she would still lose $200. But Fair would still have to account for the raising of these orders $100 each which is forgery. So the other day, he went up to Waterloo, and bought these two orders back from Mrs. Smith, and got them at a discount, too, as she very prudently took about $25 less than the present raised face feeling that a loss of $25 was more satisfactory than a loss of $200. Then young Fair took the two orders home and burned them. All this work on these orders helps to fix suspicion on him. And it was on this charge more particularly, that he was arrested. At the time of his arrest, he was asked where he got $200 to use in buying back these two orders from Mrs. Smith, and he said he borrowed it from Lew Bowers. This was also suspicious as Mr. Bowers is a man very careful in his business. So Bowers was called in and plainly told Fair he had lent him no money, and did not have his note, as Fair said he had given a note for it. This fixed another point We are pleased to see Prosecutor Davis and the others interested, including the bondsmen, so in earnest to have this matter sifted to the bottom, no matter who is hit. We have talked with a number of the bondsmen, and they all feel alike about it. They have, during this investigation, given up several poins of pecuniary advantage to themselves, for the sake of either protecting the people, or bringing the guilty to justice. When the trouble as all over, we feel sure the people wfll appreciate the course now being taken.

AS TO RUMORS.

Wild rumors fill the air and people seem to believe everything, no matter how unreasonable.

One is that Thomas Mitchell, former cashier of the Garrett Bank is in jail. This is not true. Mr. Mitchell is here to-day, but is not under arrest. We suppose he is here to be used in investigating the Fair matter, but that is all that is certainly known. There is another rumor, to the effect that Attorney Emanuel is refused the privilege of seeing his client, Perry Fair. This is not true. It is safe not to believe all we hear.

Mrs. Aldrich Dead.

Mrs. Lucy Aldrich, the oldest citizen of the county, died Wednesday morning, Dec. 30, at 5 a. m. at the residence of her son Talma Rummel in Troy township. If we are not mistaken, she would have been 101 years old the 17th of next March. The funeral was held at the Jerusalem church west of Mr. Rummel's at 11 a. m. Jan. 1. We expect to have a full obituary soon. She was born during Washington's second term and has thus lived under the time of every president.

Dead in Bed.

Mr. Young, a groceryman in LaOtto was found dead in bed Thursday morning. He went to bed feeling as well as usual. In the morning his wife got up and built the fire and called him for breakfast, when she discovered he was cold in death. A roll of paper, wrapped in a piece of cloth was found pinned on the inside of his vest, in which was over $300 in money. His funeral was held yesterday at LaOtto.

Off to the Front.

Hon. C. M. Brown and Senator Nusbaum start for Indianapolis to-day noon, going over the Wabash to Peru and thence via the Lake Erie & Western. The session of the legislature begins on Thursday and they go now so as to be present, for the preliminary work is as important as any that comes up after the session begins. There is the settling of many questions, even for the minority members, and for those in the majority there is still more. But both are interested more or less in preparing for the struggle over the U. S. Senator, over the arrangement for places on committees, over the selection of postmaster, of doorkeepers, of clerks, secretaries and even of pages. All these are more or less fought over and even minority members find it an advantage to be on hand and take part in the first steps. The democrats are are well aware they can do but little this term if the republicans should unite well on various matters and especially in regard to U. S. Senator. It is impossible to get a senator of our own, but if several ballots should be taken, the democratic members may defeat some republican in the lead by going bodily over to one of his republican opponents. The state should have a desirable senator even if this unusual course is taken.

Marry This Girl Quick.

I saw in your paper that a 13 year old boy made $1.25 the first hour he worked selling the Perfection Metal Tip Lampwick. I ordered a sample and went to work and the first week I cleared $10, the second week I cleared $15. I expect to run it up to $25 a week in the near future, as the Perfection Metal Tip Lampwick makes such a beautiful white light and does away with smoky chimneys and bad oder and saves oil, it is easy to sell. If you wish to try it send 13 cent stamps to Miss A. M. Fritz, Station A. St. Louis, Mo, and she will send you sample outfit, this is a good way to make money around home.

SAD DEATH

Mrs. John Woodcox of St. Joe, Takes Her Own Life

WITH A REVOLVER.

People of that Town Startled By the Report.

Just What Prompted the Young Wife to Take Her Life is Not Known. Inquest will be Held.

Special to THE DAILY COURIER:

ST. JOE, Dec. 31, 1896.

This morning at an early hour the people of St. Joe were startled by the report that the young wife of John Woodcox had committed suicide, which upon investigation only proved too true. The facts as near as your correspondent is enabled to get them are as follows:

Mrs. Woodcox is the daughter of Martin Tustison, one of our best citizens with whom, she and her husband had lived since their marriage about two years ago. She has been in poor health for some time and has been confined to the house perhaps six or eight months. This morning the balance of the family had arisen and had breakfast about ready, Mrs. Woodcox's sister Mattie, had called her, and her husband and the husband got up and went out to breakfast, his wife remarking that she would get up and come soon, and seemed to be getting up when her husbasd left the room. The family had seated themselves at the table, when the report of a pistol was heard and the sister Mattie hurried to the room only to find that Mrs. Woodcox had shot herself and was then dead. It had been the custom to have a loaded revolver on a stand close to the bed of Mr. and Mrs. Woodcox and she had taken it and shot herself through the temples, the ball going in at one temple and out at the other. She leaves a husband who is almost distracted, a son six months old, a father, brother and sister, grandfather grandmother and the whole community as friends who are greatly shocked at her untimely death. An inquest will be held.

Big 4 Wreck.

As Usual Auburn is Always Represented.

Thursday's Daily.

The Big 4 Passenger train collided with a Wabash freight at Lafayette Junction last night. The DAILY always gives its readers the news, as seen by an eye witness and on this occasion the particulars are given us by Hon. Cal. Husselman who was on the Big 4 train. He had been at Lebanon, attending a meeting of the State Dairy Association, and was on his way home.

Owing to some misunderstanding about the signals a Wabash freight was on the crossing of the Big 4, when the passenger train came in. Of course they were not going at full speed as they stopped at the Junction to let off passengers. When the trains came together however, there was quite a jar, and one French lady who was a lecturer at the Dairy meeting, exclaimed, "I just knew something would happen, since McKinley has been elected." There freight cars on the Wabash trains were turned over and the fourth, a cattle car, landed up on top of the boiler of the Big 4 passenger engine. Fortunately no persons were injured though all experienced quite a shaking up.

Horrible! Horrible!

Innocent children by the thousand are constantly dying of diarrhoea whose life might be saved. How quickly the demon works! Flesh speedily wastes away as though subjected to fire. You try change of water, and change of food and change of air. The handiest and cheapest and safest thing you can do is to procure at once a bottle of Dr. Hand's Diarrhoea Mixture, at any drug store, for 25c. It's wonderful how quickly it brings good results. Churning Done in One Minute.

I have tried the Lightning Churn, you recently described in your paper, and it is certainly a wonder. I can churn in less than one minute, and the butter is elegant, and you get considerably more butter than when you use a common churn. I took the agency for the churn here and every butter maker that sees it buys one. I have sold three dozen and they give the best of satisfaction. I know I can sell 100 in this township, as they churn so quickly, make so much more butter than common churns and are so cheap. Some one in every township can make two or three hundred dollars selling these churns. By addressing J. F. Casey & Co, St. Louis, you can get circulars and full information so you can make big money right at home. I have made $80 the past two weeks and I have never sold anything in my life before.

1 A FARMER.

A Chance to Make Money.

I have made $1,640 clear money in 87 days and attended to my household duties besides, and I think this is doing splendid for a woman inexperienced in business. Anyone can sell what everyone wants to buy, and every family wants a Dish Washer. I don't canvass at all; people come or send for the washer, and every washer that goes out sells two or three more, as they do the work to per minutes. I am going to devote my whole time to this business now and I am sure that I can clear $5,000 a year. My sister and brother have started in the business and are doing splendid. You can get complete instructions and hundreds of testimonials by addressing the Iron City Dish Washer Co., Station A. Pittsburg, Pa., and if you don't make lots of money it's your own fault. MRS. W. The New Hook Spoon Free to All.

I read in the Christian Standard that Miss A. M Fritz, Station A., St. Louis, Mo., would give an elegant plated hook spoon to anyone sending her ten 2-cent stamps I sent for one and found it so useful that I showed it to my friends, and made $13,000 in two hours, taking orders for the spoon; it is a household necessity. It cannot slip into the dish or cooking vessel, being held in the place by a hook on the back. The spoon is something that housekeepers have needed ever since spoons were first invented. Anyone can get a sample spoon by sending ten 2-cent stamps to Miss Fritz. This is a splendid way to make money around home. Very truly, BAD FIRE.

Defiance Loses One of Her Best Building—Firemen Injured.

Eighty thousand dollars went up in smoke in a fire that for four hours threatened the business portion of Defiance Ohio, the other night. That there was no loss of life is surprising, in view of the many hairbreadth escapes. As it was four men were injured. They are:

Louis Spring, Fire Chief; cut about the head by falling glass.

Jerry McCarty, Assistant Chief; head and arm cut and bruised.

Joe Miller, truckman; bruised by fall.

Peter Seibel, Secretary Northwestern Volunteer Fireman's Association, hands badly cut by falling glass.

The building burned was the Wertheimer Block, one of the finest in the city.

Fifty-One Drowned.

A special dispatch from Havana says that fifty-one men, comprising the filibustering expedition recently landed upon a desert key by the steamer Three Friends have been drowned. The men were hastily put ashore on the barren island after the Three Friends had been pursued by Spanish gun boats, with which the filibustering steamer had an exchange of shots, and the cargo of arms and ammunition, provisions, etc., on board the steamer were also landed with the men. The Three Friends being closely pursued by the Spanish war vessels, was compelled to put the men ashore on the barren island or take them back to the United States, and it was in making an attempt to leave the island, the dispatch says, that they were drowned.

Large Reward for Wreckers.

Louisville special: The officials of the Louisville and Nashville and the Southern Railway are determined to leave nothing undone to bring to justice the persons who wrecked the train on the Birmingham Mineral Road last week, causing a loss of twenty-five lives. The evidence seems to be clear that the wreck was the work of those who had either robbery or revenge in view. The officials held a consultation which resulted in a decision to offer a reward of $10,000 for the arrest and conviction of the party or parties who caused the wreck.

Robbed a Bank.

At Sulls, Iowa, a small town near Newton, robbers looted the State bank Thursday night. The bank has 5,000 capital, and its deposits were about $17,000. The details of the robbery are hard to obtain because the town has no telegraphic connection. It is reported the robbers entered the bank, blew open the safe and carried away an amount of cash estimated from $5,000 to $20,000.

Beaten to Death.

Sam May, suspected of violating the revenue laws, enticed Washington Smith to a shady covert, one mile from Vanceburg, Ky., on the Ohio River. He then accused Smith of informing on him, struck him down with a stone, and, assisted by his brothers, Hentz and Hiram, beat Smith to death. Sam May was arrested and a posse is in pursuit of the other two brothers.

Costly Wreck.

A rear end collision occurred on the New York Central Railroad near Schenectady, N. Y., between two freight trains. John Cook, a fireman, and Chas. Vogel, a brakeman, both of Albany, were killed. George Gilchrist, engineer of the rear train, saw that a collision was inevitable and jumped, thus saving his life. Several cars caught fire and were burned, causing a loss of $30,000.

Will Resume Work.

Announcement is made that Alexander Smythe & Sons, carpet mills at Yonkers, N. Y., will resume work soon after the first of the year. They have been shut down for two months. Only a few looms will be started at first, but gradually all will be at work. The mill employs 7,000 persons and has a pay roll of $60,000 a week when working full time.

Fatal Explosion.

Edward Kassier was killed and John Kelley fatally burned in an explosion in the Monitor coal mine, five miles south of West Bay City, Mich. Michael Simons was injured, but over forty other miners, who were in the mine, escaped. The three named were the only ones in the lead where the explosion occurred.

Fifteen Were Drowned.

The steamer Carranza, from Rotterdam, for Bilboa, Spain, has been totally lost off Cape Ajo. Six members of the crew were saved, but fifteen are missing.

WESTERN.

Rev. E. H. Vaughn, president of Saule College at Dodge City, Kan., has been deposed from the ministry for lying.

Stockholders of the failed Bank of Minnesota at St. Paul have appointed a committee to formulate a plan to reorganize the concern.

Lewis Klasman, a patrolman of the Cincinnati police force, lost his life Friday saving that of another man. He caught a horse running away with a buggy, in which Dr. Hosier was seated. He checked the horse so that the doctor escaped.

As a result of the voluntary liquidation of the Atlas National Bank of Chicago, J. S. & William M. Van Nortwick, who held 464 shares of stock in that bank and were borrowers therefrom to the amount of $300,000, made an assignment to the Equitable Trust Company of Chicago, who took possession of the Van Nortwicks' bank at Batavia Monday afternoon. The failure involves the entire interests of the Van Nortwicks, whose estimated wealth, according to their last statement, is $2,500,000, often estimated at three times that amount, and representing besides the Van Nortwick bank and other property, large manufacturing interests. The total liabilities will probably be near $2,000,000.

Otto Wasmansdorf, the Chicago banker, member of the defunct firm of Wasmansdorff & Heinemann, shot and killed himself at his home Sunday morning. Feeling that his good name had been smirched and unable to bear up against the financial ruin which had overwhelmed him as a result of the failure of the National Bank of Illinois, he ended his troubles with a bullet. One of his last acts was to mortgage his personal property for the benefit of his creditors. He saw before him the world as it appeared when he was just beginning his career, but his youth and energy had left him. The prospect frightened and dismayed him, and his courage failed. He believed he had lost his reputation, and without that he could not begin the world anew. So he went quietly to his son's room, and with his son's revolver ended it all.

H. W. Campbell, a prominent soil culturist of Sioux City, has signed an important contract with the Burlington. Mr. Campbell has been experimenting for the last three years on a process of turning the arid belt of lands in Nebraska, Colorado, Kansas, and the Dakotas into crop-producing districts. The experiments have been of such a successful nature that he has also induced the Northern Pacific, the Soo line, and the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul roads to enter into the scheme. Starting in the spring of the coming year the roads have agreed to each establish five experimental stations in places which may be designated by themselves, and men acquainted with Mr. Campbell's peculiar methods will be placed in charge of them. The farms will consist of forty-acre tracts, and the products raised will consist of corn, oats, wheat, rye, and all varieties of vegetables.

A Chicago electric car ran over, horribly mutilated, and killed little George Danemark at Throop street Friday afternoon, as a result of the boy's attempting to steal a ride, and forthwith a crowd of several thousand persons assembled, beat the conductor severely, tried to throw the car off the track, and were barely kept in check by a wagonload of police from the Maxwell Street Station. The accident caused such an excitement that it came near leading to other deaths within a few minutes. It happened that a large congregation was coming out of St. Procopius' Catholic Church, a block east of 18th street. In a moment 600 of the congregation had surrounded the car, and the sight of such a crowd quickly attracted four times as many more. It is thought by some of the spectators that there may have been as many as 4,000 people in the street. As soon as they saw the mangled remains of the boy they were transported with rage. In the meanwhile the conductor and motorman, not knowing that there was a telephone in Kvitek's drug store, at the southeast corner of the street, ran together to Center avenue to telephone the accident to the offices of the company. Only the arrival of the company's wrecking wagon, and a wagon load of patrolmen, saved the men from a lynching.

SOUTHERN.

Plunging down 110 feet through an iron trestle, an accommodation train on the Birmingham Mineral Road Sunday landed its passengers and train crew in a death trap on the rocky bottom of the Cahawba River. Of those on board only nine escaped alive. The number of the dead is estimated at thirty-five. Cremation alive was the horrible fate of a number of the victims. The startling assertion is made by one of the survivors that the wreck was the work of train robbers, and that after the human freight had been precipitated into the river they robbed both dead and dying, paying no attention to the piteous appeals for help.

Governor Bradley of Kentucky has several companies of the Second Regiment of the State militia practically under arms, owing to the fear that an attempt would be made to lynch Johnson Howe, the negro held at Paris for the murder of Policeman Charles Lacey at Cynthiana. The Governor is supposed to call out the militia only at the request of the sheriff, but there have been so many lynchings recently and the sheriffs have been so inactive that Governor Bradley has prepared to act on his own responsibility. There are still rumors that a mob may visit Paris, but it is safe to predict that they will meet with a warm reception.

Key West, Fla., dispatch: The steamer Three Friends, Captain Lewis, arrived Friday afternoon. The captain says the vessel is from Jacksonville, and that she has been on a wrecking voyage along the reefs. The customs officials are in charge, and there is really no doubt that the vessel has just returned from landing arms and ammunition in Cuba. Nothing was found on the vessel, but she has the appearance of having gone through several gales. Marks of a shot are visible on her bulwarks and the men smile when asked the meaning of it. It is stated that she was chased into the harbor by the dangerous presence of several Spanish men-of-war that were lying off the keys for her. The Three Friends is charged with infringing the maritime and neutrality regulations of the United States.

WASHINGTON.

A Washington scientist proposes to build a laboratory at Niagara Falls for the manufacture of large diamonds from carbon.

An interesting review of salmon fish conditions in this country is made in a report of the United States fish commission on artificial propagation of salmon on the Pacific coast. The report says the Battle Creek station of the California State commission, located about seven miles from Anderson, may soon pass into the charge of the United States. It is stated that 20,000,000 salmon eggs can be taken on Battle Creek in six weeks of a favorable year. The report contends that the salmon outlook is encouraging, but makes a disheartening review of an old scheme to restock depleted salmon rivers on the Atlantic coast. The report lays it down as no longer open to question that quinnat salmon, at least those that spawn a long distance from the ocean, never return to it again alive. They all die on the spawning grounds.

A Washington dispatch says: It has been learned from an authoritative source that Secretary Olney and Senor Dupuy De Lome, the Spanish minister, have practically terminated the negotiations on the Cuban question which are to be submitted to Congress. The Post says: "The terms of the agreement are based on the recent official communication from Premier Canovas, addressed to the Secretary of State. The Premier states clearly the terms which Spain will accord to the insurgents and practically asks the United States to propose these conditions to her rebellious subjects. In return for our good offices Spain assures this government that she sincerely deplores the great commercial loss which we have sustained on account of the Cuban disturbance. She assures us that she is even now considering a reciprocity treaty which will deal mainly with Cuban products and which will be framed in such advantageous terms toward this government that our losses, both in commerce and in the destruction of American property in Cuba, will be most generously compensated."

FOREIGN.

A London Times dispatch from Calcutta says that the long-lost birthplace of Buddha has been discovered in Nepa-Teral.

A dispatch from Rome says a landslip has entirely destroyed the Village of Santa Ana de Pelago, demolishing 118 houses and rendering 150 families homeless. There was no loss of life.

A dispatch to the London Graphic says: "It is stated that a Russian fleet of twelve vessels has been stationed at Vladivostock to watch Japan, which is suspected of meditating another blow at China."

The Wilson Line steamship Volo is a total loss at Wingu, off the coast of Sweden. The crew and passengers were saved. The Volo was a screw steamship built at Hull in 1890 and registered 841 tone net.

Count Pappenheim of Bavaria is suing for divorce from his wife, daughter of the late Charles Wheeler of Philadelphia. The couple quarreled over the amount the countess, who received nearly $2,000,000 from her father, should give her husband.

Dr. Ramon Zertucha, during the life of General Antonio Maceo attached to the Cuban leader's staff as a surgeon, and after the death of Maceo accused of treachery in causing his betrayal into the hands of the Spanish troops, has written a letter to the New York Herald, in which he says that despair drove Maceo to court death. This despair was caused, he affirms, by the lack of support which Maceo received from the insurgent civil chiefs. Upon the shoulders of some of them also Dr. Zertucha lays the charge of having received money from the Spanish Government.

The London Times Paris correspondent says: "The Washington government has been confidentially informed, although in friendly terms, that the European powers would not remain passive should the United States recognize or encourage the Cuban insurgents. If my information is correct an intimation has been further given that Germany is quite ready, even now, to take Spain's side should the United States show a disposition officially to side with the rebels. These warnings originated in the course of pourparlers for a European coalition against revolutionary socialism."

According to the lastest advices from the Orient, Li Ka Chuch, superintendent of the Canton police, Nov. 23 seized a large number of counterfeit Chinese coins and materials for their manufacture. The chief coiner, Cheng Tung, and his confederates, Chan Mui, Tse Sang and others, were arrested. An imperial decree from Peking commanded the immediate decapitation of the three above-named offenders, and enjoined the viceroy to deal with the others as he thought necessary, according to law, as a warning in future to the people. The officials who effected the seizure were all promoted in rank. The Canton viceroy reported in another memorial the capture of two notorious pirate junks in the open sea near Tau-Chow by the military officials. In effecting the capture one military official lost his life. A decree was issued Nov. 29 authorizing the execution of the captives and ordering the officials concerned in the capture to be promoted in rank and that the matter of the military officer having lost his life be referred to the board concerned for rewards and honors.

One of the principal reasons given by the Spanish Government for insisting upon Gen. Weyler making a decisive attempt to clear the Provinces of Pinar del Rio, Havana, and Matanzas within a few weeks is the urgent necessity of scoring a military success before Spain has once more to appeal to the native and foreign market for fresh loans when she exhausts the money obtained by recent interior loans—namely, in March next year. At present the Minister of Colonies disposes of cash and Cuban bonds of the value of about $50,000,000 only. Out of the said loan come the expenses of the war, being for Cuba $12,000,000 monthly, and for the Philippines at least $4,000,000. Up to the present the Spanish treasury has assisted the Cuban treasury by guaranteeing advances made by foreign and native bankers upon Cuban bonds and by pledging the sources of imperial revenue for the recent $80,000,000 loan. The moment is approaching when the Spanish budget and Spanish taxpayers must be asked to provide in the shape of additional taxation $26,000,000 annually for the interest and sinking fund of $240,000,000 thus raised to meet only in part the expenses of the Cuban war up to March, 1897, and which the Cuban budget and Cuban taxpayers could not possibly undertake to pay, even if the war soon terminated. The budgets have shown deficits averaging $5,000,000 annually before the present insurrection.

DIE IN A MINE SHAFT

AWFUL DISASTER AT PRINCETON, INDIANA.

Six Miners Killed Outright and Eight Injured, of Whom Some Will Die—Superintendent of the Mine One of the Victims.

Death in the Blast.

As a result of a gas explosion in the mine of the Maule Coal Company at Princeton, Ind., Saturday six men were killed and eight badly injured, one of whom will doubtless die. The dead are: John Ernest, married; Theodore Fabre, blacksmith, married; John Holmes, married; Robert Maule, married, treasurer and general superintendent of the Maule Coal Company; Carl Poneylight, single, of Belleville, Ill; James Ryan, married.

The injured are: Will Booker, will die; James Davis; William D. Grills, will recover; Tom Price, will recover; Frank Turbie, will die.

David Nolan and James Turner, supposed to have been killed with the others, were rescued alive, as were Arthur Colgate and James Kruse.

About twenty men were all at work in the mine, clearing up the debris resulting from a recent explosion, when no one was injured. Suddenly there was a flash, followed by a blinding explosion. The smoke and gas came rushing from the mouth of the mine, and the alarm was at once given. The scene around the shaft was a pitiful one, the wives, children and relatives of the men below shrieking and wringing their hands in anguish.

The escape of four of the men from instant death seems almost a miracle when it is considered that the heavy mine cages were blown from the shaft bottom to the top of the minehouse, over 500 feet above, by the force of the explosion. These cages were wrecked, so an iron bucket was improvised for a rescuing party as soon as possible after the accident.

The first persons brought up were Turbie, Grill and two colored men, Davis and Booker. The first was badly burned and was carried to an ambulance. Grill and Davis were apparently uninjured, and walked off, saying they were all right. Brooker was cut and burned and had to be supported. Afterward it was found his jaw was broken and one eye was torn from its socket. All were given medical attention by a corps of physicians. Then the rescuing party began to bring up the dead.

State Mine Inspector Fisher will investigate the matter. None of the rescued men can explain the circumstances that led up to the explosion.

CUBANS ARE SCARED.

Three Friends' Crew Find Themselves Regarded as Pirates.

The actors in the recent sea tragedy, who were on board the Three Friends, the Cuban filibustering steamer, are badly frightened over the gravity of the situation in which they have been involved. They find themselves, instead of being in a dangerous position as filibusters, to be in the unenviable position of pirates, and the wisest Cuban heads have been summoned in consultation. Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Scott Wike was at Key West investigating the matter, but the absence of a district attorney at that place made detention a farce. Mr. Wike censured the district attorney there for having no representative at Key West. At the consultation no denial had been made by officials of the Three Friends of the story of alleged engagement. Their silence was taken as an admission. In that case Spain may make requisition upon the United States for the persons who were aboard, and this government has no alternative but their delivery. Col. Nunez admitted that the story of the engagement was true, and appeared particularly proud. He has been the custodian of all the recent expeditions.

"THREE FRIENDS," THE CUBAN FILIBUSTERING STEAMER.

The Three Friends has been steadily engaged in the filibustering service. The last trip shows she is not to be caught even when she is led into a trap. Her successes are almost incredible and are explained only when it is remembered that she is handled by men whose hearts are in the cause they work for. Her two masters have been men who positively delight in worrying the Spanish; her crew are ready to die for Cuba; her pilots are sworn to liberty or death. They are Cuban patriots that know every spot of shore line at which a successful landing can be made. Only twice has the stanch little ship seen danger within arm's reach besides the late action, out of which she came a victor. Well equipped is the Three Friends for the daring and dangerous work in which she is engaged. Fleet of foot as a hare, she cannot only distance the man of war, but she can easily outsteam the smaller craft that infest the Floridan waters. She has always eluded the United States boats and laughs at other vessels. Her gray color conceals her lines except when at close range, and the hard coal she burns makes her presence invisible in the open day, while she herself can see an enemy by his smoke long before he comes in range of the glass. Her men, from master to cabin boy, are exiled patriots or Americans, who will dare do more, if anything, than the Cubans. Her expeditions have been a source of joy to all that have been engaged in them, and everybody on the American coast except the representatives of the Spanish Government is her wild admirer.

FIENDS WRECK A TRAIN.

Twenty-Eight Lives Sacrificed on an Alabama Road.

The worst railroad wreck in the history of Alabama occurred Sunday morning at the Cahaba River bridge, twenty-seven miles out from Birmingham, on the Brierfield, Blocton and Birmingham branch of the Southern Railway. Twenty-eight persons are known to have perished, that number of bodies having been recovered from the wreck. Eleven escaped alive, but of these several will die. All of the train crew were killed except the fireman, whose escape seems almost miraculous.

Six miles south of Gurnee the railroad crosses the Cahaba River on a trestle 900 feet long. The river span was of iron, 200 feet long and 110 feet high. The river is a mountain stream. The span over it gave way as the train was crossing it, and the engine and all of the cars went to the bottom of the river below.

The first news of the wreck was brought to Hargrove by a farmer who happened to be passing. He noticed that the middle span of the bridge was missing. Approaching closer, he observed the train burning in the river below, and could hear the cries of the wounded and dying mingled with the hissing of the steam coming up from the wreck. He gave out the word to farmers residing near by, and hastened to Hargrove to telegraph to Birmingham for relief. Three relief trains with doctors were sent from Birmingham city and a fourth from Blocton. Meanwhile the country people had gathered to render what assistance they could. It was soon found that almost every person on the train had been killed, and the bodies in most cases burned. The rescuers arrived too late to be of much service, except in caring for the nine wounded persons who managed to get out of the wreck alive.

The fact that the bridge was only four years old and was regarded as one of the strongest and best in the State, makes the theory that the bridge gave way under the weight of the train absurd. Surviving passengers say they felt the wheels bumping on the cross ties before the crash came. The fact that a bold attempt was made only five days before to wreck a Southern Railway passenger train at McComb's trestle by the removal of a rail on a trestle ninety feet high adds to the belief that this horror was the result of the work of train-wreckers.

WARFARE ON TOLL ROADS.

Destruction of Kentucky's Gates Goes Merrily On.

A queer warfare is being waged in Kentucky. Toll gates on turnpikes are being torn down or blown up at night by masked men, and the tolltakers threatened and intimidated. In one instance a man was shot, and several have been fired upon. It is the argument of the farming class for free turnpikes. While they cannot be defended for their actions, it is encouraged by the tardiness of the county magistrate.

As in all States newly settled, when farmhouses were few and towns fewer, the turnpike was a great convenience. Men who built them were entitled to and did receive without murmur a toll from those who used the pikes in preference to the hilly and winding and poorly kept dirt roads. The pikes were constructed as early as fifty and even seventy-five years ago. Nearly all are of macadam and some are of gravel. The grades are light and the roads usually direct, and they are kept in good repair.

Other States have had toll roads, and many of them have them yet. But as the population grew and the counties became richer the turnpikes were purchased, and thereafter owned and maintained by the counties in which they lay, and no toll is charged. In time the people of Kentucky felt that the day of the toll gate had passed, and that the interests of the agricultural classes would be better served by the freeing of the turnpike, as it is commonly called.

TOLLGATE NEAR LEXINGTON, KY.

The result of the agitation was the passing by the Legislature of a law which provides for the purchase of the turnpikes by the counties. This law provides that the County Court, composed of the County Judge and all the magistrates of the county, shall appoint a commission to appraise the value of the turnpike to be purchased. The money for the payment of the purchase price is raised by taxation, and thereafter the turnpikes shall be free, unless at an election held for that purpose the taxpayers of the county shall have opposed the purchase of the pikes.

Nearly all the principal counties in Kentucky have voted to purchase the turnpikes, and in a few of the counties this has been done. In a majority, however, the magistrates have taken no action. The people, tired of waiting and tired of longer paying toll, have taken into their own hands the matter of freeing the turnpikes. The peace officers of the counties, selected by the popular vote of the people, are in sympathy with the "free turnpikers," and their inaction has only stimulated the rioters to further lawlessness.

WILL NOT WED CHAUNCEY.

Miss Edith Collins Is to Marry Count Czaykowski.

Miss Edith Collins, Chauncey M. Depew's ward, is not going to marry the merry railroad president after all. Effectual denial of the story is made by the announcement of her engagement to Count Czaykowski, councilor of state of the Turkish embassy at Rome. Miss Collins is descended from a long line of distinguished American ancestors, among whom, on her father's side, were two colonial governors—Governor William Bradford of Massachusetts and Governor William Leete of Connecticut. On her mother's side Miss Collins is a great-granddaughter of Commodore Vanderbilt.

MISS EDITH COLLINS.

Count Czaykowski, who is looked upon as one of the most brilliant diplomats in Europe, is highly esteemed by the Sultan and is one of his advisers. He was, until quite recently, first secretary of the Turkish embassy at St. Petersburg, where a year ago he met Miss Collins, who was there on a visit at the special invitation of the dowager empress of Russia, to take charge of a booth at a great bazaar for charity. Her fiance is only 29 years of age and has a handsome fortune. In all probability the wedding will be celebrated in Paris during the latter part of January. Miss Collins is now there with her stepmother.

CHAPTER XXV.

With a feeling of relief Hanbury walked rapidly away. The last words of Leigh had stirred within him once more the trouble which had made him shirk meeting his mother that morning. The burning down of Leigh's place and the destruction of the wonderful clock would afford a story to be told when he got home, and he might interpose that history between the first words of meeting and the ultimate announcement that the engagement between Dora and himself was at an end.

When he got back home he heard, with great relief, that Mrs. and Miss Grace were at luncheon in the dining-room with Mrs. Hanbury. The presence of the two visitors and the general nature of the conversation necessary to their presence and the meal would serve as an admirable softener of the story he had for his mother's private ear.

Some reference brought in Leigh's name, and then Hanbury told of the fire, the destruction of the clock, his meeting that morning with the dwarf and the conviction of the latter that he would not long survive the destruction of his incomparable machine. He noticed as he went on that Miss Grace first flushed and then paled.

The girl had hardly spoken up to this. She sat silent and timid. She did not seem to hear quickly or to apprehend accurately. She had hesitated in her answers like one afraid. The table was small, and laid for four people. Hanbury sat opposite his mother, Edith opposite her grandmother. The heat was intense.

There was a buzzing and beating in the girl's ears. All at once she hastily put one hand to her left side and the other to her forehead and rose, swaying softly to and fro.

"I—I——" she whispered, but could say no more.

Hanbury caught her, or she would have fallen. The two ladies got up.

"She is not well," said the old woman, excitedly. "She has eaten nothing for days!"

The girl reclined, cold and pale as marble, in the young man's arms. Her eyes were half closed, her lips half open. He half led her, half lifted her, to a couch. Restoratives such as stood at hand were applied, but she did not quite recover. She was not exactly unconscious. This was no ordinary faint.

The ladies were terrified, and Hanbury ran off for a doctor. When he came back, the girl had been got upstairs. She was still in the same state, not quite conscious, and not quite insensible. The doctor made a long examination, and heard all that was to be told. When he came down to the dining-room, where Hanbury was excitedly walking up and down, he said the case was serious, but not exactly dangerous, that is, the patient's life was in no imminent peril. She had simply been overwrought and weakened by want of food, and jarred by suppressed and contending emotions. There was no organic disease, but the heart had been functionally affected by the vicissitudes of the past few days acting on an organism of exquisite sensibility. Quiet was the best medicine, and, after quiet, careful strengthening, and then the drugs mentioned in his prescription. But above all, quiet.

Hanbury took up the prescription and hastened off with it. On his way back from the druggist he reverted to the past of Leigh:

"Yes, I owed the introduction to him. I freely forgive him now. He, too, was the means of breaking off the Ashton affair. I must write at once. I have behaved badly in not doing so before. I'll write the moment when I get back home. Yes, I must write when I get back, and then I'll put the affair out of my mind altogether, for good and ever."

When he had finished a letter to Dora he closed it without reading it over. "When one reads over a letter like this," he thought, "one grows nice about phrases and tries to alter it, and finally tears it up. I am satisfied that if I tried all day long I should do no better than this. I shall post it myself when I go out. That letter is a great weight off my mind, and now I am much less disinclined to break the matter to my mother. When that is over I shall feel that I am free."

The next morning he received a message requesting him to call upon Leigh, at his new lodgings. He found the dwarf in bed. A woeful change had taken place in face and frame.

"I sent for you because I have something on my mind; and, as you are the only man who knows all the secret of Mystery Gold, and my deputy winder, I want you to do me a service. Will you?" were Leigh's first words.

"Anything that an honest and honorable man may do, I will do for you with pleasure, if I can possibly," said Hanbury, shocked and subdued by the change in the clockmaker's appearance.

"Are you going to see the Ashton's soon?"

"No." Hanbury reddened, but he was standing with is back to the light. "The family are leaving town suddenly."

"Are you going, too?"

"No." Hanbury was anything but pleased with all this, but who could be angry with a dying man, and such a dying man, too?

"If you were going I should like to send a message. But of conrse you cannot be going if they are leaving town. I told you I have some money of my own. I have made my will since I saw you. After my mother's death all will go, I mean the yearly interest of all will go in equal shares to any hunchbacks that apply for shares. The conditions will be advertised in the papers."

"I think you could not have done better with it," said Hanbury, cordially.

"Yes. When you see her next, tell her I gave up all thought of making Miracle Gold, because she said she wished me to. I know it is not fair of me to keep you here. You want to go. Say good-by to her before she leaves town. You must not stay here any longer. Will you say good-by to me also? Two good-bys in one day. One to her and one to me."

Hanbury rose and held out his hand, saying: "Good-by."

Leigh did not stir.

"Are we not to shake hands?"

"Yes, in a moment."

Hanbury waited a while. "I am going now. You have nothing more to say?"

He had not.

He had nothing more to say. He would say no more to any one. He was dead.

CHAPTER XXVI.

Hanbury had, during the past few days, carefully avoided meeting friends or acquaintances. He went near no club and kept in the house a good deal. When he went abroad he drove. He did not wish to be asked questions of the most ordinary kind respecting the Ashtons.

That morning he had seen in a newspaper that Mr., Mrs. and Miss Ashton were leaving for a tour abroad. That was all the paragraph said.

At the very moment Hanbury was speaking to Oscar Leigh the Ashton family were leaving the city. When Dora Ashton sat that afternoon in her own room, after writing to her lover, she knew the engagement was at an end, and realized the knowledge. But she had not said anything of it. When she got his answer all was over beyond any chance whatever. He had apologized amply for his offense and accepted her decision.

His letter had a bracing effect upon her. She had been perfectly sincere in writing her letter, and she had never wavered in her resolution of breaking off the engagement, yet deep down in her nature was a formless hope, which she would not acknowledge to herself for a moment, that he might disregard her request and insist upon her re-consideration. But with the advent of his letter that hope vanished wholly, and she felt more firm and secure. The letter had been a tonic. If he were so easily dismissed, he had not been very much in earnest.

John Hanbury thought that now, all being over with Leigh, he was bound in common rectitude to disclose the source of the gold which Leigh had intended passing off as the result of his imaginary discovery in chemistry or alchemy. The simplest course would be to go to the police and tell all he knew. He was not anxious to pass through streets in which he was known, and he was glad of anything to do. How better could he employ an hour than by trying to find out if any such man as Timmons existed? He did not like the whole thing, but he could not rest easy while he had the name of a man whom Leigh said dealt largely in the fruit of robberies and thefts. At all events, supposing the whole story told him by the dwarf was fiction, no harm could come of a visit to Timmons.

He jumped into a cab and was rapidly driven to the address Leigh had given him. Yes, sure enough, there was the name and the place, "John Timmons, Marine Store Dealer." But how did one get in, supposing one wanted to get in? The place was all shut up, and he could see no door.

A man was busy with one of the many up-ended carts. He had the wheel off and was leisurely greasing the axletree.

"Has Mr. Timmons left this place, please?" he asked of the man.

"I think so. Ay, he has."

"Do you know how long?"

"A few days. Since Monday, I think. Anyway, the place hasn't been open since Monday, and I hear that he is gone since Saturday night."

"Have you any notion where he's gone?"

The man stopped greasing the wheel and looked up curiously. "Are you from the police, too?"

"No, I am not. Have people been here from the police?"

"Ay. And if you was in with Timmons and that crew, you'd better show a clean pair of heels. There's something wrong about a dwarf or a cripple that's missed, burned up in a fire. Timmons and a burglar was seen hanging about that place, and they do say that if they're catched they'll be hanging about somewhere else. So if you're in with that lot, you'd better clear out too. They say Timmons has got out of the country." The man resumed his work upon the axle. Hanbury thanked him and turned away. He had nothing to do here. The police had information already.

CHAPTER XXVII.

"Well," he said, "what is the matter? Oh, breakfast." He put down his newspaper. "I see," he added, "they have given this fellow Timmons five years, and served him very right."

"John, you have forgotten something," she said, stopping him on his way to the breakfast table and laying one of her delicate white hands on his shoulder.

"Eh? Forgotten something? Have I? What? I have a lot of important things on my mind," said he, looking down on the clear, sweet, oval face, turned up to his.

"Whatever is on your mind, sir, you ought not to forget the duties of your lips. I have not had my good-morrow kiss, sir."

"I never had anything so important on my mind, or on my lips, Edy, as your kiss, dear." He took her in his arms and kissed her fondly.

"You grow better at compliments as the days go by."

"No, dear, deeper in love."

"With such a commonplace kind of thing as a wife?"

"With the most uncommonplace sweetheart-wife in all the world."

"John, I am already beginning to feel quite a middle-aged wife, and my ring where it touches the guard is getting worn."

"That's a desperately serious thing—about the ring, I mean. Gold was too easily-worn a metal to marry you with, Edith. It should have been a plain band of adamant, and even that would not last long enough, dear."

"Are you practicing a speech to win a constituency?"

"No. I am speaking out of my heart to keep what I have won."

"Do you know I envy you only for one thing?"

"And what is that?"

"All the love that you give me?"

"But we are quits there, for I give all, you give all."

"But yours seems so much richer than mine."

"But I am with you, and always shall be. You are not afraid of my leaving you?"

"In the vulgar sense? Oh, no! Afraid of your going away and caring for some one else? Oh, no. That could not be."

"No, indeed. No, indeed."

"For I should call you back and show you my heart, and how could you leave me when you saw that there was nothing in all my heart but you? Your pity would not let you do that. You might take something else away, but you could not take away all that I had in my heart."

"You dreamer of holy dreams. You have come from some blessed place, you have come to us from some place that is better than this."

"No," she said, softly, "no. There is no better place for me. I am where God placed me—in my husband's arms."

They had been married a couple of months, and it was June once more. Not a cloud had arisen between them for these two months or during the months before. John Hanbury's mother said that Edith Grace had the same witchery in appearance as that village beauty of the olden days, and that some quality of the blood which flowed in his veins made him succumb at once to her, for otherwise how could it be that he should almost immediately after parting from Dora Ashton fall helplessly in love with a girl so extraordinarily like Dora Ashton as Edith? How else could the fascination be accounted for?

"I do not believe," he would say to himself, "that I was ever in love with Dora. I do think we should never have got on well together, and I am certain when she and Whinfield are married there will not be a happier couple in America, excepting Edith and me. When I heard that Dora was to be one of the party on the homeward cruise of Whinfield's yacht I knew all would be arranged before they saw Chicago again. They are most admirably suited to one another.

"With Edith an inspired accord arose between us. She leaned upon me, and I grew strong enough to support the burden of Atlas. I flung myself aside, so that I might not be impeded in my services to her. And I was welcomed in the spirit I came. She would take what I had to give, and all I had, and I had no care in my mind of myself or any of the gifts or graces which had been mine and now were hers. So I had enough time to think of her and no care to distract me from her."

That was his way of putting it to himself when he was in a very abstract and figurative humor. When he was not quite so abstract or figurative he would say to himself: "It is sympathy, nothing more than sympathy. That is the Miracle Gold we should all try to make in the crucible of our hearts."

THE END.

He Knew a Joke.

While John Chamberlin loved a harmless practical joke, he would not tolerate anything that would wound the feelings of stranger or friend, and he was constantly watchful to prevent newly made acquaintances from attempting to emulate him, at the expense of the comfort and sometimes the safety of others.

With the expectation of receiving Chamberlin's approval and creating a reputation as a joker, a prominent politician, with more money than refinement of sentiment, procured a half dozen large and lively lobsters and tied them so they could not escape in a bed where an equally unrefined fellow politician was to sleep. In great glee he confided in Chamberlin, who immediately sent a porter to the room, with instructions to remove the lobsters and lock the door of the practical joker's room, after placing his baggage in the hall.

A clerk came out on the piazza and handed the politician his bill.

"What's this?" he asked. "Ain't I good for this amount? Why, I could buy the hotel if I wanted to, John."

"Well, perhaps you could," replied Chamberlin, "but you can't buy me with it. I guess you belong down where they consider it real, genuine sport to souse bridegrooms in horse troughs and to tie tin pans to dogs' tails. There's the place to play your lobster tricks, not here."

The politician paid his bill and had the decency to keep away from Chamberlin's forever thereafter.—Atlanta Journal.

Overrated.

There is a widespread belief that the five senses of savages are extraordinarily sharp and acute; and in the matter of vision especially, popular opinion would award the palm to the Indian. The popular notion is, however, clearly in the wrong.

An English traveler in South America recently had occasion to test the question. He was greatly surprised to find that his guides could distinguish objects which he could not make out at all.

Thus, when a tiny speck appeared on the landscape of the pampas, a native could tell by the sight and movements what manner of thing it was. He subsequently discovered that this extraordinary range of vision was due more to long experience than to the actual possession of keen eyes. For when he took two of his guides off their native heath, and gave them unfamiliar sights and scenes in a city, neither could see any better than an ordinary person.

As a matter of fact, the five senses of the Indian or savage are dull compared with the five senses of civilized man. A competent authority says that a savage sees but few sights, hears but few sounds, tastes but few flavors, smells but few odors, and that his whole life is narrow and blunt.

The Lobster.

The lobster's legs, all told, are ten in number, but only eight of these are largely used for walking. The front pair, or big claws, have been specialized, as in the crab and most other of the higher crustaceans, into prehensive organs for catching and crushing the prey. Their use is obvious. Lobsters feed largely off mullusks of various sorts and other hard-shelled marine animals; in order to be able to break or crush the shells of these, and so get at the soft fish within, they have acquired such large and very muscular nippers or pincers.

Late Hours and Old Age.

A German doctor who has been collecting information about the habits of long-lived persons finds that the majority of those who attained old age indulged in late hours. Eight out of ten persons over 80 never went to bed till well into the small hours and did not get up again till late in the day.

We may accept 92,100,000 miles as the length of the earth's mean orbit radius, according to the results of observations made by Prof. Harkness and Dr. Gill. Prof. Young gives it as 92,975,500 miles.

Many of the so-called "vegetable ivory" buttons used on dresses, cloaks, etc., are made of potatoes treated with sulphuric acid.

NO MORE WORK FOR MILKMAIDS

Iowa Farmer Has a Machine to Take Their Place.

Hiram C. Wheeler, a farmer king of Iowa, has a machine that milks seventy-five cows a day with a perfection of action that would put a "pretty maid" to the blush. The inventor offered the machine some time ago to Mr. Wheeler, who liked it, tried it and found it a success. In the accompanying picture the numbers indicate the leading parts of the apparatus. No. 1 represents a collapsible vacuum storage chamber, fastened by the top and inside of the frame which is shown. No. 2 represents a box, which will contain about 1,200 pounds of sand or dirt, which is so made that it will slide up and down inside the frame, and is suitably fastened to the lower end of the vacuum storage chamber (No. 1). No. 3 represents a metallic air pipe or tube leading from the top end of the vacuum storage chamber (No. 1) to the air pump (No. 4). The air pump (No. 4) is suitably provided with check valves, one being an inlet and the other an outlet. Attached to the main pipe (No. 3) is the vacuum gauge (No. 5). No. 6 represents a branch nipple fastened to the main air pipe (No. 3). No. 7 represents a rubber air hose, one end of which is attached to No. 6 and the other end to the air valve (No. 8). The valve (No. 8) has a nipple which extends through the cover of the end milk can. The ordinary eight and ten gallon milk cans are used for the milk receptacles, and enough of these cans are always used with the machine to contain the milk of all the cows to be milked, so that the vacuum can be created in all the cans at one time and before the milking is started. No. 9 represents the tubes attached to the milk can covers, and the rubber tubes connecting the several cans.

It will be noticed that the end milk can has an "L" shaped tube, and that the next can has a "T" shaped tube. All of the "T" shaped tubes extend through the cover down into the can about five inches. The can nearest to the milk conducting pipe (10) is connected by suitable rubber tube to it. The main milk conducting pipe (10) is fastened along the stanchions as near the ground as practicable, the end nearest the milk cans being lower than the opposite end. No. 11 represents special rubber milk tubes which branch from the main milk conducting pipe to a point in front of the cow's fore feet, and a little to the right, so as not to interfere with the cow's lying down in the stanchions. One of these tubes (11) branches from the main pipe for each cow in the herd. Attached to the other end of the branch tubes (11) are the compound tees and teat cups. The compound tees consist of four valves, properly joined, and a teat cup properly attached to each valve. The compound tee and teat cups are so adjusted that all four teats can be milked at one time and the milk from all run through the branch tube (11) into the main conducting pipe (10). No. 13 represents a traction can attached to one end of the rope, which runs over two pulleys and is fastened at the other end to the branch tube (11). No. 14 represents a series of compound tees and sets of teat cups attached to their respective branch tubes hung up on the stanchions, as they are when not in use. No. 15 represents a water receptacle or tank, connected by a pipe to the highest points of main milk conducting pipe (10). A valve is placed between the water receptacle and the main milk conducting pipe. No. 16 represents the operator attaching one of the sets of milk cups.

The manner of using and operating is as follows: The cows being in their proper stanchions, the operator works the air pump, 4, by hand, drawing the air out of the vacuum storage chamber until it is practically fully collapsed and has drawn the weight box up as far as possible. The operator then puts the milk cans into their proper places. The covers, each one of which has a small rubber ring around it, are put on the cans and pressed down so that with the help of the rubber ring an air-tight connection is made with the cans. The valve, 8, is then opened. There being a vacuum in the vacuum storage chamber and air pump, 3, it is apparent that the air in the milk receptacles and branch tubes will be immediately drawn into the vacuum storage chamber and that the weight, 2, will descend. The operator can then pump out all the air that has been drawn into the vacuum storage chamber, and the machine is ready for the milking. The operator takes a set of teat cups, with compound tee and branch tube, from the hook and successively applies them to the animal's teats and opens the valves in the compound tee belonging to them, whereupon the teats are instantly drawn into the cups by suction. The operator then goes to the next animal and repeats the operation. The milk flows from the teat cups through the branch tubes into the main milk conducting pipe and thus into the milk cans. As soon as the milk rises in the first can, so that it covers and seals the mouth of the tee-shaped tube, referred to, that projects down into the can, it will be apparent that the suction will be arrested for that particular can, and hence no more milk will enter it. The milk will simply enter the tube until it runs over into the next can, and so on.

The vacuum storage chamber when fully collapsed will milk from ten to fifteen cows before it is necessary to pump the air out of it again, the number of cows depending on the quantity of milk they give. At any time during the milking operation the operator can step to the pump and pump out a part or all of the air in the vacuum storage chamber. When a large number of cows as, for instance, 100, are attached to the machine at one time, it would be necessary to have some one at the pump nearly all the time.

The milker has been found to be a great labor-saving machine, as with it one man can milk from twenty-five to fifty cows per hour, the average speed of the average man with an average lot of cows, under ordinary conditions, being about thirty-five cows per hour. It has been also demonstrated that this method of milking is more agreeable to the animals than the average hand milking. When milked with this machine the cows show no uneasiness, and the longer they are milked the more gentle they appear to become, consequently they give milk freely and may be milked dry.

MACHINE THAT MILKS SEVENTY-FIVE COWS A DAY.

AERIAL NAVIGATION SOLVED.

German Scientist Claims He Has Overcome Previous Difficulties.

Dr. Wolfert, the well-known German aeronaut, who for years has been trying to solve the problem of aerial navigation, now claims to have solved it with his new airship Deutschland, and to those who have seen him speed through the air in the Deutschland his claim seems to be well founded. The great difficulty hitherto has been to manufacture airships that could be steered in any direction; this difficult feat Dr. Wolfert claims to have accomplished. The question now is, can he also succeed in steering his airship through a storm and at any height from the ground? As five days and nights were occupied in filling the balloon (at the doctor's factory in Lehoneberg this task could have been accomplished in an hour), much of the power was lost, and the vessel, which itself weighs 700 kilogrammes, was not in condition to carry Dr. Wolfert, who weighs 100 kilogrammes, the result being that G. Wirsum of Canstatt ascended in his stead and made the experiments. The airship is twenty-eight meters in length and eight and a half meters in diameter in the middle, and it is propelled by means of a ship's paddle, with two blades, which has a diameter of two and one-half meters. There is a second paddle under the gondola, which is used alike for the purpose of ascending and descending. These paddles make about 500 revolutions to the minute. The gondola, which is four meters long and made of bamboo, is firmly fastened to the balloon. How it is fastened is a secret which Dr. Wolfert keeps carefully to himself. He intends to make another ascent in the near future, and he hopes to be able to prove the practical utility of his new airship.

DR. WOLFERT'S AIRSHIP.

Queer Astronomical Facts.

The speculative astronomers have given us some queer calculations and odd comparisons. One of the most curious of these is one in which the relative size of the sun and some of the planets is shown. They tell us that if the sun could be represented by a globe two feet in diameter the earth would be represented, proportionately, by a pea, Mars by a pinhead and Mercury by a mustard seed.

Australia is a country without orphans or an orphanage. Every waif is taken to a receiving house, where it is kept until a country home is found for it.

AN OCEAN AMBULANCE TO FIGHT DEATH

An ambulance ship to aid wounded and drowning men during a naval engagement is the latest addition to the United States navy, and Surgeon General Tryon and Secretary Herbert both believe they have figures and statements showing that such a craft would save the lives of 50 per cent. of the injured in a conflict who would probably die under present conditions of service. As the ambulance ship will have to be the target of shot and shell, those in charge will have to face death in order to save life, and rare courage will necessarily be the requisite for officers and attendants. The vessels utilized for the service will have to be swift steamers, of good capacity for sick room, and yet not so large as to prevent quick turning and rapid darting around among a fleet of vessels.

It is an unwritten law of every civilized nation that a wounded man and the man who aids him should both be protected, and it is calculated that the crew of the ambulance ship will be insured the same treatment accorded the Red Cross brigade. In naval conflicts a great number of men are blown into the water, and many uninjured men fall from the rigging into the ocean. It is a curious fact that three-fifths of the sailors in the different navies cannot swim, and therefore in many instances to drop from the rigging or to be accidentally forced overboard during a battle is sometimes as sure death as to stop a bullet. The men on board the ambulance ship will be looking for just such accidents all the time, and boats' crews will be dispatched if such aid is needed. During the last naval battle between the Austrian and Italian fleets 30 years ago, more than 400 men were drowned who could have easily been saved had an ambulance ship been in attendance.

It is proposed that the new ambulance ships should be fitted up like naval hospitals. The ships will be controlled by "a naval ambulance association for the treatment of sick and wounded at sea," and while the government would exercise a parental guardianship, the ambulance ship would really be a ship of mercy. The spar deck, where there is the greatest amount of air, will be devoted to the most serious cases, and additional wards will be located in the remaining decks of the vessel, while artificial ventilation will be produced by means of a steam spray, extracting apparatus, as well as a steam fan blast that will pump in an adequate supply of fresh air.

The percentage of recovery of injured men on board an ambulance ship properly equipped would be fully half greater than at present. In a man-of-war the sick ward is always located in the bow, although naval authorities have protested against it for years, for owing to the hawse holes this is a part of the ship most likely to be flooded in case of heavy weather. It is the "sea-sick" quarter of the ship also. Of course, it would be absolutely impossible for an ambulance ship to care for all the wounded during an engagement unless that engagement were simply between two vessels. The truth of this statement is shown by the fact that the ordinary battle ship, whose complement is 500 men, will have, within a few minutes of the time action begins, thirty men killed and 120 wounded. This is not a theory, but a careful calculation from facts that have been collected by officers of the navies of the world. For instance, in a conflict that took place off the Yalu river September 17, 1894, one shell that was fired at long range by the Chinese ship Tei Yuen killed seven men and wounded more than fifty aboard the Japanese flagship.

THE OCEAN AMBULANCE IN ACTION.

They, Too, Catch the Influenza.

Half the pianos of this country catch winter colds exactly as we do. They get hoarse, or have a cough, or a stiff note, or some similar complaint which cannot be cured by home remedies, but which requires tedious and expensive doctoring.

In order to prevent these avoidable ailments a piano should be kept in a moderately warm room, where the temperature is even, say 60 or 70 degrees, the year round—not cold one day and hot the next. The instrument should not, however, be too near the source of heat. It should be kept closed, and covered with a felt cloth when not in use, particularly in frosty weather.

Always place the piano against an inside wall, and a little out from it.

Counting Treasury Notes.

One of the most singular and interesting manufactories in this country is that where the United States treasury notes are made. The paper differs from any other, and it is kept under guard from the moment of its manufacture until the printed notes are issued from the treasury. These sheets of thin paper, both before and after printing, are counted and recounted by officials whose fingers, from years of practice, have become so deft that they fly over their work with the rapidity of lightning.

A visitor, watching a woman counting apparently endless heaps of notes, said, when the worker stopped to breathe:

"I should think that this monotonous work of counting, continued for years, would bring on a disease of the brain."

"It would," promptly replied the official, "if we thought of it. But while I counted those notes I was planning a holiday for my little boy. I repeat the numbers unconsciously, as a musician touches the keys of the piano. It is a habit. It was not always so," she said, laughing. "When I began the work I was terrified by its importance. The officers, pacing up and down, robbed me of self-control. I touched the sheets with shaking fingers. I was working for the Government! I went over the pile again and again, and even then made mistakes. I never make a mistake now. I have the habit of counting."

This little personal history has a useful hint in it for all of us.

There are certain duties, more or less laborious, which all well-bred men and women must perform because of what they owe to themselves and to society. The person must be kept clean; the dress in scrupulous order; the voice, laughter and gestures controlled; every other human being who is met, whether lord or laborer, should be treated with simple, sincere courtesy. At the table, on the street, in social life there must be conformity to certain minute laws which govern well-bred people.

The man or woman who tries to learn these things in middle life is hampered or paralyzed by ignorance and awkwardness. Jean Paul, with a great gospel of truth burning on his tongue, felt his boorish manner a heavy burden that kept him dumb.

There are countless American girls and boys who some day may have a message to deliver to the world. If they turn these lesser duties into habits now, they will cost them no more thought or anxiety in adult age than the counting of the heaped notes does the official in the mills.

Told His Story in Latin.

At the time of the peace jubilee, Dr. C. R. Porter, of Boston, returned to his office one day, and found the slate in the hall covered with Latin words and signed O. W. Holmes. He immediately got down his dictionary, and with much effort discovered that he had been to the peace jubilee, had soiled his boots so thoroughly with dirt that he did not like to go downtown in such a plight, and had stopped and asked Mr. Porter's servant for a footbrush that he might clean up his boots; and he had dignified this rather menial performance by writing it all out in Latin and leaving it on the slate.

Exactly Expressed It.

"How did you sleep, Fred?" asked a gentleman of a friend who was "roughing it" with him. "Well," said Fred, who was new to that amusement, "I've had a quantity of inferior sleep."

Wife—If I thought a thing was wicked, I'd die before I'd do it. Husband—So would I. Wife—Huh! I think smoking cigars is a wicked waste; an impious defilement, in fact. Husband—Then you should not smoke. Hand me a match, please.—New York Weekly.

A man should be as polite all the time as a candidate is just before election.

CASH! WHY? CASH!

We have discovered that we can save our customers money by doing away with our books entirely. Everybody wants to buy CHEAP and we know we can sell you enough CHEAPER to more than offset the inconvenience (if it is an inconvenience.) We desire to state briefly why we are changing to a STRICTLY CASH BASIS on HARDWARE and cash or notes for farm machinery, wagons and buggies.

1st. Nearly all the other stores in Auburn are doing a cash business and we have to carry more accounts than we can afford to do, at the prices we have been getting.

2d. It takes an extra man to keep books and we propose to do with one less man and cut the profit that much, thereby SAVING YOU MONEY.

3d. In a busy day we quite frequently forget to charge as afterwards we find out when men come to pay for goods and we have nothing charged to them,

4th. Some few people when they owe an account and have not enough money to pay it and buy the articles they need in our line will go some place else and buy and pay them the cash and still owe us on account.

5th. A few accounts get mixed as for instance J. Jones buys something and it is charged, and when we start out make our colleftions, we wonder whether it is John, Joseph Jacob or Jonathan Jones. We try all of them, get CURSED by most of them, and paid by none of them, sometimes.

6th. We meet all competition in price and now we propose to beat all competition by buying for cash and selling for cash,

7th. We are going to sell at such close margins that we will get the hardware trade because prices will tell.

Come and see us when you want anything in our line and we will explain our system more fully to you.

Very Respectfully Yours,

BROWN, CULBERTSON & BOLAND.

CAPTURED

New era

Several months ago a number of the cottages at Rome City were broken into and articles stolen, the furniture was scattered, the walls daubed, and windows broken. The articles taken in all amounted to several hundred dollars in value. The perpetrators managed to escape the vigilance of the officers for a long time and no clue could be obtained by which they could be captured or the articles found. Constable William Schroyer, under the direction of Ft Wayne parties, was directed to keep a close watch of the premises and search for the thieves. After several days he thought he had struck a clue and that a search warrant world disclose the hiding place of the stolen goods. Accordingly the necessary papers were obtained, a search made and the goods found at the residence of John White and a man named Potter. Both men were arrested and are now awaiting the action of the grand jury which is in session.

The heaviest loser by the thefts and depredations, is H. I. Park, of Kendallville, whose handsome cottage was completely ransacked of everything portable, and then left a perfect wreck with broken furniture and pictures and ruined carpets. The Ft. Wayne cottagers escaped comparatively light, but the vandals left proofs of their presence.

NEW SWINDLE

Laporte Argus.

A clever swindling trick was played recently at the Lake Shore depot. Just as the 10-48 train was pulling out, a young man carrying a valise came rushing down Michigan avenue in an excited manner. When he reached the platform, he accosted a well known citizen and explained that he had just found a wallet containing a large sum of money. He pulled the wallet out of his pocket, and showed it to the unsuspecting citizen. It appears on a casual glance, to be filled with bank bills, and the honest finder asked the citizen to take it in charge and advertise for an owner, but insisted on receiving a reward of $5 for himself. The citizen looked at the wallet and in the innocence of his heart, pulled out the $5 and handed it to the swindler. The young man boarded the train and the citizen made a break for the waiting room to examine the contents of the wallet. He discoverd it filled with brown paper dunning bills. He is a wiser man to-day, and the next swindler will find it a pretty tough job to work him. Had this occurred in Michigan City, it would not be a matter of surprise, but having taken place in LaPorte, it leads one to exclaim, What is the world coming to!

Armor Fraud.

Secretary of the Navy, Herbert is exposing the armor plate steal. About a year ago the COURIER called attention to this matter. The steel from which armor plate is made is worth about $20 a ton. It is hardened and rolled into plates thick enough for a ship's armor and then sold to the government at $600 a ton. And these steel men are also asking a new McKinley tariff to be given them "protecting against foreign cheap products. And they are likely to get all they ask of the incoming administration.

N. Y. Ballot.

An exchange says:—The official returns of the state of New York show that more than 100,000 blank and defective votes were cast in the late election. That is, about six and one-quarter percent of the votes—they numbered in all about 1,600,000—had their suffrage made inoperative through the commitment of some technical error. The total is a vast one and is significant commentary either on the intelligence of the people of the state or on the method of balloting in vogue. It is probably the latter that is at fault, but no notice is seen in any of the Empire state papers comenting on such a seemingly intolerable condition of voting.

China Wedding.

Friday January 1, was the 20th anneversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Ab Kelly at Waterloo and the occassion was one for a general and joyous reunion of their many friends, for they have a very wide acquaintance. The spacious rooms of the Locke Hotel were all thrown open including the parlors on both floors to receive their guests. The bride and groom of twenty years were stationed in the parlor on the second floor, and received their callers with as much grace as they could have done on the original occasion.

The rooms above and below were all occupied by ladies and gentlemen and and the warm greetings of old friends long separated was to be noticed on every hand. At the proper hour all were seated in the dining and adjacent rooms and so many were there that it took two ministers to say grace at the same time in order that none should be neglected. Then such a supper, it was delicate, dainty and abundant of course, for the host and hostess and the Locke Hotel have a wide reputation as caterers. And the guests were served in superb style.

It was perhaps the most notable social event in town has ever had and the crowd of happy visitors separated for their several homes, with many good wishes.

We should not omit the presents which were all of china or similar fashionable and costly ware, and as to abundance, this section has never seen the like.

To give an idea of this gathering we append the names of the guests:

THE UP-TO-DATE JEWELER.

What a Dreadful Man.

It is no doubt true, in a general way, that there is nothing new under the sun, and that everything has been done before, but there is a young man in Berkshire, England, who can certainly lay claim to the distinction of having acted entirely without precedent. He was engaged to be married, and, according to the custom of the country, the forthcoming wedding was announced in the parish church, and they who might have objections to it were invited to make them known. Everything went well at the first reading, but at the second the bridegroom-elect jumped from his seat and forbade his own bans. He then left the church, and the sequel of the story has not been told.—New York Recorder.

Went to Jail to Please His Wife.

Gustave Erickson of Sioux City, Ia., went to the penitentiary to please his wife. He was alleged to have married in Omaha several years ago, to have deserted his wife after a time, and going to Sioux City to have remarried without having previously secured a divorce from No. 1. He entered a plea of guilty to the charge of bigamy, and was sentenced to nine months' imprisonment. "I was really never married to more than one woman," he remarked as he followed the sheriff from the court room, "but my wife was determined to send me to prison, and I'd do anything to please her."

Children Should Sleep in Dark Rooms.

Children should be accustomed as soon as possible to sleep in a dark room. Unless they have learned to be afraid of it the darkness is soothing to the nerves and the rest is more profound and refreshing than when there is the unconscious stimulation of light. It is particularly desirable for children of a nervous temperament that light should be excluded, but it is most often the nervous, sensitive child whose imagination has been filled with fears of the shapes the dark may hide.—Ladies' Home Journal.

SOCIETY NEWS.

Item of Interest Concerning the Various Societies.

The G. A. R. and W. R. C. held joint installation services at the G. A. R. hall last night. There were quite a large number of invited friends present to witness the ceremonies. The last and best part of the evening's exercises were the refreshments. The bill of fare was not elaborate but was highly enjoyed by all. It consisted of oysters and crackers, and coffee and fried cakes. John Otto acted as installing officer of the G. A. R. The following are the officers:

Joseph Rainer	Commander
A. P. Green	Senior Vice
J. R. Nichols	Junior Vice
John Otto	Chaplain
Jacob Thomas	Quartermaster
Wm. H. McIntosh	Adjutant
Joe Cullers	Officer of Day
Henry Wolf	Officer of Guard
R. H. Weamer	Asst. Adj't.

The W. R. C. officers were installed by Mrs. Mary Clark. They are:

President	Mrs. Lydia Cowan
S. V. P.	Mary Thomas
G. V. P.	Lucia Link
Chaptain	Abigail Richards
Secretary	Mary C. Gordon
Treasurer	Louisa Prosser
Conductor	Anna Silver
Guard	Flora Myers
Asst. Con	Augusta Green
Asst. Guard	Ida Metcalf
Delegate to Deparment Convention	Mary E. Clark
Alternate	Mary Shomaker

BEN HUR.

On to-morrow, Wednesday evening the newly elected officers of the Ben Hur court will be installed. This Court meets on every other Wednesday night in the G. A. R. hall. This is a fraternal order, but its chief object is to give protection to those who depend upon the person holding a policy in case of death. Both ladies and gentlemen are eligible to membership in this court, a certificate of examination being required from the local and Supreme Medical Examiner. The benefits paid by this court are graded, according to age. The monthly payments are $1 each. The benefits are as follows: Ages 18 to 25 years, $2,500 and so on up to the age of 55 years, the benefits are only $500. The local court expenses are also very light, only $1.50 dues is collected, and 75 cents per capita tax. Any further information concerning this or any other order will be gladly furnished by any of the members.

Pension Board.

Dr. F. B. Wood says that the pension board will meet each Wednesday at the Glazier Hotel instead of the office of Dr. Nusbaum. Dr. Broughton, of Waterloo, is the new man to take the place of Dr. Nusbaum.

Heroic Deed.

By an act of heroism, Wallace Ryan, aged twenty-three years, gave his life for that of his seven-year-old brother and five-year-old sister, near Greensburg. Young Ryan, with his farm hand, was felling timber, being watched by the children. As a large oak tree was ready to fall the children were placed in what was thought to be a safe place, in the opposite direction from that in which the tree was expected to drop. After starting, however, by being sawed more one than the other, it turned in the direction of the children. Young Ryan realizing the danger, dropped the saw and ran to them some fifty feet away, and threw them aside, the tree barely missing them. In attempting to free himself, he slipped, the huge trunk crushing him into a mangled and lifeless mass.

TO CURE A COLD IN ONE DAY

Take Laxative Bromo Quinine Tablets. All druggists refund the money if it fails to cure. 25 cents. tf

—Dr. Baxter is paying special attention to Diseases of Children also Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Nervous system. tf

—WANTED:—Black Walnut logs and timber. Highest cost prices paid for same. Address Leah, Sanders & Egbert Co. Goshen, Ind. 40-50

—Scaly eruptions on the head, chapped hands and lips, cuts, bruises, scalds, burns are quickly cured by DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve. It is at present the article most used for piles, and it always cures them. Davenport the druggists —Republican papers ought to be honest enough to admit what they surely must know, that the "present tariff law" is a better producer of revenue than was the McKinley law. It was under the McKinley law that the accumulated surplus was swept away.

—The old lady was right when she said, the child might die if they waited for the doctor She saved the little one's life with a few doses of One Minute Cough Cure. She had used it for croup before. Davenport the druggist.

It is now reported the Robinson Crussoe's famous island, Juan Fernandez has disappeared. Its location in the Pacific is such that it is not seen often, and sea captains generally, believe it has been swallowed up by an earthquake.

—AGENTS WANTED:—Two gentlemen and one lady to canvass DeKalb county. Guaranteed salary of $40.00 a month. Address James W. Barnes, No. 6 Arcade, Fort Wayne, Ind.

—Soothing, and not irritating, strengthening, and not weakening, small but effective—such are the qualities of DeWitt's Little Early Risers, the famous little pills. Davenport the druggists.

—I love her merry, roguish eye,
Her cheek, fair as the rose;
In fact, all I could specify
I like, except her nose.

—To cure all old sores, to heal an indolent ulcer, or to speedily cure piles, you need simply apply DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve according to directions. Its magic-like action will surprise you Davenport the druggists.

Thursday's Daily.

—Geo. Foster and Burton Brown remembered the COURIER to-day in good shape.

—Straight Loans on Business property in Auburn, long time, $1000 up, at 6 per cent by Walter C. Hartman, Real Estate Dealer.

—Robt. Showers was a caller early this morning and made his annual payment on the COURIER by leaving a half dozen brooms. They are just as acceptable to us as the cash, as we need them about the office.

—The length of life may be increased by lessening its dangers. The majority of people die from lung troubles. These may be averted by promptly using One Minute Cough Cure, Davenport the druggist.

—Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Ford entertained a number of young people last evening. The evening was spent in Instrumental music, singing and recitations, after which a nice supper was served in two courses. The occasion was an enjoyable one and will long be remembered by those present.

The old way of delivering messages by post-boys compared with the modern elephone, illustrates the old tedious methods of "breaking" colds compared with their almost instantaneous cure by One Minute Cough Cure. Davenport the Druggist.

—Bucklen's Arnica Salve.—The best salve in the world for cuts, bruises, sores, ulcers, salt rheum, fever sores tetter, chapped hands, chilblains, corns and all skin eruptions, and positively cures piles or no pay repuired. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by Robbins & McCord. tf —"Excuse me," observed the man in spectacles "but I am a surgeon, and that is not where the liver is." "Never you mind where his liver is," retorted the other. "If it was in his big toe or his left ear DeWitt's Little Early Risers would reach it and shake it for him. On that you can bet your gig-lamps." Davenport the druggists.

—Several of those Michigan churches we spoke of some weeks ago, have been actually sold for taxes. One man at Ishpeming, bid in four of them, the M. E., Presbyterian, Baptist and Episcopalian. They do not have to pay general taxes, but taxes for certain city improvements, such as sewers, and the like.

—Since our last report marriage licenses has been issued as follows: Charles Reinoehl to Sylverenia Bickel Clarence O. Berry to Plume Stafford, Geo. W. Rakestraw to Elberta Grogg, Frank C. Schrader to Clara Dell Neidie Daniel Ragan to Katie Rittenhouse, Geo. S. Krontz to Mollie Berry, Frank Emerick to Myrtle Gunsenhouser, and Dexter Fausett to Alice May Schultz.

—The west third of Kansas, 39 counties has proven a failure as far as farming goes, and for a few years the people have been moving out, till now, some counties have only a few hundred people to pay for keeping up county expenses. One man was tried for murder and they could not get a jury to try the case, and he went free. All had "formed an opinion" and when the eligible list had all been "polled," they had to let the murderer go. Now, it is likely these 39 counties will be consolidated into less than a dozen, though their total area is almost equal to that of Indiana.

Saturday's Daily.

—Commissioner-elect, Shoemaker was in town to-day on business.

Allene Garwood has returned from From Fort Wayne where she spent the holidays with friends.

—Mrs. R. Sawvel is suffering from a fall she sustained Thursday. It causes her considerable annoyance and pain.

—Miss Grace VanAuken daughter of Wm E. Van Auken of Fremont, Ind., is spending the holidays among relatives here.

—Thursday's Anderson Herald says: Eugene Trout, one of the leading business men of Auburn, was in town yesterday on business.

J. E. Griffin, a now subscriber at Gloyd, in Allen county, is the fourth man in the COURIER cash class of 1897. That is the way to start the year.

—J. W. Jackman, of Waterloo, was here this week bringing word of the death of old Mrs. Aldrich. Mrs. Jackman's mother who died many years ago, at the age of 76 was brought up by Mrs. Aldrich.

—John Lochner went to Fort Wayne to-day to attend the funeral of his brother Henry's boy. He drove across the country by way of the old home, and Leo. His sister Mrs. S. S. Potter went with him.

Steuben Republican:—Charles Putnam, at Robinson & Co's. store, has recently made a piece of furniture out of California red wood for H. K. Scott. The wood is very difficult to work, but in the hands of so good a mechanic, has been formed into a desk nice enough for a place in the White House at Washington.

—"Adam was the first man" but Wm. H. McIntosh is the first man to pay the coming year on the COURIER. He came in this forenoon and is now paid up to 98. That's business. Later on Joseph Witt came in, and then J. P. Cochran made the third one on 1897's list of honor. And Nathan Johnson was the third.

—MARRIED:—January 1, 1897, at the residence of Richard Grubb on South Jackson street, Auburn, Ind. Mr. Byron Blackburn to Miss Amanda Shepley, Rev. J. W. Stringfellow officiating. They will make their future home on the old Blackburn farm two miles east of New Haven in Allen Co.

—Among those who attended the New Years ball at Garrett were Frank Rose and wife, Jenk Eldridge and wife, Wash Askew and wife, John Crimmens and Miss Myra Watson, C. B. Weaver and Carrie Turner, Harry Trentman and Miss Rose, Ed. Little and Miss Trentman and Messrs U. S. Raut and Geo. Ralston.

Monday's Daily.

—The Westminster girls start back to school to-day. They have had two weeks of vacation most pleasantly spent.

—Pete Shull brought a grist to mill here to-day, and had four big horses for a team. The roads were horrible.

John Buss has been on the sick list for the past week, but is now able to be at work again.

—Byron Grube is down to-day from Flint. There is some work in court, in some estate matters.

—Mrs. Flint, who has been visiting her parents Mr. and Mrs. James Griswold returned to-day to her home at Lansing, Mich.

—Uncle Benj. Lawhead died at his home in Jackson township, Jan. 1. The funeral will be at the house to-day, Jan. 4, at 10 a. m. and interment in Evergreen.

—The year 1897 seems likely to prove a remarkable year. It has rained every day and every night of the year. We do not recall any of its predecessors that can say as much.

—B. C. Zeigler and family started south to-day, to spend the winter in Florida. They go for the health of their little boy in the belief that a change of climate and air will benefit him. They will probably return about April.

—Steuben Republican:—The barn on the Lewis Stealy farm near Fox lake was built during the summer of 1846, and white wood siding put on the building at that time is still doing service although it has never been treated to a coat of paint. The lumber was sawed at a mill on the farm now owned by Albert W. Long, two miles south of Angola.

Memory is a little treacherous now and then, and causes one to forget some things worth remembering, unless one has an experience like that which came to Mr. D. E. East, Maffatt's Creek, Va., who says "I had been suffering for years with a torpid liver and found no relief until I took Simmons Liver Regulator when I was entirely relieved of my troubles. I never intend being without Simmons Liver Regulator."

40 YEARS THE STANDARD.

Tuesday's Daily.

—The little boy of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Funk is quite sick.

—Mrs. C. M. Brown went up to Hamilton to-day to attend the funeral of her grandfather.

Cash for scrap Iron, Auburn Foundry & Machine Works. 3tf —Attorney Gengler of Garrett was here yesterday and made us a good contribution. He had some law work at court besides.

—Ten! Ten! Ten! lively coons at the Opera House Monday night. Seats on sale at Davenpoet's Friday morning. Prices 15, 25 and 35.

—Dr. Baxter was called out into Jackson township last evening in spite of the bad roads, and as a result he reports a 9-lb boy at the home of Joseph Zollars out there.

—Mrs. Jas Farmer and children left over the Lake Shore last Saturday for Bluffton where they will make their future home, Mr. Farmer having had a good position there the past year.

—Mr. and Mrs. Steves returned yesterday from Corunna, where they had been to attend the funeral of Miss Marcia Gray of whose death we made mention last week. The funeral was at Kendallville.

—Miss Estella Merica took the early B. & O. train yesterday morning for Chicago to continue her studies at the conservatory of music. She is also taking the liteary work of the University of Chicago.

—Absolutely pure, perfectly harmless, and invariably reliable are the qualities of One Minute Cough Cure. It never fails in colds, croup and lung troubles. Children like it because it is pleasant to take and it helps them. Davenport the druggists.

—The commissioners of Allen county have made the mistake of their lives in buying the gravel roads and making them free. Those roads are nearly as bad now as where there has been no gravel. It seems to be a fact that public officers do not look after and manage public affairs nearly so well as officers of a corporation or company do.

—For a pain in the chest a piece of flannel dampened with Chamberlain's Pain Balm and bound on over the seat of pain and another on the back between the shoulders, will afford prompt relief. This is especially valuable in cases where the pain is caused by a cold and there is a tendency towards pneumonia. For sale by Davenport the Druggist.

Wednesday's Daily.

—Gen. Blair was in town today on some legal business, we suppose.

—Mrs. Geo. Metzger and daughter, of Fairfield were callers this week.

—John W. Tarney, of Newville, is on hand with his New Year's contribution as usual.

—Daniel Zook is one of the latest of our new subscribers on the WEEKLY. And still there is room.

—The office of the Albion Democrat caught fire last Friday night and was damaged to the extent of $65.

—Senator Nusbaum is now located at the Grand Hotel at Indianapolis and orders the DAILY COURIER forwarded to him.

—DWELLING on South Van Buren St. 8 rooms, barn, good location, worth $1200, for sale at a great sacrifice, on easy terms, by —Mrs Dr. Sparling is still very sick, though slightly improving. Her many friends are anxiously watching and hoping for her speedy recovery.

W. C. HARTMAN,
REAL ESTATE DEALER.

—T. O. Doremus, yard-master at Jackson, Mich., and well known all along the line, fell from the local engine this morning and had one leg amputated.

—A man in Kendallville, it is reported, sold his body some years ago to Dr. Gilbert for $15. Now he is dead, and it is said the body will be sent to the Ft. Wayne medical College.

—The B. & O. is going to build a branch from Nappanee to South Bend and then lease a line to Benton Harbor, thus securing a branch road to Lake Michigan and tapping the Michigan fruit belt.

—Chicago City Council has passed an ordinance to fine any manager of any theater, for allowing ladies to wear hats. It is $10. for each offense by each lady in the house.

Mrs. Swineford slipped on the sidewalks as she was going to church Sunday evening and hurt herself considerably requiring temporary asilstance of a physician. She is better now and it is hoped there will be no serious results.

—John Wanamaker, the pious fraud who raised the $40,000 campaign fund that by its corrupt use made Harrison president, has been defeated for U. S. Senator by Penrose, the man backed by Senator Quay. One of Wanamaker's workers has been arrested for offering a bribe to a member of the legislature. Pennsylvania politics shows up in grand style.

—Clarence Cook, city editor of the Fort Wayne Sentinel, lost his right hand and a portion of the arm by being run over by an electric car Sunday evening. Mr. Cook saw the car approaching and he signaled it to stop. He was standing about six feet from the track. The lacings of one of his shoes had become unfastened and as the car came up and he stepped toward it he tripped on the shoe lacing and fell forward. His right arm extended onto the track and the wheels of the car run over it crushing it in a fearful shape around the wrist.

—Will T. Norris, of Albion, Mich., was in the city this morning and made the COURIER a brief call. Mr. Norris is in the newspaper business at Albion.

—Senator Brice and his capitatists have bought the "Mackinaw" railroad that crosses the Wabash road between here and Detroit. It was bid in at a million.

—Christian Welch who lives on South Jackson street fell Sunday night and broke a rib. He has been suffering much pain but is now improving. Dr. Sparling is treating him.

—The celebrated Allen's Colored Jubilee Singers will appear at Henry's Opera House next Monday night. People who heard this company at the Hicksville fair a few years ago say they are the finest company on the road. They no doubt will be greeted with a large audience Monday night.

—The "letter chain" project has been revised by a Crawfordsville man, who has written to various parties asking them to contribute to a poor, crippled boy, who desires medical treatment, and write four letters to their friends asking them to do likewise. The chain is expected to stop by March 1st, as by that time it is thought that enough will be raised to procure the necessary treatment. One cent is a small amount, but if every one receiving a letter would contribute the amount and write four letters, the number of cents contributed in a limited time would be quite large as the contributors would increase geometrically.

To Subscribers.

Subscribers to the WEEKLY are again urged to try and keep closer up in their dues. If you cannot send in all that is due, send a part, if it is but $1. It will help us and reduce your debt that much. But we are aware that many can pay, but are careless. Don't wait, but bring it or send, and it will be greatly appreciated.

Chop Grinding.

I am now ready to grind chop feed, fresh cob and oats, or corn and oats, as required by customers. Grinding done on Tuesdays and Fridays. Call on me at my home on those days, and have your work done.

WM. G. BOREN.

CONCORD.

Lewis Smith, of Loudonville, Ohio, is here spending his vacation with his many friends.

Mrs. Amanda Rowe has a sister visiting her from Tiffin Ohio.

Sherman Ricketts has failed to find his pocket-book. It continued $7.00.

F. A. Jenkins and wife entertained relatives on New Years.

Freddie Elson did not have the diphtheria as reported.

Mrs. G. W. Wade is quite sick at this writing.

ST. JOE.

O. H. Widney was at Wolcotville and Ashley last Tuesday and Wednesday looking after the interest of some pension claims he has in that vicinity.

M. E. Olds and family returned from their Michigan trip last Thursday.

Miss Addie Widney returned from Chicago Friday

Sam Tustason is home from Chicago to attend the funeral of his sister.

Frank Bowman and Henry Hathaway returned to Chicago Saturday night to enter again upon their studies after the holiday vacation.

G. W. Woodcox was in Auburn on Friday on business connected with the inquest held there on Thursday.

Mrs. Clyde Woodcox, Mrs. Geo. Ridgeway and Mrs. Bert Jackson, of Auburn Junction, H. R. Culbertson and wife, Auburn, J. W. Boyle and wife of Butler, attended the funeral of Mrs. John Woodcox on Saturday.

The following young ladies acted as pall-bearers at the funeral. Miss Addie Widney, Miss Ida Stafford, Miss Cora Dilley, Miss Bertha and Hattie Hollabaugh and Miss Millie Hamilton.

We hear of a farmer hereabouts who objects to having some of his buildings measured when he is not around.

All the business houses including the two saw mills were closed up during the time of Mrs. Wilcox's funeral Saturday, and although the day was extremely disagreeable and stormy the funeral was one of the largest St Joe has ever seen. The church (Lutheran) having a seating capacity of something like 500 was packed almost to suffocation with a good many outside. This as only another indication of the high esteem in which the deceased and her family are held by the people of this vicinity. The funeral exercises were conducted by the Rev. Dunlap of the Lutheran church, assisted by Evans of the M. P. church. The singing which was in charge of the choir of the above church, was of the very best, and all who heard it, speak of it with highest praise. The casket a lovely one was profusely decorated as was the altar with beautiful flowers and the remains were laid at rest in the (what ought to be) beautiful St Joe cemetery on the banks of the river south of town.

The family of the deceased and especially the aged grandfather and grandmother have the heartfelt sympathy of the entire community.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

PURELY VEGETABLE.

The cheapest, purest and best family medicine in the world! An effectual specific for all diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Spleen. Regulates the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common, as a bad breath; and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your appetite, complexion and general health.

CONSTIPATION

should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact, nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache, for the relief of which take Simmons Liver Regulator.

STATE OF INDIANA } SS.
DEKALB COUNTY.

Before me, the undersigned, a Notary Public in and for said County and State, personally appeared A. C. Robbins, Cashier of the Farmers Bank, who, on his oath, says the foregoing is a true and correct statement of the condition of said Bank.

A. C. ROBBINS, Cashier.

Attest: ALBERT ROBBINS, Prest.

Subscribed and sworn to this 2d of January, 1897

T. H. SPROTT, Notary Public.

LIQUOR ORDINANCE.

An Ordinance to Regulate the Sale of Liquors by the Quart and the Running of Quart Shop Saloons Within the Limits of the Incorporated Town of Auburn.

Be it ordained by the Incorporated Town of Auburn, DeKalb County, in the State of Indiana:

Sec. 1. That no person, company or corporation shall, within the limits of said town, sell intoxicating liquor, spiritons, vinous or malt, either or all of them, by the quart (or in other words run a saloon known as a quart shop) without first having procured a license from the said Incorporated Town of Auburn, granting the privilege to sell said liquor and to run said quart shop saloon.

Sec. 2 Any person, company or corporation desiring to sell liquor and to run a quart saloon in the manner provided in the preceding section, shall, before entering upon said business pay to the treasurer of said Incorporated Town of Auburn, a license fee, in the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars, for said privilege to sell said liquor and to run said quart shop saloon for each and every year said liquor is so sold and saloon so run.

Sec 3. Upon the payment of the license fee as is provided in sections two (2) of this ordinance, the treasurer of said town shall issue to said person, company or corporation a receipt showing that said license fee has been paid and upon the presentation of said receipt to the Town Clerk of said town, he shall issue to said person, company, corporation a license granting the privilege by said town, through its officers, to sell said liquor and to conduct said quart shop saloon as is in this ordinance provided.

Sec 4. Any person violating any of the provisions of this ordinance, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined in any sum not less than ten dollars nor more than one hundred dollars.

Sec. 5. This ordinance shall be in force and effect from and after its second publication in the AUBURN COURIER, a weekly newspaper printed and published in said town of Auburn.

In witness of the passage of the above ordinance, the president of said Board of Trustees has hereunto set his hand and caused to be attached hereto the corporate seal of said town this 4th day of January, 1897.

L. J. MILLER, Pres. Board.

Attest: MILO D. HUSSELMAN, Town Clerk.

Notice of Administration.

Notice is hereby given, that the undersigned has been appointed by the clerk of the DeKalb Circuit Court, of the State of Indiana, administrator of the estate of Thomas Chandler deceased, late of said county.

Said estate is supposed to be solvent.

WILLIAM H. LEAS,

According to a Swiss contemporary an engineer named Tauxe has just invented a new process of tempering steel by electricity which not only makes the steel much harder but at the same time gives it the proper elasticity; that is, it is not brittle like steel made very hard by the usual process.

Librarians are at work cataloguing the Indian library of the British India office, and when finished the library will be the most complete for oriental scholars probably in the world. There are now seven miles of book shelves, and when the new floor is complete there will be nearly fifteen miles of shelving.

A non-poisonous match has been devised by a French chemist, potassium permanganate and amyl acetate being among the inoffensive ingredients. The matches are made easily and without danger, ignite readily, and are not liable to explosion when stored in quantity, and have an odor said to be positively agreeable.

There are many authenticated examples of increased power of mind during sleep. One of the best known is that in which the great naturalist Agassiz successfully reconstructed from certain remains the skeleton of a fossil fish, at which he had been working unsuccessfully in his waking moments for several hours.

A recent issue of L'Energie Electrique gives the following mixture for cleaning the parts of machinery, which it states attacks the hardest crust of hardened oil: Boil the parts for three minutes in a solution of 150 parts of sodium carbonate and 15 parts of caustic in soda in 1,000 of water, after which rinse and dry the metal.

A statistician who has been interesting himself in the population of the earth says that 32,214,000 annually; that is, an average of 98,840 a day, 4,010 an hour and 67 a minute. The annual number of births, on the other hand, is estimated at 36,792,000, an average of 100,800 a day, 4,200 an hour and 70 a minute, so that the population is increasing at the rate of three to the minute.

A sensational discovery has been made by the appeals and transfers committee of the city council of Cumberland, Md., which involves the taxation of over $70,000 worth of property in South Cumberland. It appears that a boundary stone had been moved in, and for some years property owners have been evading taxation. The city engineer has ascertained the true line and the property above named has been included in the city limits.

A druggist of Winamac, Ind., received another order the other day from President Cleveland for three boxes of fish-hooks for bass fishing in the sea. With the order is a letter from the president stating that "the last ordered had been received and used by himself and Secretary Thurber with good results." This is the third order for fishing tackle that the druggist has received from the president, and he is proud of his ability to please.

A curious instance of the red-tapeism of the English postoffice comes from Norfolk. A letter carrier, with a long country round, recently purchased a tricycle, which enabled him to get over his district with greater ease to himself and a more convenient promptness to the public. In some way or other the department became aware of this fact and sent down an official censure to him for having dared to buy his machine without having received permission from headquarters.

At a recent meeting of the Paris Academy of Medicine M. Gulnkoff stated that he had successfully photographed the interior of the eye. The advantages of this method are important, since it enables actual pictures of the disease of the retina to be secured and compared from time to time to determine whether disease processes of the eye progress or not. The picture is made in two seconds. The apparatus can thus serve as an ophthalmoscope, and any number of persons can thus observe the results.

The Orange Free State is very nearly as large as England and just as large as the state of New York. It lies from 4,000 to 5,000 feet above the sea, and is mostly level, with some low ranges of hills. The surface is bare of wood, except in a few sheltered spots along the streams, but is well covered with herbage. The air is pure and bracing, much like that of Colorado or Wyoming. There are, happily, no blizzards, but violent thunder-storms are not uncommon and the hail-stones which fall during such storms sometimes kill the smaller animals, and even men.

When one is lying down the heart makes about ten strokes less a minute than when one is upright. That means a saving of 600 strokes per hour, or about 5,000 heart beats during the eight hours spent in bed. The heart pumps six ounces of blood with each beat. It therefore lifts 30,000 ounces less of blood in a night of eight hours spent in bed than when one is in an upright position. The blood flows just so much the more slowly through the veins when one is lying down, therefore one has to use extra coverings to supply the warmth usually furnished by circulation.

The statistics of crime in France are several years in arrears; those relating to 1893 were published about a month ago. They are complete and special attention has been paid to the offenses against the established rules of society by French women. Criminologists may be interested to know that of 4,269 accused persons in 1893 in France, 3,672 were males and 596 were females, a proportion of six to one. In other words, women were responsible for 14 per cent of the crimes committed, which, according to the statistics, is a diminution since the period of 1871-76, when the percentage was 17.

In pursuance of a traditional custom of the court of Spain, a magnificent royal coach, drawn by six horses, accompanied by grooms and outriders in full livery, was recently driven to the palace on the Castellana, occupied by the Duke of Hijar. Within the coach were a functionary of the royal palace and a royal valet who held on a rich silver platter the clothing worn by the young king, Alfonso XIII. on the last Epiphany Day. The privilege of possessing this clothing and of sitting at the king's table on that day was granted in 1431 to Don Rodrigo de Villandranda, who saved Juan XI. at Toledo from falling into the hands of the prince royal, Don Enrico, who had conspired with the grandees of Castile to assassinate him.

Apropos of the new census of London a writer says: "The suburban movement has in recent years become unfashionable. Property has depreciated in value in suburbs that were 'smart' but a few years ago, and the tendency of the richer folk is to return to the squares and flats of inner London. But the people who decree whether a particular mode of life shall be fashionable or the reverse are a very small fraction of the whole, and their movements have no appreciable effect upon the aggregate. If the 'upper classes' are migrating back from the suburbs to town the middle and working classes are flowing out in an infinitely broader stream. The large suburban villa is pulled down and its garden dug up to make room for the rows of little houses which accommodate the clerk and the workingman."

There is a group of islands to the south of New Zealand called the Sisters, or Seven Sisters, which are reputed to be subject to a practically constant rainfall. The same may be said of the islands and mainland of Terra del Fuego, saving for the difference that the rain often takes the form of sleet and snow. On a line running around the world from four to eight or nine degrees there are patches over which rain seldom ceases to fall. This is called the "zone of constant precipitation," but at the same time there are several localities along it with very little rainfall. Thus, for instance, while the town of Panama has a six months' dry season and a very fine wet one, Colon, on the other side of the isthmus, about thirty-seven miles away, is deluged with rain during the wet season.

As to Naturalization.

Several weeks ago the Youth's Companion copied from a Chicago paper an account of the naturalization of an Italian in that city, to whom Judge Burke gave his papers, despite the fact that he knew no English, but answered every question put to him by repeating the name "McKinley."

The paper which published the story has since added to its original account a statement that Judge Burke in this case required his questions to be put again through an interpreter to the Italian in his own language, and granted the papers only after he had in this way obtained satisfactory answers.

In the light if this explanation it is clear that the judge was not at fault. He performed his whole duty under the law. Whatever criticism may be passed upon the incident must be directed against the law, and not against the judge.

It remains true, however, that the system is wrong which permits a man who does not understand a word of English to have just the same voice as a native American citizen in determining the policy of our Government and electing its officers. There is need not only of thoroughly enforcing the laws in this matter as they stand, but of strengthening them.

Horseflesh as Food.

Hippophagy—or, to speak less euphemistically, the habit of eating horseflesh—is spreading on the continent. While savage man is known to have sated his ravenous hunger with horseflesh or any other variety of flesh he could find, the modern origin of this peculiar taste dates from the siege of Paris, during the Franco-Prussian war, when the populace were compelled from dire necessity to sacrifice this noble quadruped to sustain life.

Many acquired a taste for the meat, and the demand for it did not cease with the capitulation of the city. Horseflesh, too, is much cheaper than beef. Beef in Paris is worth about tenpence a pound, while horseflesh can be had for about fourpence a pound.

Once planted in Paris, the habit spread to other continental cities, especially Berlin, where horseflesh is now consumed in considerable quantities by the poorer classes, and the medical authorities and humanitarians are raising their voices against what they justly consider a somewhat barbarous and dangerous custom.

Billy Wasn't Fit.

LORE OF THE WEDDING RING.

SOME curious information will be unearthed by anyone who undertakes to explore the history of the wedding ring. For instance, among the Anglo-Saxons the bridegroom gave a pledge, or "wed," at the betrothal ceremony. This "wed" included a ring, which was placed on the maiden's right hand, where it remained until, at the marriage, it was transferred to the left. English women at one time wore the wedding ring on the thumb; many portraits of ladies in Queen Elizabeth's days are so depicted. In the reign of George III. brides usually removed the ring from its proper abiding place to the thumb as soon as the ceremony was over. In Spain the gift of a ring is looked upon as a promise of marriage, and is considered sufficient proof for a maiden to claim her husband. It is a custom to pass little pieces of bride's cake through the wedding ring, and those to whom these pieces are given place them under their pillows at night to dream of their lovers. These "dreamers," as they are called, should be drawn nine times through the ring. Many brides, however, are so superstitious that neither for that purpose, nor at any other time, will they take the ring off their finger after it has once been placed there.

Novelties in Pin Cushions.

A pincushion always seems to fill a want no matter where it goes. One novel design has a top made of cotton and covered with brown velvet to represent a cattail. The leaves are of crinoline, covered with satin, and the stem is of coarse wire, also covered with ribbon. The leaves can be bought for a penny or two at any store and will cost less than ribbon for covering pasteboard or other stiffening. Another odd little trifle is the pea pod pincushion. It is 4½ inches long by 1½ in the widest place and is covered with bright green satin drawn smoothly over pea pod shaped pieces of cardboard. The cushion proper, which stuffs out the bursting pod, is also covered with green satin and has peas painted down the center. Loops of green baby ribbon are fastened at the stem end. A coal scuttle pincushion is made of copper colored velvet. Inside it is a black satin cushion for pins. Then comes a cigar pincushion of giant size. This should be covered with brown satin of the right shade and must be tied round and suspended by yellow china ribbon of narrow width.

CATTAIL PINCUSHION.

Care of the Hair in Youth.

When girls are young it is far more important that care should be used in dressing their hair than when they have attained the years that are supposed to bring discretion. Hasty combing often breaks the hair, making it rough and uneven. When it becomes matted brush out as much of the tangle as possible, and with the fingers carefully separate the hair into strands before using the comb. It is a mistake to think that girls' hair should be cut often in order to make it grow thick. It makes the hair coarser, but not thicker. Weak, thin hair is a sign of imperfect health, and its existence should set a mother to a careful examination of her growing girl. She is not getting proper food, is not sleeping enough, or in some way her normal vitality is not being kept up. It is also a mistake to wash the hair too often, as it makes it dry and brittle. One of the best cleansers and strengtheners for thin hair with a tendency to fall out is rosemary tea. All preparations for the purpose, however, should be used with the utmost care to the end that no injury be done to either the hair or scalp.

Smart Women of the Time.

No word which is applied to women is so often misused as "smart." It is taken to mean almost anything from a tricky, scheming woman to one who is dressed in becoming fashionable style. "There is no very perceptible outward and visible sign about the smart woman," says an English periodical, "except the general impression which diffuses of being well groomed without and within. Actual beauty does not enter into debate. She is up to date and up to snuff, and that is just what society loves and cherishes in its bosom. Her toilets, however simple, are irreproachable as to style and fit. The smart woman will devastate a home with as much equanimity as though she were chasing cats from the tiles. Her only love is the reflection of her own face, the echo of her own ambitions. If a flirtation means advancement she will go in for it tooth and nail, and if it falls short of her expectations she will drop it like a roasted chestnut."

Booming a Society Bud.

Not infrequently it happens that when a girl is on the eve of making her fashionable debut members of the family indulge in such a vast amount of preliminary puffing that they overshoot the mark. Then immediately after her first appearance, when she comes down to receive a morning caller, the latter is appealed to in a whisper: "Isn't she lovely?" Then dear mamma falls upon her child and there is an audible osculation, resembling the sound that is produced by the big brother accidentally treading on the pet kitten. One sister whispers to the old friend of the family, summoned to welcome the bud from school: "Did you ever see such eyes, such dimples, and her figure, isn't it ravishingly beautiful?" And so it goes. Miss Bud, fed upon the intoxicating fumes of family adoration, wonders when she goes to the first assembly ball that the men don't cripple one another in the mad rush to claim dances, and when many of the young gentlemen who habitually haunt the house, are visibly absorbed in other buds, the sparrow-on-the-housetop feeling comes over her.

For Toilet Things and Medicine.

Medicine bottles and toilet things have a way of collecting in obtrusive and inconvenient array on the washstand. A neat little home-made cabinet obviates this. It is made out of three empty cigar boxes used on the plan of a bracket. Take three boxes and strip them of all labels by soaking them in boiling water. The lids you will not want. When the boxes are clean, set them aside to dry, and when in a fit state paint them with ebony enamel or green water stain, or, if you like, size them first and follow on with a coating of walnut or mahogany satin. The color chosen should correspond, if possible, with the fitments of the room. Apply two coatings of paint, letting one dry before putting on the next. Where the boxes are joined it is unnecessary to apply any color whatever, and, indeed, the glue will adhere all the better if there is none. Nothing can be simpler than the arrangement of the cabinet, as the boxes require no cutting and no shelves. All you have to do when you have prepared them is to glue one box endwise between the other two, which are fixed upright. These two end boxes should exactly accord in size. The center one may be larger or not, just as you choose. The easiest way of fixing little curtains upon the boxes is to gather the silk upon three bands of tape, securing these bands to the wood with tiny gilt pins. Possibly you may have some soft silk by you which will answer the purpose; otherwise get three-quarters of a yard. Measure it off accurately before cutting it, taking the height and width of your boxes and allowing as much fullness as possible.—Chicago Chronicle.

Fad for Cut Glass.

Cut glass comes next to gold and silver (indeed, at present it rather ranks above the latter metal) in value for wedding gifts. Among the presents recently received by the daughter of a ten times millionaire and the prospective bride of an equally rich man was a barrel of cut glass, and it was reckoned as worthy a place among the best of the magnificent gifts. The cutting on one beautiful little vinaigrette in this ware is unusually rich and very artistic. The rosettes on the sides have centers that alone are worth examining, and the rest of the surface is cross hatched. The fineness of the cutting is remarkable. The stopper and neck are of gold, the former being exquisitely chased.

Notes of All Sorts.

Moire effects appear in silk, wool and velvet.

The smaller dress skirts bring trimmings in their wake.

All sorts of collars, pelerines and small shoulder capes of fur are worn.

Attractive toilet sets come in canary yellow opaque glass set in silver.

The tiny empire fan dangling from a chain puts the finishing touch on an evening toilet.

Among modern table requisites are high chocolate cups, of peculiar shape and decorated rococo style.

The new photograph frames in Venetian glass afford exquisite effects in delicately tinted flowers and foliage.

No one style of hair-dressing prevails, but the pompadour effect in front and a soft knot at the back seems to lead.

Silver tableware this season is characterized by elegance of form, chaste ornamentation and skillful workmanship.

Silver-plated pudding and pie dishes are standard articles in modern homes. The same may be said for baking cups in Dresden ware.

The latest novelty in wedding cake boxes takes the shape of a heart and is of silver, with the combined monograms of bride and bridegroom in gold letters.

THE BOOMING CANNON

RECITALS OF CAMP AND BATTLE INCIDENTS.

Survivors of the Rebellion Relate Many Amusing and Startling Incidents of Marches, Camp Life, Foraging Experiences and Battle Scenes.

Circled by Forts.

When the war cloud broke upon the country the position of the national capital was precarious in the extreme. The same stream that washed its wharves touched the opposite shore of an enemy's country, and in the State that surrounded it on the north the sentiment of the people could scarcely be called sympathetic with the government at Washington. So it was not surprising that the authorities at the home of the nation set about to protect it from invasion and violation. In a surprisingly short time a strong cordon of forts and batteries well equipped with ordnance and garrisoned by eager and willing men extended in a defiant circle around the city. It would take volumes to describe the difficulties that were overcome to establish this belt of protection, but these were largely of a material character, and were met in a great degree by the natural advantages of the surrounding country, which offered so many excellent points for fortification and embattlement.

On either side of the river, both in Virginia and Maryland, the hills presented a continuation of heights which commanded the territory lying beyond, and these were quickly taken advantage of by the engineer department of the United States army. Strong embankments were thrown up, powerful guns were placed in position, and in order to give the widest range for execution forests were leveled and in some instances houses and barns removed, so that the enemy would have no chance to come upon the city unawares. As the forts were erected and provided with their armament they were as quickly garrisoned by the troops that poured into Washington from the North, and many of the bravest and best of the soldiers who fought for the perpetuity of the government saw their first service in the forts around Washington.

By the first of January, 1862, the entire defensive line, mounting about 500 guns, was in an advanced condition, although not completed. It was not, indeed, until the summer of 1864 that they were in anything like a finished shape. When completed the works comprised sixty-two forts with forty-four supporting batteries, the whole having an armament of over 1,000 guns and requiring 16,000 men to properly arm them. The first suggestion to erect fortifications was made early in May, 1861, by Gen. Mansfield, who was then in command of the troops in this city, and he indicated Arlington Heights as the best place to begin. By the 24th of that month Forts Ellsworth, Runyon, Albany and Corcoran were established for the special purpose of the protection to the approaches of the bridges and ferries on the Potomac. It was not until the first battle of Bull Run had been fought, however, that a systematic plan of defense was thought of. After the battle of Bull Run the cluster of commanding heights four miles west of Alexandria and six miles from Washington were occupied by the Confederates, but in October of that year the hills were again takes possession of and fortified by the Union troops. The system of works constituting what are called the defenses of Washington were divided into four groups: First, those south of the Potomac, commencing with Fort Willard, below Alexandria, and terminating with Fort Smith, opposite Georgetown, comprising twenty-nine forts and eleven supporting batteries; second, Forts Ethan Allen and Marcy at the Virginia end of the Chain bridge, with their five batteries for field guns; third, those north of the Potomac and between that river and the Anacostia, commencing with Fort Sumner and terminating with Fort Lincoln, comprising nineteen forts, four batteries armed with heavy guns and twenty-three batteries of field guns; fourth, those south of the Anacostia, commencing with Fort Mahon at Benning and terminating with Fort Greble at Oxon run, nearly opposite Alexandria, comprising twelve forts and one armed battery.

Most of the heavy labor on the fortifications was done by hired laborers, but a good part was the work of the soldiers. Indeed, it became the aim and duties of the soldiers who were quartered in the forts to make them as strong and perfect as possible. The cost of the work, exclusive of armament, amounted to considerably more than half a million dollars. When they were first being erected there was a conglomeration of names, and the fortifications were named indiscriminately after States, cities and individuals, but in 1861 the War Department issued an order giving to the forts the names of distinguished soldiers who had lost their lives in defense of the flag.

Of the forts south of the Potomac, between the Long bridge and Arlington, which comprised Runyon, Jackson, Scott, Richardson, Barry, Craig, McPherson and Hagerty and Albany, the armament of the latter gives a good idea of the armament of all. It consisted of eighteen guns—thirteen twenty-four-pound barbettes, two six-pounder field pieces and three twenty-four-pound howitzers. These were manned by 183 gunners.—Washington Star.

Mosby as a General.

Frank A. Burr, in his "Life of Gen. Sheridan," says:

"But one of the most remarkable of Confederate cavalrymen is never named in these rosters. Yet he held, having won it fairly, the commission of colonel. John S. Mosby, the partisan leader of Northern Virginia, deserves a place in any reference to the doings and deeds of the Confederate troopers. He deserved it because he is a man of character enough to win the respect of his foe, and since the war closed to have induced Gen. Grant to write of him as follows, after having appointed him Consul to Hong Kong: 'Since the close of the war I have come to know Mosby personally and somewhat intimately. He is a different man entirely from what I supposed. He is slender, not tall, wiry, and looks as if he could endure any amount of physical exercise. He is able and thoroughly honest and truthful. There were probably but few men in the South who could have commanded successfully a separate detachment in the rear of an opposing army, and so near the borders of hostilities as long as he did without losing his entire command.'"

Mosby has been denounced as a guerrilla. In defending himself from that charge he outlines his theory of a successful cavalry campaign in this way:

"As a line is only as strong as its weakest point, it was necessary for it to be stronger that I was at every point in order to resist my attacks. * * * To destroy supply trains, to break up the means of conveying intelligence and thus isolating an army from its base, as well as its different corps from each other, to confuse plans by capturing dispatches, are the objects of partisan warfare. * * * The military value of a partisan's work is not measured by the amount of property destroyed, or the number of men killed or captured, but by the number he keeps watching. Every soldier withdrawn from the front to guard the rear of an army is so much taken from its fighting strength."

The Soldier's Friend.

During the civil war Dr. W. T. G. Morton had many opportunities to demonstrate on the battlefield the value of his discovery of anaesthesia. In an interesting paper in McClure's Magazine his wife, Mrs. E. W. Morton, has included a portion of Dr. John H. Brinton's valedictory address to a graduating class of Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia. The extract relates to the first meeting of Gen. Grant with Dr. Morton, and the anecdote is given from Dr. Brinton's personal reminiscences.

In the early summer of 1864, during the fierce contest in the Virginia wilderness, I was present officially at the headquarters of Lieut. Gen. Grant, on whose staff I had previously served. While I was in conversation with him an aide approached, and announced that a stranger, a civilian, wished to see him for the purpose of obtaining an ambulance for his personal use in visiting the field hospitals.

The answer of the general was prompt and decided: "The ambulances are intended only for the sick and wounded, and under no circumstances can be taken for private use."

This response was carried to the waiting applicant, a travel-stained man in brownish clothes, whom at the distance I thought I recognized. I went to him, and found that he was Dr. W. T. G. Morton. I asked him to wait a minute, and returned to the general.

On repeating the doctor's request, I received the same answer. "But, general," I ventured to say, "if you knew who that man is, I think you would give him what he asks for."

"No, I will not divert an ambulance to-day for any one; they are all required elsewhere."

"General," I replied, "I am sure you will give him the wagon, he has done so much for mankind, so much for the soldier—more than any soldier or civilian has done before; and you will say so when you know his name."

The general took his cigar from his mouth, looked curiously at the applicant, and asked, "Who is he?"

"He is Dr. Morton, the discoverer of ether," I answered.

The general paused a moment; then he said: "You are right, doctor; he has done more for the soldier than any one else, soldier or civilian, for he has taught you all to banish pain. Let him have the ambulance, and anything else he wants."

Afterward, during Dr. Morton's stay, by order of the general commanding, he was tendered the hospitalities of the headquarters, ambulance, tent, mess and servant.

Grant on the Field.

While the most critical movements were taking place, General Grant manifested no perceptible anxiety, but gave his orders, and sent and received communications, with a coolness and deliberation which made a marked impression upon those who had been brought into contact with him for the first time on the field of battle. His speech was never hurried, and his manner betrayed no trace of excitability or even impatience. He never exhibited to better advantage his peculiar ability in moving troops with unparalleled speed to the critical points on the line of battle where they were most needed, or, as it was sometimes called, "feeding a fight." There was a spur on the heel of every order he sent, and his subordinates were made to realize that in battle it is the minutes which control events. He said, while waiting for Burnside to get into position and attack: "The only time I ever feel impatient is when I give an order for an important movement of troops in the presence of the enemy, and am waiting for them to reach their destination."

He rode out to important points of the line twice during the day, in company with General Meade and two officers of the staff. It was noticed that he was visibly affected by his proximity to the wounded, and especially by the sight of blood. He would turn his face away from such scenes, and show by the expression of his countenance, and sometimes by a pause in his conversation, that he felt most keenly the painful spectacle presented by the field of battle. Some reference was made to the subject in camp that evening, and the general said: "I cannot bear the sight of suffering. The night after the first day's fight at Shiloh I was sitting on the ground, leaning against a tree, trying to get some sleep. It soon began to rain so hard that I went into a log house near by to seek shelter; but I found the surgeons had taken possession of it, and were amputating the arms and legs of the wounded, and blood was flowing in streams. I could not endure such a scene, and was glad to return to the tree outside, and sit there till morning in the storm." I thought of this remark while sitting by his bedside twenty-one years afterward, when he, in the last days of his fatal illness, was himself undergoing supreme physical torture!—"Campaigning with Grant," by General Horace Porter, in the Century.

France's population, according to the census taken last March, is 38,228,960, an increase of 133,819 in five years. The increase is confined to the cities, the rural communes all showing a decrease.

TANNER WINS A BRIDE

ILLINOIS GOVERNOR WEDDED TO MISS CORA ENGLISH.

One of the Most Brilliant Events in the State's History—Ceremony Takes Place in St. Paul's Church, Springfield—Prominent People Are Present

Tanner a Benedict.

John R. Tanner, Governor-elect of Illinois, and Miss Cora Edith English, of Springfield, were married in that city at noon Wednesday. The event was solemnized without display, but in a manner befitting at once the official eminence of Mr. Tanner and the social eminence of his bride. Half the State seemed to be looking on while vows were plighted, and all of it was represented. Immediately after the marriage luncheon at the home of Mrs. Tanner's parents, the newly wedded pair left for the South to idle away ten days under soft skies, unhampered by a set program.

As a wedding it was unique in the society annals of Illinois. Never before has a Governor of the State taken unto himself a wife on the eve of his inauguration. This fact gave it a semi-official character in the eyes of the world, which might, if permitted, have exalted the ceremony into an occasion of pomp and circumstance.

Miss English rode to the church in a carriage whose doors bore the initial of the name she was to assume. A number of Mr. Tanner's friends contrived together to find the most suitable present for the bride. So some twenty men banded together and purchased a handsome landau, richly upholstered in leather and satin. The horses were blooded bay "bang-tails" and the harness was silver-mounted and marked with a silver "T." After the couple had been married this carriage carried them back to Mr. English's home, where the reception was held. This team of horses and the carriage are said to be the most valuable gift to Mrs. John R. Tanner, although there was a division of opinion among those who saw the largest wedding gifts whether the most magnificent present was the carriage and pair or the immense trunk of silver tableware which was presented with the compliments of the members of the Republican State Central Committee. This collection of solid silver contained 348 pieces, and it is understood to have cost $1,500. It was made to order for the occasion, and is said to be the largest set of solid silver in the United States.

Prominent Guests.

The wedding guests filled St. Paul's pro-cathedral an hour before the time set for the ceremony. Twelve hundred of them had been bidden. They came from every county and in large numbers from Springfield and Chicago. Nearly every man among them, all personal friends of the Tanner and English families, was one who had helped make political history in the State, and the names of many are written on the honor roll of the nation. Conspicuous were Richard J. Oglesby, three times Governor of Illinois and twice elected United States Senator; General John M. Palmer, Governor and Senator; Senator Shelby M. Cullom, General John B. Hamilton and General John A. McClernand. There were dozens of State officials and scores of men whose names are familiar to every person who ever saw a newspaper. The guests filled the body of the church, all but the choir seats and four rows of pews which had been reserved for the immediate relatives of the families.

There was not a moment's delay. The bridal party was on time to a minute. Just as the clock in the tower sounded the last stroke of noon Professor John David Lloyd, at the organ, broke into the strains of the "Lohengrin" wedding march, and the wedding procession moved.

Dr. Taylor, in performing the ceremony, used the impressive form of the old English church. Mr. English gave away his daughter. The repetition of the vows and the final pronouncement of the words that joined a husband and wife took only a few minutes. Then Dr. Taylor stepped aside and Right Rev. George F. Seymour, bishop of Springfield, pronounced the solemn benediction of the church. Then the bridal party turned and walked down the aisle, followed by the relatives and immediate friends of the families who had been invited to the wedding luncheon. The wedding reception lasted barely long enough for the bride and groom to exchange ceremonial for traveling attire. Then they were driven away to the railway station amid a chorus of final congratulations.

The bride's wedding gown was of pure white mirrored velours. The bodice was short and pointed, and had a front of embroidered mull. Grills of this also edged the high, close collar. Sprays of lilies of the valley ornamented the bodice about the shoulders and the throat. The sleeves, which came well down below the knuckles, were close-fitting to the shoulder. The skirt, with its heavy satin lining, was perfectly plain, with a train three yards long.

How to Be a Man.

Truth, my boy is the only foundation on which manhood can be entered; for otherwise, no matter how beautiful the upper stories may be, and no matter of how good material they may be built, the edifice—character, manhood—will be but a sham which offers no sure refuge and protection to those who seek it, for it will tumble down when the trial comes. Alas! my boy, the world is full of such shams of manhood in every profession or occupation. I want you to be a man, and that you may be that, I want you first to be thoroughly true. I hope you will scorn a lie, but that is only the beginning of truthfulness. I want you to despise all sham, all pretense, all effort to be otherwise than you are.

Nothing is more inconsistent than for the preacher to preach more truth than he is willing to practice.

HOW KEROSENE IS REFINED.

Something About a Remarkable American Industry.

How many housekeepers, asks the Chicago Tribune, as they fill their lamps with kerosene oil or their summer stoves with gasoline, have any idea how these oils are made? And yet a few miles from Chicago, at Whiting, Ind., is the largest oil refinery in the world.

Naphtha, benzine, gasoline or kerosene, the last often called coal or illuminating oil, belong to the same family. The three first named being lighter oils, do not require nearly so much handling to bring them to perfection as the kerosene. This, of course, is easy to believe, but when it is said that from the same crude oil, after all the lighter oils have been distilled out, wax is made so closely resembling the product of the bee as to deceive even an expert, and that it is used in chewing gum factories, candle factories, laundries and even the candy factories, one is often met with a polite look of doubt or an incredulous shrug of the shoulders. Yet it is so. It is possible to get yet further, and say that hundreds of homes in Whiting and in Chicago will be made comfortable this winter by the refuse that adheres to the bottom and sides8 of the "stills" after even the wax has been pressed out. This refuse makes a good coke, is easily lighted, and is warmer, cleaner and cheaper than coal. Hundreds of tons are removed from the stills daily before they are "charged" again, and hundreds of those who use this fuel do not know that it was once crude oil, dug in the Ohio fields, and piped on to Whiting. The carbon used in electric lights is also made from this coke. Nothing is wasted.

As the most common the kerosene oil is perhaps the most interesting of the products. After leaving the crude stills it appears again in "sweetening stills," or in the "compound cylinders," which perform the same work as the sweetening stills, but in a newer invention, and is patented by an outsider, who allows only forty in each refinery. The "sweeteners" form an important factor in the refining of Ohio oil. Owing to the "compound" before mentioned, and the continous friction of the immense wire brushes, which keep the oil in a mad whirl, it loses much of its bad odor. It is again vapored off, cooled in the condenser boxes and passed off into the "steam stills" for the next process.

In the steam stills it is treated just the same as in the two previous processes, with the addition of a washing by steam from perforated pipes passing through it. It is "vapored" off as before, and now one would suppose that it was ready for use. Not quite. The kerosene oil now passes into the agitator for the final process. The agitator is a funnel-shaped tank in which the oil is treated with acid and beaten and blown about by a machine called a blower and washed by torrents of water until it roars like the lake in a storm. Every particle of foreign matter is thus expelled. It is then pumped off into the storage tanks for shipping.

A Brave Mother.

As showing the force of maternal love among the lower animals, there are few more pathetic incidents than the following which comes from Australia:

The owner of a country station was sitting one evening on the balcony outside of his house, when he was surprised to notice a kangaroo lingering about, alternately approaching and retiring from the house, as though half in doubt and fear what to do. At length she approached the water-pails, and taking a young one from her pouch, held it to the water to drink.

While her babe was satisfying its thirst the mother was quivering all over with excitement, for she was only a few feet from the balcony, on which one of her great foes was sitting watching her. The little one having finished drinking, it was replaced in the pouch, and the old kangaroo started off at a rapid pace.

When the natural timidity of the kangaroo is taken into account, it will be recognized what astonishing bravery this affectionate mother betrayed. It is a pleasing ending to the story that the eye witness was so affected by the scene that from that time forward he could never shoot a kangaroo.—Our Dumb Animals.

He Was Sure.

"Drummers"—sometimes called commercial travelers—are like ministers and doctors, fond of chafing each other.

"I've a great story to tell you, boys," said a drummer to a group in the corridor of the Iroquois the other night. "I don't think any of you ever heard me tell it before."

"Is it really a good story?" asked one of the party, doubtingly.

"It certainly is."

"Then I'm sure you never told it before.—Buffalo Times.

A New One.

"They say Brown is married to a new woman."

"Yes. I believe this is the fifth.—Cleveland Leader.

Scoff and Cough.

The man who scoffs at the friendly advice, to "take something for that cough," will keep on coughing until he changes his mind or changes his earthly residence. A great many scoffers have been converted by the use of the standard cough remedy of the past half century,—Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. But some are scoffing and coughing yet. They wheeze with asthma, bark with bronchitis or groan with the grippe. Singular, is n't it, the number of stubborn people, who persist in gambling, with health and perhaps life as the stake, when they might be effectually cured of cough, cold or lung trouble, by a few doses of

LONG TRAIN OF AILMENTS

RHEUMATISM, NEURALGIA AND NERVOUS PROSTRATION.

Husband and Wife Restored to Health by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Impure blood is often the cause of a long train of ailments. The blood is the vital fluid upon which all the organs depend for nourishment. When this nourishment fails to be supplied properly the whole system feels the effect. Read this letter:

"Several years ago I was taken with the grip, and I was sick all winter. I had nervous prostration and a long train of ailments that follow closely with that terrible malady. Last winter it seized me again. It went to my lungs and I had congestion of the lungs and kidney and liver trouble. When I felt its approach I

Quickly Resorted to Hood's

Sarsaparilla and a glorious result followed. I was on my feet the first winter for seven years. The symptoms of the disease left me, and the ailments connected with it. For several years my husband was a sufferer with rheumatism and neuralgia. He was all run down and in a very bad way. He took many kinds of medicine without any permanent benefit until he began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. This medicine cured the pains of rheumatism and neuralgia and he said he felt like a new man. If all those who are suffering from nervous troubles or rheumatism would give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial they would find that it speaks for itself." Mrs. F. C. Pratt, Wheaton, Illinois.

Military Signal Torch.

A new torch for military signaling consists of an asbestos ball in a wire cage, at the end of a long staff. Just below the asbestos ball is a copper drip cup. The ball is dipped into a bucket of kerosene oil, and is set on fire at a little bonfire, which is kept burning during the operation. As fast as the oil burns out, the torch is dipped in the oil, so that the signalling can go on as long as the kerosene lasts. The torch is extinguished with a copper snuffer. The old form of torch was a large copper cylinder, with an ordinary wick at the end of a staff. The cylinder containing the oil could be used for only a few minutes at a time, because it became heated and caused the oil to explode. The new torch gives out a much larger flame, which can be seen with the naked eye for seven miles, and through a field glass for twelve miles on clear nights, and at a good distance in rain or mist.

Which Would He Be?

Much amusement was caused recently at an inquest held at a certain town in Maine, according to Answers:

After the usual swearing in of the jurors one of them arose from his seat, and with much dignity protested against sitting as a juror, as he was managing clerk for a firm of solicitors, and could not waste his valuable time at an inquest.

After making his protest, the Coroner, turning to his clerk, said: "Mr. Soandso, kindly hand me "Jervis," (the book of authority on juries.") And fixing the juror steadfastly, he said, "Upon referring to 'Jervis' I find that no persons are exempt from sitting as jurors, except idiots, imbeciles and lunatics. Under which heading do you claim exemption?"

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Correct Attire for the Bridegroom.

"A six o'clock church wedding, when the bride wears a traveling gown, and there is to be no reception afterward, calls for afternoon dress on the part of the bridegroom," writes Walter Germain in the January Home Journal. "He should, even if he is going right from the church to the train, wear frock coat of black, light trousers, gray gloves, light four-in-hand or Ascot tie, top hat, just as if the wedding were to be a large afternoon affair."

Let Home Stand First.

Let home stand first. No matter how high your ambition, no matter how far your talents or your influence may reach, before everything else build up a true home! Be not its slave; be its minister. Let it not be enough that it is swept and garnished, that its silver is brilliant, that its food is delicious, but feed the love in it. Then from its walls shall come forth the true woman and the true man. What honor can be greater than to found such a home? What dignity higher than to reign its honored mistress? What is the ability to speak from public platform, or the wisdom that can command a seat on the judge's bench, compared to that which can insure and preside over a true home? To be the guiding star, the ruling spirit in such a home is higher than to rule an empire.

Catarrh and Throat Specific.

There is perhaps no other remedy before the public that has given such universal satisfaction in the relief and permanent cure of catarrh and throat troubles as the renowned Cutler's Inhaler, so simple in its application and yet so efficacious in its results. For over twenty years this remedy has been in use until its popularity has made it a household necessity for the ailments named. The remedy is put up by the well-known firm of W. H. Smith & Co., of Buffalo, N. Y., who send it by mail on application, or it can be purchased of all druggists.

One Secret of Longevity.

Those anxious to prolong this rapid transitory existence of ours beyond the average span should foster his digestion, sensatively by abstaining from indiscretions in diet, and affirmatively by the use of that peerless stomachic, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, when he experiences symptoms of indigestion. The impairment of the digestive function is fatal to vigor. Subdue with the Bitters, also, fever and ague, biliousness and constipation.

Mother and Babe.

A babe is a mother's anchor, she cannot swim far from her moorings; and yet a true mother never lives so little in the present as when by the side of the cradle; her thoughts follow the imagined future of her child; that babe is the boldest of pilots, and guides her fearless thoughts down through scenes of coming years—Orphan's Bouquet.

A literary man, used to the niceties of expression and fond also of the pleasures of the table, in speaking of says: "I couldn't recommend this remedy as heartily as I do if I didn't believe in it. I am not much of a medicine taker. I am opposed to medicine, on principle. There ought to be no need of medicine—just as there ought to be no poverty—but there is. If people lived right they would be well. Sunshine, air, exercise, fun, good food—plenty and not too much—are the best medicines, the natural ones; but men are tied to their desks, and women to their home cares, and both are tied to fashion. Civilized existence is artificial and needs artificial regulators. I recommend Ripans Tabules—and take them myself. I know they are both harmless and effective. (I know what they are made of.) They are the best remedy I know anything about for headaches, or indigestion, or biliousness, or any sort of sluggishness in the system. And they are in the handiest possible shape to carry in the pocket."

Court.

Business has been rushing. In fact we know of no other line of business that appears to have picked up since McKinley's election, as has court business everywhere. One of the most interesting cases finished so far was the divorce case between Elijah Sherwood and his wife, a granddaughter of the late Thomas Chandler. It will be remembered that they had not got along well together and finally separated. When Sherwood sued old Mr. Chandler for damages for inducing his wife to leave him, Chandler died aud that ended that suit. But a suit for divorce was brought by Mrs. Sherwood. There was quite a fight over the matter, but she got the divorce and $1000 alimony. But it appears that recently Sherwood had deeded his farm away to his brother John, and it has been claimed he did this to prevent his wife getting any alimony in case the court gave her a claim of that kind. However after some plain talk from the Judge and some sparring by the attorneys, John gave up the property, and as we uderstand it, Mrs Sherwood gets a quit claim deed from John Sherwood and so really has the property. Still it appears that it is greatly encumbered and she will need to manage well to get much out of it. Her attorneys were W. H. Leas, Roby & Link. Sherwood's attorneys were Judge McClellan and C. M. Phillips.

Judge Walkins of Huntington has been here this week, so far, to take charge of part of the work and give Judge Penfield a chance to devote more of his time to the Fair cases. He is evidently a man of ability and commands the respect of the bar.

GRAND JURY

Tuesday's Daily.

The DAILY learned yesterday, that the grand jury which had been adjourned to meet on Wednesday, had been hurredly called in on Monday. This action was caused, no doubt, by the arrival in the city on Friday of Mr. Mitchell, the former cashier of the Garrett Bank. It had been rumored all the time, that he was "in sight" somewhere, and stood ready to return and tell something about the stories afloat in regard to the connection young Fair claimed there was between his trouble and some members of the bank. So when the grand jury got together yesterday afternoon, they called in Michell, and it would appear that he told a tale that in some way implicated Mr. Coffinberry, Coffinberry was called before the grand jury and after an examination was taken out into the court room and at once put under arrest. He asked to have the sheriff or a deputy take charge of him and at his expense, and let him stay at the hotel till he could get bail. But this was denied him and he was ordered to jail to be locked up till bail could be procured. Mr. Camp, the present cashier of the Garrett Bank was also present in the court room, and he started for home, to get bondsmen. Going down the steps, he slipped and fell, receivieg injuries which delayed him half an hour or so. But as soon as he got his supper, he started for Garrett and was soon back with a number of men, who went on Mr. Coffinberry's bond for $16,000 and he was at once liberated. The affair created quite a stir and various comments are made and as many opinions held. The previous high standing of Mr. Coffinberry on the one side, and the various stories about his supposed connection with the treasury trouble on the other, had caused people to take sides a great deal. Perry Fair has from the first carried the idea that a part at least of his troubles were cased by Coffinberry. But the public knew so little as to what he claimed or could prove, that many withheld an opinion of any kind. But the matter will now get into court and be sifted to the bottom. Then whoever is to blame, whether Fair or Coffinberry, or both or some one else, they will be dealt with accordingly. If either or both can show innocence, so much the better, for there is nothing so good as a public trial, for an innocent man. And in any case, the people at large have a right to know who have brought this trouble and expense on them. It will be well if we all withold our judgment till the proper court passes on the matter.

Another Smart Woman.

My husband is poor but proud and he does not want me to work, as I have nothing to do I get restless, and after reading in your paper Mrs. Russell's experience selling self-heating flatirons I concluded I would try it. I wrote to J. F. Casey & Co., St Louis Mo., and they treated me so nicely that I felt very much encouraged. As soon as I got my sample iron I started out, and sold 8 irons the first day clearing $12. I have not sold less than 8 any day since, and one day I sold 17. I now have $226 clear money, and my husband does not know I have been working at all, but I am afraid he will be mad when I tell him. Have I done right or should I quit work and leave him to struggle alone.

AN ANXIOUS WIFE.

You are doing just right, your husband should be proud of you, go ahead and show the world what an energetic woman can do. That self-heating iron must be a wonderful seller, as we hear of so many that are succeeding selling it. 2

Little Men and Women

We call them little men and little women, but they are neither. They have ideas and ways all their own. Fortunately they soon become fond of cod-liver oil, when it is given to them in the form of SCOTT'S EMULSION. This is the most valuable remedy in existence for all the wasting diseases of early life. The poorly nourished, scrofulous child; the thin, weak, fretting child; the young child who does not grow; all take Scott's Emulsion without force or bribe. It seems as if they knew that this meant nourishment and growth for bones, muscles and nerves.

It won't pay to try a substitute for Scott's Emulsion with the children. They will relish the real thing.

50 Years of Cures.

Obituary.

Marcia M. Gray was born at Black Rock, Erie County, N. Y., December 4, 1821. Died at Fort Wayne, Indiana, December 29, 1896, aged seventy-five years and twenty-five days. Death was due to a complication of diseases from which she suffered for many long weeks. At times her sufferings were intense and she longed to be at rest, and often so expressed herself, but always with, "That is as God wills." The funeral services were held in the Presbyterian church of Kendallville, Indiana, December 30, 1896, conducted by the Rev. Rev. G. A. Mackintosh. The interment was at Lake View cemetery. One brother, Truman W. Gray of DeKalb County, Indiana, and one sister, Mrs. Harriet E. Wallace, of Fort Wayne, Indiana, survive.

A Churn That Churns in One Minute

I have been in the dairy business all my life and have many times churned for an hour before butter would appear, so when I heard of a churn that would churn in a minute, I concluded to try it. Every day for a week I used it, and not only could I churn in a minute, but I got more and better butter than with the common churn. This is very important information to butter makers. The churn works easily and will churn an ordinary churning in less than sixty seconds. I have sold two dozen of these churns in the past month, Every butter maker that has seen me churn in less than a minute bought one. You can obtain all desired information regarding the churn by addressing J. F. Casey & Co., St Louis Mo., and they will give you prompt and courteous attention.

Glad to Hear It

Company K Delighted to Hear That Gov. Mount Has Appointed Col Gore Adjutant-general.

No company in the service of this state were more anxious to hear of the appointment of Col. J. K. Gore, of Elkhart, Adjutant-general of the state of Indiana, than Co. K. of Auburn Since the election of Governor Mount many petitions have been sent in by the various companies asking that he appoint Col. Gore to this important position. Capt. Kuhlman was among the first to circulate and send in a petition signed by every member of his company and a large list of citizens asking for the appointment of Col. Gore.

When the Auburn Rifles were first organized about five years ago, Mr. Gore was then Major of the Battalion to which company K. belonged. He then won the good will of every member by his very courteous treatment. Since then he has received the appointment of Colonel, of the Third Regiment, which office he has filled to the entire satisfaction of all. Mr. Gore was a soldier in the late war and he is thoroughly competent to take charge of the office to which he has been favored. There is no question but what the state militia will be advanced under the management of Adjutant General J. K. Gore.

Capt. B. A. Richardson of Indianapolis, also a veteran, has been appointed quartermaster general.

In New Hands.

Virge DeWitt on Saturday effected the purchase of the Band Sawmill, so long owned and operated by A. B. Nickey & Son. Mr. DeWitt has been running the mill a part of the time during the fall, but the new deal will give him full control and he will make it a steady business now. We understand he has the yard full of logs, which will furnish work and business for probably the year round. We are glad to note this.

Barn Burned

The fine, large barn of Hugh Sherwood who resides about one mile east of Columbia City, was set on fire by tramps Friday night and burned to the ground. He had been at Columbia City and when he returned home he noticed a light in the hay mow. A half dozen tramps had stopped there for the night. Mr. Sherwood asked them what they were doing there, and they replied they were going to "bunk" there for the night. He said to them that they had better ask permission to stay there before taking possession, as he might have something to say about it. One of the gang replied that there was no use in getting smart for they were going to stay anyway. Mr. Sherwood said he would see about that and started to the house. He had only been in the house consulting with his wife as to what he had better do when a flash of fire from the barn attracted his attention. He ran out and the whole upper portion of the barn seemed to be enveloped in flames.

IS A BLESSING

Men Can Be Rescued From the Slavery That Has Held Them.

It is gratifying to know that there is release for those unfortunates who are slaves to the whisky, morphine, drug, tobacco or cigarette habits, and that the cure is in the hands of scientific men of the highest standing, whose guarantee assures to the sufferer all that is claimed.

"The Retreat," an advertisement of which appears in this paper, is an extensive institution that has built up an enviable reputation in Chicago and and all over the country. The institution, besides treating patients within its walls, is treating them by mail under guarantee and at terms that really amount to practically a gift to those sorely afflicted. Our readers should peruse carefully the announcement of "The Retreat."

Relieved at Once.

Not a few who read what Mr. Robert Rowls, of Hollands, Va. has to say below, will remember their own experience under like circumstances: "Last inter I had lagrippe which left me in a low state of health. I tried numerous remedies, none of which did me any good, until I was induced to try a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The first bottle of it so far relieved me that I was enabled to attend to my work, and the second bottle effected a cure." For sale at 25 and 50 cents a bottle by F. E. Davenport the Druggist.

Paid in Kisses.

One of the oddest election bets is reported from Michigan. A dispatch from Marshal county that state says:

Miss Carrie Osier of this county, is just at present fulfilling a rather agreeable and pleasant campaign wager with a young man. Miss Osier pinned her faith to Bryan in the recent election, and so confident was she that the Nebraska man would win that she bet 1,000 kisses with her lover on the result. The couple were making excellent progress toward the payment of the wager when a dispute arose over alleged inaccuracies in the tally and a recount is now being taken.

McClure's Magazine

will begin publication in the December number of a series of views of the authentic historic places and monuments in Palestine. It is only by very recent exploration and study that many of the more significant of these places and monuments have been certainly indentified, and not few of them have never been pictured until now. Last spring the editor of McClure's organized a considerable expedition, and, accompanied by a photographer specially skilled and experienced in such work, made a tour of nearly the whole Palestine, and took photographs of whatever of importance the latest and most authoritative investigations have definitely connected with Biblical incident and history. Special attention was given to the great ancient highway leading from Damascus to Jerusalem and on down through Bethlehem to Hebron; and many views were obtained of localities and objects of the first interest that will be entirely new to the public. They have been reproduced with great care, and will make one of the most attractive features of McClure's through the coming months.

A Dandy Thing to Sell!

I have been doing so well this summer selling combination dippers that I think it is my duty to tell others about it. I have not made as much money as some I read about, but I never made less than $3 and often $5 a day; the dipper can be used as a fruit jar filler; a plain dipper; a fine strainer; a funnel; a strainer funnel; a sick room warming pan, and a pint measure. These eight different uses makes the dipper such a necessary article that it sells at nearly every house, as it is so cheap. You can get a sample by sending, as I did, 18 two-cent stamps to pay postage, etc., to W. H. Baird & Co., Station A, Pittsburg, Pa., and they will mail you a dipper, and you can go right to work. Any one can make $3 or $4 a day anywhere. READER.

How the Dipper Saved the Farm

Father was sick and the mortgage on the farm was coming due, I saw in the Christian Advocate where Miss A. M. Fritz, of Station A, St. Louis, Mo. would send a sample combination Dipper could be used as a fruit jar filler; a plain dipper a fine strainer; a funnel; a strainer funnel; a sick room warming pan, and a pint measure. These eight different uses makes the dipper such a necessary article that I went to work with it and it sells at very near every house. And in four months I paid off the mortgage. I can clear as much as $200 a month. If you need work you can do well by giving this a trial. Miss A. M. Fritz, Station A, St. Louis, Mo. will send you a sample for 18 two cent stamps—write at one. JOHN G. N.

A Hoosier Boy.

A recent member of the Newspaper Union has a likeness of what it calls "Indiana Prodigy." We clip the article entire as the lad is a son of C. M. Smith who used to teach the school at Auburn Junction and many of our readers knew him then. He has for some years published a paper as will be seen by the article.

"Hoosierdom is the home of infant prodigies. The latest is Master Leonard Foster Smith, who, at 4 years of age, writes newspaper "copy," puts it in type and in the "forms" and is one of the editors and publishers of the Tri-County Gazette, issued at Mentone in Kosciusko County. Master Smith is said, therefore, to be the youngest typesetter and editor in the United States, if not in the world. The father's printing office has always been the boy's play ground. Before he was 2 years old he wrote "copy," so it is said and "put it on the hooks." Now he takes his position, high on a soap box, before the "case" and sets type rapidly and correctly. He reads readily, writes a legible hand and is, in truth, a prodigy. It is his present intention to continue in the newspaper business, but before he grows up he may be convinced of the error of his ways and get into something else. His wonderful precocity certainly indicates a brilliant future."

There is no Word so Full of Meaning and about which such tender recollections cluster as that of "MOTHER"—she who watched our helpless infancy and guided our first tottering step. The life of every Expectant Mother is beset with danger.

"Mother's Friend"

so assists Nature in the change taking place that the Expectant Mother is enabled to look forward without dread to the hour when she experiences the joy of Motherhood. It insures safety to both Mother and Child, and she is found stronger after than before confinement—in short, it "makes Childbirth easy," as so many have said. Don't be persuaded. Use nothing but

"Mother's Friend"

"My wife suffered more in ten minutes with either of her other two children than she did altogether with her last, having previously used four bottles of "Mother's Friend." It is a blessing to anyone expecting to become a mother, says a customer." HENDERSON DALE, Carmi, Ill.

Volume XXVII | Auburn, DeKalb County, Indiana, Thursday January 14, 1897. | Number 2.

CASH! WHY? CASH!

We have discovered that we can save our customers money by doing away with our books entirely. Everybody wants to buy CHEAP and we know we can sell you enough CHEAPER to more than offset the inconvenience (if it is an inconvenience.) We desire to state briefly why we are changing to a STRICTLY CASH BASIS on HARDWARE and cash or notes for farm machinery, wagons and buggies.

1st. Nearly all the other stores in Auburn are doing a cash business and we have to carry more accounts than we can afford to do, at the prices we have been getting.

2d. It takes an extra man to keep books and we propose to do with one less man and cut the profit that much, thereby SAVING YOU MONEY.

3d. In a busy day we quite frequently forget to charge as afterwards we find out when men come to pay for goods and we have nothing charged to them.

4th. Some few people when they owe an account and have not enough money to pay it and buy the articles they need in our line will go some place else and buy and pay them the cash and still owe us on account.

5th. A few accounts get mixed as for instance J. Jones buys something and it is charged, and when we start out make our colleftions, we wonder whether it is John, Joseph Jacob or Jonathan Jones. We try all of them, get CURSED by most of them, and paid by none of them, sometimes.

6th. We meet all competition in price and now we propose to beat all competition by buying for cash and selling for cash.

7th. We are going to sell at such close margins that we will get the hardware trade because prices will tell.

Come and see us when you want anything in our line and we will explain our system more fully to you.

Very Respectfully Yours,

BROWN, CULBERTSON & BOLAND.

A GOOD MOTHER

Who Was Over One Hundred Years Old When She Died.

MRS. LUCY ALDRICH.

Lucy Tubbs was born in Guilford, Vermont, March 17, 1796, and died at the home of her son-in-law, Talma Rummel, Dec. 30, 1896, aged 100 years, 9 months and 13 days.

At the age of twenty-five years she married Roger Aldrich, with whom she lived happily forty-seven years until his death. In 1836 they settled in DeKalb county. She was the mother of six children, all of whom passed to the other world in advance of the mother. She and her husband were members of the Christian church, being converted under the preaching of Alexander Campbell at Cleveland, Ohio, about sixty years ago. Her long life was filled with deeds of love. Funeral services were conducted by Elder D. C. Hanselman, of Angola.

Big Tuba.

The Chicago Record says: "Conductor Brooks is daily expecting to receive the largest brass instrument ever used in this country, which has just been made to his order at the Conn factory at Elkhart. It measures 208 inches from the mouth-piece to the bell, and the bell is 32 inches in diameter, quite large enough to take in an ordinary sized man. This monster tuba will be played by an expert peformer on the coming tour of the Chicago Marine Band."

ELECTRIC BITTERS.

Electric Bitters is a medicine suited for any person, but perhaps more generally needed in the Spring, when the languid exhausted feeling prevails, when the liver is orpid and sluggish and the need of a tonic and alterative is felt. A prompt use of this medicine has often averted long and perhaps fatal bilious fevers. No medicine will act more surely in counteracting and freeing the system from the malarial poison. Headache, Indigestion Constipation, Dizziness yield to Electric Bitters. Only fifty cents per bottle at Robbin & McCord's Drug Store.

The Legislature

Friday's Daily.

The first day's session of the "Indiana General Assembly met at the state house, yesterday at 11 a. m. The House was called to order by Mr. Owen, secretary of state. The roll was called by Robert A. Brown, the clerk of the last House, and the oath administered by Judge Comstock, chief of the Appellate court. All members were present but Mr. Plew, democrat, of Sullivan, who was sick. The House has 52 republicans and 48 democrats, so that we an get no officers or employes of the House. The republicans voted for and elected Henry C. Pettitt of Wabash for speaker, he getting the 52 votes. Allen Swope, of Brown county received the democratic vote, 47 only, as Mr. Plew was not present.

SENATE.

This body also met at 11 a. m., and was called to order by its presiding officer, Lieutenant-governor Mortimer Nye, who is still in office, his time being out next week. Roll of hold-over senators was called, and then the roll of new ones, and those of the latter class present were sworn in by Chief Justice Hackney of the Supreme Bench. The Senate has 33 republicans and 17 democrats, but so many of the republican members were absent, that the 17 democrats threatened to begin business at once, and organize by electing door keepers and other officers. Mr. Nye, however, thought such a course unwise, and when some one made a motion to adjourn, he pronounced it carried. Both Houses adjourned till this morning, when Gov. Matthews will read them his last message.

Charles E. Henderson of Bloomfield, berGreene County, is the youngest member of the House, being only 24. It is said that Charlie Brown and Dr. Nusbaum, of Auburn, are the best looking members of their respective Houses. There are, however, balder heads in the Senate than Doc's, and in the House, redder faces than Charlie's for Charlie is strictly temperate as everybody here knows.

U. S. SENATOR.

Fairbanks the millionaire who furnished the funds during the recent campaign, will no doubt be senator, unless some unexpected thing should occur. It will be remembered that most of the nominations for legislative offices, were made with his candidacy in view, and the candidate pledged or known to be favorable to him. And all these candidates were made to feel all during the campaign, that Fairbanks was the man who was doing the most to earn the office in case the legislature should be republican. Still there are some members who prefer Lew Wallace, Riley McKeen or Judge R. S. Taylor. The vote will be taken on Monday and it is thought Fairbanks will start in with about 40 votes, 30 being necessary to elect.

Saturday's Daily.

The Assembly met at 10 a. m. yesterday. In the senate, the new lieutenant governor occupied a seat beside the outgoing one. Little business could be done, as no committees existed. But petitions were in order. One was presented to amend the drainage laws; one petition asking to have the state help to improve the Kankakee river; one to stop the killing of quail or hunting them with dogs for six years; and on a roll call for bills, one was read to fix the terms of court for the 57th circuit consisting of the counties of Dubois and Pike. Also one to secure a better way to test weight and quality of wheat and other grain: also to instruct county commissioners as to repair and making of bridges, also one by Senator Ellison of Ft. Wayne, to permit Allen county to sell bonds for its new court house. This was passed by the senate. Some changes in the Fee and Salary law were discussed.

A matter that will interest our people, is Senate Bill No. 14 fixing the terms of court that in the 34th and 35th judicial circuits, ours being the 35th. We do not know the nature of the changes. There is also an attempt to make Howard county a separate judicial circuit, the 58th, with court at its county seat, Kokomo, of course. A bill will be brought up to give the Custodian of the State House $1500 a year, his assistant $900; engineer $1,200, and 15 janitors $50 a month. Bills are also talked up, to regulate the business of building and loan associations. At 11 a. m. both Houses met to hear the governor's message read.

Attack Prevented

It will be an agreeable surprise to persons subject to attack of bilious colic to learn that prompt relief may be had by taking Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy. In many instances the attack may be prevented by taking this remedy as soon as the first symtoms of the disease appear. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Davenport the Druggist.

New Idea.

A gold mine in Grass Valley, Cal., is furnishing rich ore at a depth of 2,100 feet, a thing never known in gold mining before. It has always been an accepted rule, that below a certain depth much less than this,—gold is never found, and when a mine is exhausted at a certain level, they do not try to go deeper, as they feel sure there will be no gold lower down. This mine will open a new idea.

HORRIBLE DEATH.

A Five-Year-Girl Consumed By Flames of Fire

Cedarville, Ind., the Home of the Afflicted Parents.

Thursday's Daily.

Again the COURIER is called upon to spread the news of another fatal accident. The particulars we learned from Dr. W. W. Carey, of Spencerville. The little five year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Parker, of Cedarville, Ind. was burnt to death last evening. Her mother had just stepped out of the house when the little innocent child went to the stove and began playing with some bright red coals. In some manner her clothes became ignited and the child ran out doors to seek protection from her mother. A strong wind was moving and her little body was soon enwrapped in flames an before any assistrnce could be rendered she had given up to the angry flames.

The accident is a very sad one, and leaves the parents nearly heart broken. It should be a lesson to parents who allow their children to play in the fire or to have matches.

Stands at the Head.

Aug J. Bogel, the leading druggist of Shreveport, La., says: "Dr. King's New Discovery is the only thing that cures my cough, and it is the best seller I have." J F. Campbell, merchant of Safford, Ariz writes: "Dr. King's New Discovery is all that is claimed for it; it never fails and is a sure cure for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. I cannot say enough for its merits Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds is not an experiment. It has been tried for a quarter of a century and to-day stands at the head. It never disappoints. Free trial bottles at, Robbins & McCord's Drug Store. 1

The Limit.

A boy can climb a slippery tree
Where men would surely fail.
The dog who barks at you and me
Will let him pull his tail.
He takes a swim where it's so cold
We'd never reach the shore.
He's capable of feats untold,
But he cannot shut the door.

With rubber and a wooden frame
He maks a gun. His skill
Enables him to bring down game
Your rifle cannot kill.
Your fishing tackle lands a few;
His bent pin catches more.
Ah, wondrous things a boy can do,
But he cannot shut the door.

Mrs. Pattison, 222 Crane St. Writes:

Dayton, O., March 12, '96.—'My baby is two months old and from her birth has had severe attacks of wind colic. I tried almost everything, but nothing gave her any relief until I got Dr. Hand's Colic Cure. I have used two bottles and would not do without it. It surely is the best colic medicine ever made." Dr. Hand's Colic Cure and all of Dr. Hand's Remedies at Fischler & Son's. 1

DOINGS OF THE DAY.

SUMMARY OF THE NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Eventful Happenings in Every Known Hemisphere—Fires, Accidents, Crimes, Politics, Religion, Commerce and Crops, Sandwiched with Minor Affairs.

WHEAT FAMINE.

Prices Are Now as High as $1 62 1-2 in California.

San Francisco special: Wheat in this market has become exceedingly scarce and is daily advancing. It is known that shippers have paid as high as $1.62½ for extra choice shipping wheat within the last forty-eight hours. There is not more than 250,000 tons of wheat remaining in the State to supply the export demand and home requirements before another crop is harvested. Of this only 85,894 tons were in the call board warehouse on January 1. The amount of wheat in the same warehouses of January 1, 1896, was 180,609 tons.

Freights are in over supply and weak. Vessels are not quoting over 17s in the United Kingdom to-day. This favors a rise in wheat which is likely to reach close onto $2 per cental in the local market before July 1.

Train Wrecked.

A wreck occurred on the Plant system, just outside the city limits of Tampa, Fla., in which Engineer R. H. Finney and Fireman R. L. Gosst received severe and possibly fatal injuries. Some villain placed a cross-tie lengthwise on the track; the pilot passed over and it stuck under the engine, overturning and smashing it and the tender. The express and baggage cars were derailed but no further damage was done.

Police Officer Dead.

Sergeant of Police Amer Keller of Dayton, Ohio, died Friday morning from concussion of the brain, received by a ladder falling upon him at a fire the night before. He was 45 years old, and had served twenty-one years on the police force. Two firemen and a by-stander were also seriously injured. The loss at the fire was only $4,000.

Jesse Pomeroy's Attempt to Escape.

It was discovered recently that Jesse Pomeroy, the notorious murderer, who has been confined in States prison at Boston, Mass., for the last twenty-two years, or since he was fifteen years of age, has nearly succeeded in digging through the prison walls in an attempt to escape, but the attempt was discovered and frustrated.

Desperado Killed.

Simon Cooper, the negro desperado who has killed five people, was surrounded by a Sheriff's posse in Sumpter County, South Carolina, recently, and killed. Gov. Evans was asked for a cannon, as Cooper kept up a fusilade with his rifle at the posse, but a lucky shot finally downed him.

Six Crushed by a Derrick.

By the falling of a derrick at Speed's cement mills at Jeffersonville, Ind., six men were caught and badly wounded. Three are very dangerously wounded, and Anthony Reagan, another, will die. The rest sustained broken ribs, badly cut heads and may be internally injured.

Corpse in the Ice.

Michael Harney, an inmate of the National Military Home of Dayton, Ohio, while intoxicated fell off the big bridge over Eagle Creek at Findlay, Ohio. His body was found imbedded in the ice. Since last July he has spent $1,400. He was to have returned to the home.

Killed Three Men.

A boiler being used by the Fisher Oil Company, on the Howell farm in the Bentwood oil field near Sistersville, W. Va., in drilling wells, exploded, killing Samuel Bugley, Lease Bass and William Austin, and fatally injuring Charles Kinkle and James Noll, tool dressers.

Hendricks' Uncle Dead.

Lawrenceburg (Ky.) special: Ezekiel Hendricks, of this county, uncle of Thomas A. Hendrick of Indiana, Vice President during Cleveland's first term, is dead. He was 90 years old, and leaves a large family of grown sons, all of whom are Republicans.

Seaport Town Wrecked.

A hurricane has swept over Palmerston (Port Darwin), a seaport village of South Australia, at the junction of the overland telegraph with the ocean cable to Java. The place is almost wrecked and telegraphic communication with it is interrupted.

Horrible Plague.

The Times of India, says that owing to the exodus on account of the plague the population of Bombay has been reduced to one-half. The weekly mortality is 200 per 1,000, and more shops are closed than open in the native quarter.

Masonic Temple, Fort Wayne, Ind.

Jan. 15.—"For Fair Virginia."
Jan. 23.—"Twelve Temptations."
Jan. 25.—Week—Ferris' Commedians at popular prices.

Five Little Ones Meet Death in Water.

Plato (Mo.) special: News has reached here of the drowning of five children, a result of the floods in Texas County. Thomas Wilson, accompanied by his daughter, Mrs. Kinney, and her five children, attempted to ford Prairie Creek. The team became unmanageable and soon lost their foothold. The wagon, weighted with its human freight, sank, and the sideboards floated away, throwing the entire party into the water. Mr. Wilson and Mrs. Kinney succeeded in getting to shore, but the children were drowned.

Fatal Powder Explosion.

At Millersville, Ohio, a son of Alex. Dotwick, secured several pounds of blasting powder, and went to the cellar, accompanied by three sisters, to kill rats. The powder exploded, and one girl, 8 years old, was burned to death. The clothing of the other three children caught fire and they were horribly burned, as were Mr. and Mrs. Dotwick, in attempting to extinguish the flames.

Killed by the Cars.

A man supposed to be Richard Brouiposts of Bay City, Mich., was run over and killed by the cars in West Springfield.

SCHOONER BURNED.

The M. L. Bonnell Destroyed Off Long Island.

South Norwalk (Conn.) special: The three-masted schooner M. L. Bonnell, whose hailing port, destination and owners are unknown, was burned to the water's edge in Long Island Sound the other night. The steamers Media and J. Howard Lowdes put out to the burning wreck. The vessel had been abandoned and there is no trace of the captain or crew. Capt. Lowdes succeeded in getting a line to the burning vessel and towed her to the bar on Cuckoo Island, where she was left burning. It was impossible to board the vessel, as the fire was burning fiercely in the hold. It is possible that a portion or all of the crew have lost their lives, but it is believed that they abandoned the ship at some point on Long Island shore.

Matched to Fight.

Bob Fitzsimmons is matched to fight Jim Corbett for a purse of $15,000 and a side bet of $5,000 on March 17. Fitzsimmons signed the articles Tuesday afternoon at Taylor's Hotel, Jersey City. Corbett signed them three weeks ago. Dan Stuart of Dallas, Texas, who made the match, and claims to be able to pull the fight off, was present.

Detroit special: When James Corbett was informed that Fitzsimmons had signed the articles for their match he expressed himself as being very glad that the match had been finally arranged. He declared he was ready and willing to fight and that he would surely be on hand on March 17.

Landed in Cuba.

A dispatch received at Jacksonville, Fla., from Key West states that the Dauntless has successfully landed its expedition in Cuba. The expedition, it is said, is the one that the Three Friends attempted to land when pursued by a Spanish gunboat and left at No Name Key, from which place it was taken last Friday by the Dauntless. The cargo, it is said, consisted of four hundred thousand cartridges and 1,040 rifles, some dynamite, one twelve-pound rapid-firing Hotchkiss gun, medicine, etc. Fifty men were carried aboard the vessel.

Drowned in Chesapeake Bay.

Baltimore special: Two lives were lost as the result of a collision in the Chesapeake Bay. The Merchants and Miners steamer Howard from Boston and Norfolk, crashed into the tug Joseph T. Wilson of the Virginia Dredging Company, and sunk her. The engineer, John C. Chilrus, 54 years old, and Charles C. Ghappell, aged 17, son of the captain of the tug, were drowned. The captain and the other members of the crew clung to the mudscows, which were in tow of the tug, until rescued. Chilrus leaves a widow and four children in Norfolk.

Editors Taking Corn.

The following notice is published conspicuously in several Kansas country newspapers, and referred to editorially: "Corn is legal tender. We have a large amount due on subscription. We will allow 20 cents a bushel for corn on both old and new subscription. Bring on your corn." One paper in Northern Kansas has been forced to build several cribs as a result of this notice.

Condition of Ohio Crops.

A special from Columbus (O) says: The report of the State Board of Agriculture, for the first of January, showing the condition of crops in this State, states that the wheat crop has been badly injured already by freezing and thawing weather, with no snow protection to speak of. The condition of the growing crop compared with a full average, is rated at 88 per cent.

Slew Two Brothers.

While visiting at their country house in Clarendon County, South Carolina, Ralph Deschamps shot Thomas Rhame through the heart and then mortally wounded Frank Rhame, his brother. Deschamps is a son of a State Senator. The Rhames are of a colonial family and are lawyers, planters and politicians. The cause of the tragedy is a mystery.

Shot at His Wife Five Times.

James Bracken, a butcher at Petersburg, near Youngstown, Ohio, and his wife separated two months ago. Bracken called at her home Thursday, and when she refused to return with him he emptied five chambers of a revolver at her. None of the bullets took effect. Bracken was arrested.

Wanamaker Defeated.

Harrisburg special: The Republican joint caucus nominated Boies Penrose for United States Senator to succeed Cameron, on the first ballot. The vote was, Penrose, 133; Wanamaker, 75; scattering, 3; absent, 4.

Consuls to Confer.

It is reported in Havana that all the United States Consuls in Cuba will successively come to Havana for a conference with Gen. Fitzhugh Lee, the Consul General.

Five Miners Killed.

Five miners, Martin E. Royan and Joe Cox, white; Tom Curry, William Bishop and Simon Pitty, colored, were instantly killed in a mine explosion at Alderson, I. T.

Disastrous Fire.

Another disastrous fire has occurred at Vera Cruz, Mexico, destroying factories and business blocks to the value of $200,000.

HOUSE REPORTERS.

MARVELS OF ACCURACY AND OF PROMPTNESS.

How Record of Debates in Congress Is Made—Reporters Able to Take Notes Under Any Circumstances, Often 'Mid Scenes of Greatest Confusion.

Not Any Easy Work.

Washington correspondence:

WHEN a member of the House of Representatives rises in his place to deliver a few remarks, which he intends later to distribute among an admiring constituency, an official stenographer is at hand to take down the words of the statesman, which next morning appear duly set forth on the printed pages of the Congressional Record. When the reporter has taken down about 1,000 words he retires, his place being filled by another to continue the work. The first man goes into a room and dictates into a phonograph the "English" of his stenographic notes and returns to the floor. An amanuensis then transcribes the report of the speech from the phonograph to typewritten paper, which is revised by the stenographer, and goes to the government printer to be printed in the Record. The routine is thus continued among the five reporters. This, in brief, is the system of reporting speeches, the most perfect of any system in use in any national legislative body in the world.

The adoption of an official system of congressional reporting in 1848-9 was due to the one fact, more than any other, that the phonetic shorthand of Isaac Pitman, invented in its crudest form in 1837, and rapidly improved during the years immediately following, furnished a reporting instrument vastly superior to the prior stenographic systems in simplicity, in ease of acquisition, and in adaptation to rapid note taking. The introduction of this system into the United States about 1844, in connection with the "spelling reform" agitation, was the means of educating a new brood of reporters, most of them bright, progressive young men, who were soon able to surpass in shorthand skill the representatives of the older systems.

So it happened that when, through congressional subsidies to leading newspapers of Washington, quasi-official corps of reporters were introduced into the Senate and the House, they were composed almost entirely of Pitmanic writers, who represented in their work a new era in the history of shorthand. Subsidies soon gave place to formal contracts for complete reports, and the Globe, which in the days of Andrew Jackson and later had been a leading political organ, became in 1848-9, and continued until 1873, under what in those days were deemed liberal contracts, the official repository of the debates.

Reporters not strictly officers of Congress, but hired by the publishers of the Globe (their appointments, however, requiring the approval of the Speaker, or of the printing committee of the Senate), were admitted to the floor to take full notes of the proceedings, which were printed at the office of the Globe, in a building on Pennsylvania avenue, between 3d and 4½ streets, which is still standing.

In 1873 the publishers of the Globe failed to obtain a renewal of their contract, and the two Houses took under their sole control both the reporting and the printing of the debates. The "Congressional Globe" gave place to the "Congressional Record." The reporters became in a thorough sense officers of Congress, and their reports, like other government work, were thereafter published at the government printing office, the Record department of which is now one of its largest divisions.

Importance of the Work.

The official reporters of the House of Representatives are appointees of the Speaker; but their tenure of office is not dependent upon the alternations and fluctuations of partisan majorities. In 1873, when their official status was established, Mr. Blaine, then Speaker, took the lead in placing the official reporting upon a civil service basis. He was able to appreciate the demands of reporting work. His experience as member and Speaker had familiarized him with the peculiar difficulty and responsibility of congressional reporting. He recognized that efficient reporting service could not be obtained if the official reporters were liable to displacement for partisan reasons at the end of every two years.

So, in appointing as official reporters of the House gentlemen who had been rendering satisfactory service as reporters of the Globe, he declared that the officers thus appointed should be regarded as removable only for cause. What was thus possibly a mere dictum of Mr. Blaine's was subsequently made a rule of the House, which, however, would of course prove nugatory but for the daily exhibition of efficient services which it insures.

The difficulty of the work done by the official reporters of the House is conceded, not only by all who from day to day observe the proceedings, but by the opinion of the reporting profession throughout the country. For instance, the late Andrew J. Graham, whose shorthand system is practiced by so many able reporters, declared in print that there was probably no more difficult reporting in the world than that of the House of Representatives; and Mr. Benn Pitman, the greatest rival of Mr. Graham as a shorthand author and publisher, has said that "after listening as I did on one or two occasions to the debates, with their interruptions, catch remarks, asides, doubtful cheers and unquestioned jeers, and afterward reading the report, I felt that if there was one feat to be accomplished in this world more difficult than another it was to make an accurate report of the proceedings of the American House of Representatives."

The peculiar difficulty of this work arises from a number of different causes. The rapid utterance of many members is by no means the principal trouble, though a representative body recruited from leading men of every State and neighborhood must, of course, contain striking instances of the volubility to which the people of each locality are accustomed in the court room and on the platform. The fact that the so-called "reporters' desk" can never be used by the reporters while taking notes, because from no fixed point in the House can any one hear all the various speakers who may rise in different parts of the hall, requires that the reporter shall be ever on the move, or at least ever ready to move, as the tempestuous waves of debate flow in one direction or another.

With notebook in hand (no comfortable desk facilitating his work) he must pass quickly from one part of the hall to another, writing not only as he stands, but as he walks. Of course the babel of confusion on the floor which strikes every visitor to the House gallery makes the reporter's task of hearing at times extremely difficult. And when, as often happens, hot and angry words are flung from member to member, the reporter (cool, if possible, while others are full of excitement) must strain every nerve that he may not lose a syllable of the wordy battle, for at any moment some stern voice asserting itself above the disorder may cry out, "Mr Speaker, I call the gentleman to order and demand that his words be taken down," which means that the words which have been "taken down" under the most trying circumstances are to be instantly written out by the official reporter and read in the presence of the House.

The variety of subjects discussed, with their local, literary or historical allusions, requires that the reading and intelligence of the reporter should be as broad as that of the member. The physical and mental strain which the work entails continues sometimes without let up for many hours; and the product of work performed under conditions so severe is blazoned the next morning in cold print before every eye—subject, if erroneous, to public correction. Yet the corrections generally are few and trivial. Throwing out of consideration the correction of votes, which, being mere transcripts of the clerk's record, the official reporters are not responsible for, and throwing out also corrections of typogaphical errors, there is scarcely one correction a month. It may well be doubted whether any work of similar character, even though done under less trying conditions, can show so small a percentage of reporting errors and so clean a record of habitual and amazing accuracy.

In February, 1894, a debate on Hawaiian affairs occurred in the House lasting five and a half hours, during which the stenographers took down 63,000 words, keeping up an average speed of 200 words a minute, probably the greatest piece of reporting ever accomplished.

The French Chamber of Deputies is a far less difficult body to report than the House of Representatives of the United States, one special reason being that the member addressing the Chamber speaks from the tribune, like a preacher in a pulpit, instead of here, there, anywhere, as in the House. But in France it takes nearly thirty men to do the work done by five in the American House. Every word in the Chamber of Deputies is taken down by three sets of men checking each other. This is made necessary on account of the inferiority of the French shorthand, and the lack of individual dexterity, in comparison with the extreme speed and accuracy of the congressional reporters.

The English House of Commons is not now, and never has been, reported verbatim. The Hansard report is partly made up from newspaper compilations, and is not published for several days after the proceedings take place. Some of England's greatest men, among them Gladstone, have several times made efforts to secure the adoption of a system similar to the American, and a committee of the House of Commons is now again considering the matter. There are a few men in England who are sufficiently skillful shorthand writers, but it would take several years of training to make a corps as invincible and handy as that of either house of the American Congress.

In Germany the debates are officially reported, but there, too, as in France, the note takers cannot make a strictly verbatim report. They rely on each other for assistance in patching out a rapid speaker, and the debates are not printed on the morning after the delivery.

BACK AT WASHINGTON

CONGRESS AGAIN RESUMES ITS LABORS.

Senate Joins with the House in Opposing Death Penalty for Certain Crimes—House Is Interested in the Loud Postal Bill.

The Routine Work.

After its two weeks' recess Congress has again assembled.

The Senate Tuesday passed the House bill abolishing the death penalty in a large number of cases. The measure is in the line of recent State laws abolishing capital punishment and applies the same principle to Federal offenses, although the change is not extended to a total abolition of the death penalty.

The House entered upon its work immediately after reassembling Tuesday by taking up the Loud bill to amend the laws relating to second-class mail matter. The whole day was devoted to general debate on the measure under a special order. Mr. Loud (Cal.), the author of the bill, was its champion on the floor, and Mr. Quigg (N. Y.) had charge of the opposition.

In the Senate Wednesday Cuba was the subject of a speech by Mr. Call. The House bill was passed to provide for the appointment by brevet of active or retired officers of the United States army. The bill providing free homesteads for bona fide settlers on public lands acquired from the Indians was taken up and debated at length. The joint resolution requesting the British Government to pardon Mrs. Florence Maybrick was indefinitely postponed. The Loud bill to amend the law relating to second-class mail matter was passed by the House after two days of debate. The most important provision of the bill denies the serial publications admission to the mails at 1 cent per pound rates.

The Pacific Railroad funding bill came up Thursday in the House under a special order which allows two days for general debate and one day for amendments and debate under the five-minute rule. A huge map of the roads, with their feeders, was hung up. There were only four speakers—Mr. Powers of Vermont, the chairman of the Pacific Railroad Committee, who opened with an exhaustive two-hour argument in support of the bill; Mr. Hubbard of Missouri, the minority member of the committee, who has charge of the opposition, and Messrs. Grow of Pennsylvania and Bell of Texas, who spoke respectively for and against the measure. The Senate had a long and busy session, passing a number of bills on the calendar, including several amendments to the law of navigation and also the bill authorizing the President to reappoint to the navy Commander Quackenbush, whose case has occasioned much controversy. The Senate adjourned until Monday.

OPPOSE FREE LANDS.

Government Should Not Buy Farms to Give Away.

A minority of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs is decidedly opposed to free lands for settlers. The report opposes the bill on the general grounds of the vast expense its adoption would entail upon the government. Commencing with the year 1889 the government has purchased 33,252,540 acres of land from the Indians, agreeing to pay $25,261,937 for it, besides $3,000,000 set apart as a trust fund for the benefit of the Indians of the Great Sioux reservation. "If," says the report, "all the land already opened to settlement upon Indian reservations heretofore ceded shall be taken up, the sum to be paid therefor by the settlers will be $35,353,006.86. This bill proposes to release the settlers from the payment of this sum."

The report calls attention to the fact that it was provided in the acts bearing upon those settlements with the different tribes of Indians that settlers should pay sufficient for the lands to reimburse the government for the money paid the Indians. Several million acres of land are embraced in these pending agreements.

The bill as it passed the House applied only to lands in Oklahoma, but by the amendments made by the Senate committee the provisions of the bill are extended to all ceded Indian lands, the amount being more than three times that contemplated in the bill as it passed the House. All the lands on the Indian reservation thus opened for settlement have been paid for by the government before the opening of the same, except in the case of the Cherokee outlet, where payment was to be made in installments, and the sum of $4,980,000 still remains unpaid, and in the case of the Great Sioux, Chippewa and Colville reservations, where the Indians are to be paid as the government shall receive money from the settlers upon disposal of the lands.

Another amendment proposed to the bill in effect requires that the government shall, upon releasing the settlers from payment of their obligations, pay the Indians for these lands the sum per acre which by law is now to be paid by the settlers. "If," says the report, "this amendment shall be adopted and the bill pass, the government would be called upon to pay in the future, including the amount not yet due in the Cherokee outlet purchase, a sum approximating $15,000,000."

The report calls attention to the fact that negotiations are in progress for the acquisition of other Indian lands, which are being conducted upon the policy that the government shall be reimbursed for its outlays.

Referring to the origin of the bill Senator Platt says in his report: "The excitement which preceded the opening of lands in Oklahoma will be still remembered, as will the mad rush scarcely controlled by government authorities to secure these lands upon the well understood conditions of payment for the same in addition to compliance with the provision of the homestead laws. In every appeal made to Congress for the opening of the lands of these reservations the argument that the government ought not to be put to the large expenditure required in the payment of the Indians for the relinquishment of their title was answered by those who were advocating and insisting upon the passage of bills for that purpose by saying that it was understood that the government should be reimbursed by the settlers."

WAR AGAINST TRUSTS

GOV. MATTHEWS SPEAKS EARNESTLY TO LEGISLATORS.

He Sharply Arraigns Evil Combinations of Capital—The Centennial Plan Opposed—Appeals for Aid and Sympathy for the Struggling Cubans.

Features of the Message.

Gov. Matthews' arraignment of trusts was loudly applauded in the joint session of the Legislature Friday. It took the Governor an hour and fifteen minutes to read his message, but the Senators and Representatives listened to it attentively.

Gov. Matthews called attention to the wide-spread business depression throughout the country, and urged economy in the conduct of public affairs. On the subject of State finances he announced that the State debt had been reduced during his administration $2,110,000, and that there had been effected a saving in the annual interest charges of $81,800. The present assessed valuation of property in the State for taxable purposes is $1,286,050,531. The total State debt is $6,720,615.12.

He congratulated the State on having got rid of "the evil of winter and continuous horse racing," and he said: "We can most sincerely tender our sympathies to the States afflicted with the demoralizing and disreputable influences which surround these so-called racing associations."

On the subject of the State institutions he called attention to the fact that, though he appointed for the prisons a non-partisan board of directors, these were removed and a strictly partisan board created. He showed that during his administration he had pardoned or paroled 115 prisoners, and granted thirty-two remissions of fine.

On the subject of public schools he urged the guarding of the common school fund; mentioned that the total enumeration of school children in 1896 was 734,640, and that the total revenue from all sources for the school year was $4,301,413.01. On the question of compulsory education he said: "I am convinced that a moderate and judicious law, compelling the attendance of children, say between the ages of 7 and 12, in the public, private or parochial schools for a certain number of months, say for four each year, could be enforced, and would be of great good to the State and nation."

He recommended that the State sanitary commission be discontinued, and the work it now does be taken up by a veterinary surgeon to be appointed by the Governor.

GOV. MATTHEWS.

Opposes the Centennial Scheme.

He does not indorse the scheme to hold a great State centennial celebration in 1900, and asked the members of the Legislature to consider seriously whether they would be justified in undertaking such an expensive enterprise.

He spoke vigorously to the question of an anti-trust law, citing the utterance of President Cleveland on the same subject. He said: "To every intelligent and unbiased citizen the fearfully dangerous power of combined wealth, for trust purposes, must be apparent, in that it is subversive of the principles upon which popular government is founded. The power of trusts is already alarming and enormous. If State laws can effectively deal with the subject, you cannot too speedily take such action as will limit, restrict or prohibit these powers."

He urged upon the legislators that some action be taken looking to an accounting with the Vandalia Railroad Company. He suggests that if it be found that there is money owing the State by the railroad company, as alleged, the attorney general be directed to collect it at once.

He devoted some time to a discussion of the contention as to the boundary line between the States of Indiana and Kentucky and disputed claims to a tract of land, known as Green River Islands, situated in the Ohio River. He reportes that the matter had been placed in the hands of a commission, which had made a report, which was confirmed and approved last May. The cost to Indiana of the commission, he showed, was $1,418, which he urged the Legislature to pay. He said he believed Green River Island, separated from Kentucky as it is by the Ohio River, should belong to Indiana and he announced that he had requested the Governor of Kentucky to submit a proposition for its cession to Indiana but he declined to entertain the suggestion. He says he is persuaded that it will in the near future be found wise that the transfer be made.

Appeals for the Cubans.

He concluded his message with an appeal in behalf of the struggling Cubans. He said in part:

"While you are peacefully assembled here under the benign influence of free government, and in full enjoyment of all that human liberty can bestow, there is a people, our closest neighbors, at this time engaged in a desperate and bloody struggle for freedom from a brutal and degrading despotism. These struggling patriots are animated with the same ambitions and aspirations that burned within the breasts of our fathers over 100 years ago. The patriots of Cuba are making a brave and earnest fight for freedom, and appeal to, nay, have the right to hope for, and receive, our warmest sympathy. Sympathy—even substantial aid—is more due from the American people than from any other on the face of the globe. Almost within the sound of the bell that rang out liberty throughout the land to the inhabitants thereof, almost within the shadow of the stars and stripes, the proud emblem of a nation's freedom, almost breathing the liberty-loving air wafted from our shores, we have aroused in their souls a longing for the blessings which we as a people exult in.

"Can we turn a deaf ear to their pleading? Should we not at least comfort and encourage them with words of sympathy? Do we not owe it in justice to ourselves to bid them God speed in their sacred cause, and to express the hope that soon the last vestige of a miserable and effete despotism shall be swept from the western hemisphere? The people of Indiana are brave and generous, and but one generation ago her sons sealed with their blood their sublime faith in free government and human liberty."

Board of Agriculture.

The State Board of Agriculture, consisting of the eight new members and eight holdover members, met at Indianapolis, Friday, and organized with the following officers:

President—C. B. Harris, Goshen.

Vice President—W. W. Stevens, Salem.

Secretary—Chas. F. Kennedy, Indianapolis.

Treasurer—E. J. Robinson, Indianapolis.

Superintendent—E. H. Feed, Newcastle.

Executive Committee—Aaron Jones, South Bend; Charles Downing, Greenfield; John L. Thompson, Gas City; Mason J. Niblack, Vincennes.

The Superintendents of the various departments of the State Fair were appointed as follows:

Admission, Aaron Jones; privileges, Charles Downing; speed, M. S. Claypool; draft and coach horses, James S. Sankey; light horses, John C. Haines; beef cattle, J. W. LaGrange; dairy cattle, H. B. Howland; dairy products, H. B. Howland; sheep, John L. Thompson; swine, H. J. Nolan; poultry, Knode Porter; arts, J. E. McDonald; horticulture, Mortimer Leveringg; agriculture, John L. Davis; mechanical, Warder W. Stevens; grandstand, Mason J. Niblack.

James M. Sankey was recommended to the Governor for appointment as live stock sanitary commissioner.

Minor State Items.

Walter Wagner of Streater, Ill., was run over and killed by a freight train at Cicero, near Noblesville. The deceased was 22 years old, and a glassblower by trade.

By the discharge of a Flobert rifle, given him Christmas against his father's wish, Ray Friend, aged 10 years, residing near Watson, shot himself in the eye and was instantly killed.

Miss Effie McClure, daughter of ex-County Treasurer W. T. McClure of Vincennes, fell dead from heart disease. She was home on a vacation from the Lincoln (Ill.) University.

Leander Young, and a companion, of Morristown, were playing Cuban and Spanish soldiers, firing paper wads from their guns at each other. Finally one wad tore the Young boy's leg badly at the calf. The wound will be hard to heal.

Larz Branson of Union Township, near Shelbyville, has procured the necessary papers to have his aged father committed to the insane asylum at Indianapolis. The condition of Branson is the result of being thrown from his buggy some months ago.

Mrs. George Joachim, wife of a Steuben County farmer, goes into strange trances, when she appears to suffer all the torments of Dante's hell. She is sane at times and attributes her condition to a divine afflatus. Her sufferings are horrible to those about her.

Rev. Hardeman, of the African M. E. Church of Greensburg, and family, were taken violently sick from gasoline poisoning. When neighbors were summoned and opened the door the house was filled with gas, it having escaped from the tanks attached to a gasoline cooking stove.

Amos Davenport, a prominent farmer near Kokomo, has suffered for years with a peculiar affliction of the eye. The other morning when Mr. Davenport arose from his bed the eye was gone. The missing optic was afterward found in the bed, it having fallen out during the night while he was asleep.

The 2-year-old child of David Gray, at Tampico, is dead from drinking carbolic acid. Mrs. Gray had been using the acid for toothache and placed the bottle on a shelf, as she thought, out of the child's reach. But the little fellow climbed upon a chair, secured the bottle and drank the contents, and an hour later was dead.

Noah Wagner of Blooming Grove, has a two-headed calf which is a departure from the usual line of freaks. It is a calf with a perfectly normal body. Just in front of its shoulders the neck divides into two, each bearing a perfectly developed head. The monstrosity is a week old and thriving. It seeks nourishment with either mouth indifferently.

At Shelbyville, Lora, the 9-year-old daughter of Dr. J. H. Sanford, was passing a number of boys who were firing shooting crackers, when one of them threw a cracker toward the child. It lodged in her cloak and took fire. Her garments were soon ablaze, and before they could be removed she was frightfully burned, and her condition is serious.

Rev. John J. Skiles, who has ministered to the Dunkard brethren about Pyrmon, near Delphi, left his home in Clay Township the other morning, and there is no clue to his whereabouts. Confiding people hold paper to the amount of probably $13,000, on which are the names of his brothers, who are wealthy farmers. It is said that the reverend has been speculating in reality.

John Bean, a farmer of Wayne Township, near Richmond, is the owner of a heifer that is attracting the interest of farmers and dairymen all over the State. The animal is 6 years old, and during the past year 500 pounds of butter have been churned from the milk given. A few months ago a test was made for seven days. In that time the cow gave 352½ pounds of milk, from which was derived 18¼ pounds of butter.

Governor Matthews has paroled Wm. E. Talbott of Clay County, a life prisoner, convicted in 1885 of murdering George Cancock, a saloon keeper of Brazil, and Mrs. Hannah Fromer, of Decatur, who murdered her husband in 1887, and was sent to the reformatory for life. Solomon Brush of Tipton, convicted of forgery; Charles Ashcraft, a burglar, of St. Joe County, and Arthur Councilier of Henry, convicted of larceny, were also paroled.

In the form of a New Year's gift the Muncie Electric Street Railway Company put on several men, laid off in October, and put wages of motormen and conductors back to the old scale, an increase of fourteen cents per day. On some lines motormen did the work of conductors also.

Little village of Smith's Valley is all excited over a grave robbery. The body of Mrs. Bradley, a colored woman, was taken out of the grave with hooks and carried away. The trustees of the cemetery offer a good reward to any one who will find the body. Fresh graves are being watched carefully at Smith's Valley.

Three masked boys in knee trousers held up a farmer named Dobson, just south of Muncie, and made him turn over $10. They pointed revolvers at him and said they had read Nick Carter's instructions to highwaymen in which they were told where to shoot. The boys chuckled over the success of their enterprise. They escaped capture.

Douglass H. Smith, a newspaper man of Terre Haute, is dead at the age of 30. He had been connected with the Express for ten or twelve years, at one time doing work on Evansville papers. He died of internal hemorrhage. He was a graduate of DePauw, and at the time of his death was preparing a libretto for the Bostonian Opera Company.

THE HOLE IN THE SEA.

Circles and bubbles atop of the waves
Where Jacky plunged through to the darkest of graves,
Down, down, deep down, far under the blue,
Making a splash that the sunlight danced through,
And it's marked in the log-book, the hole in the sea,
"Lat. South, 10.50; Long. West, 83."

Frock coats, and blue shirts, so clean and so neat,
And Jack dressed in canvas from his head to his feet,
Sewed up tight with canister, grape, and black shot,
To carry him straight to the burial lot
That's down, deep down, in the deep of the sea,
Where many a sailor and lubber there be!

"Many flying-jib down haul!" "Royal clewlines stand by!"
"Clew garnets and buntlines; all hands pull away!"
"Weather main and lee cro'jack-braces now haul!"
"Shake a leg there, my hearties, don't ye hear the pipe's call?"
Now the ship's all aback with the wind at her head,
And ready for quarters to bury the dead.

Frock coats on the weather, blue shirts on the lee,
Marines on the poop deck, a brave show to see.
And the sky pilot's dressed in his Sunday-best rig
And Jack's in his canvas, there, sewed up so trig.
All ready to plunge the gay sunlight through
And make bubbles and circles atop of the blue!

THE BATTLE OUTSIDE THE HEADS.

One morning, as Jack Delafield was breakfasting on board the cruiser Idaho, a telegram was handed him which he calmly proceeded to open; but after glancing over its contents, the placid serenity of his countenance gave way to a look of excitement. Jumping up, he shouted to his lazier messmates who had not yet emerged from their staterooms, "Boys, the war is on!"

In a second, heads were thrust out, some of the possessors even venturing into the ward room considerably more en deshabille than custom or regulations permitted. But Delafield's telegram was of so much interest and importance that such trifling conventionalities were forgotten, and his curious brother officers crowded round him, clamoring loudly for the news.

"Listen," said the lieutenant, "I'll read it to you:

"'Washington, D. C., Oct. 20, 189—.

"'To Lieutenant John Delafield, U. S. N., U. S. S. Idaho, San Francisco Harbor: Regard yourself detached from Idaho. Proceed immediately to the Mare Island Navy Yard. Take command of the Bainbridge, and prepare for active service at earliest possible moment. Commandant ordered to place at your disposal every available means to hasten work.

"'HULBURT, Secretary.'

"What do you fellows think of that?" said Jack.

"Lucky dog!"

"Wish I were in your place."

They all seemed pleased at Delafield's stroke of luck. Fortune was truly smiling on him, for he had been selected for this hazardous and important duty out of half a hundred other officers of his own rank, each one as eager as himself to command the little craft, the Bainbridge, of which wonders were expected.

He had been chosen by the Secretary of the Navy and had received his preparatory orders, which were to the effect that he would be retained on board the Idaho until hostilities were imminent, when he would be given his new command. Meanwhile the work of fitting her for sea had been pushed at the navy yard with all dispatch. The Bainbridge was the first of our new semi-submarine magnetic torpedo boats, those marvels of American ingenuity and skill.

Jack started for the navy yard at once, and on arriving reported to the commandant, Admiral Dana, who told him in his bluff, kindly way to go ahead and fit out his craft as rapidly as possible, taking whatever was necessary for her equipment without the usual formalities, adding cheerily: "We can attend to all that after you come back, Delafield."

As he stands there before the admiral receiving his instructions, let us glance at the officer upon whom, perhaps, will hang the result of the battle very soon to be fought outside the Heads. Tall, erect, and finely formed, Lieutenant Delafield impresses one instantly as a man of no mean physical strength. His face gives evidence of courage, firmness and great will power—just the attributes, in fact, which should most properly belong to the man ordered to command an unknown quantity like the Bainbridge, yet to be tried by the test of actual battle. When he leaves the office of the admiral, his elastic step and easy carriage show that his task has not overburdened him with anxiety, but, on the contrary, indicate confidence in himself and assurance of his ability to carry the work before him to a successful issue.

On his way down to the wharf where the Bainbridge lay, he passed groups of officers eagerly discussing the latest news. All had some friendly or congratulatory remark for him; but, scarcely stopping to reply, he hurried on board his new command. The Bainbridge was one of the latest additions to our fleet, and while it was anticipated that she would accomplish great things, the only real test had come sooner than any one would have prophesied. Workmen were swarming over her in such numbers that she resembled a human bee hive. Her length was probably in the neighborhood of one hundred and fifty feet, but her narrow beam and sharply sloping sides made her appear like a needle floating on the water. She was painted an olive green, to secure invisibility at night. The most prominent objects in sight on her deck were a low conning tower and two elongated hatches, one forward and one aft. There were for the disappearing magnetic torpedo guns, and were arranged to protect the torpedoes until they were needed, at which time the guns were elevated by electricity, trained on the enemy and fired, the whole operation requiring but a few seconds. The motive power of the craft was also electricity, obtained from improved Tesla storage batteries of the latest type, giving the boat a speed of forty knots an hour.

Within two days Lieutenant Delafield had completed the outfit of the Bainbridge, and had stored on board four of those terrible engines of destruction, the magnetic torpedoes, which were of the ordinary cigar shape, having the energy for propulsion stored in a heavy fly-wheel revolving in a longitudinal, vertical plane at a rate of ten thousand revolutions a minute. This application of the principle of the gyroscope gave them an almost unerring directness of path under water, but, besides this, within the secret chambers were concealed magnets of great strength, which drew the torpedoes straight onward toward their prey. No manoeuvering, however skillful, on the part of the commander of a ship attacked could avail against the relentless power of these magnets, and once a torpedo was launched fairly in the direction of an enemy's vessel, her doom was only a matter of seconds. When the intended target was struck, the explosion of one hundred and fifty pounds of gun cotton would fulfill the mission of the torpedo, and cause the proud battle ship, stricken in some vital part, to reel back under the shock, then perhaps make a feeble effort to escape, but in vain. In a moment only a seething, bubbling spot covered with wreckage in the midst of the ocean would mark the grave of a Goliath of the deep, done to death by this marine David.

Little wonder then that Delafield had every confidence in the Bainbridge. But his spirits fell when he read in the newspapers, a few mornings after, that a large fleet of the enemy had left its rendezvous and was proceeding in the direction of San Francisco. This fleet consisted of eight first-class battle ships, ten armored cruisers, together with twenty protected cruisers and smaller vessels. Against this army the United States could only bring the battle ships Oregon (flag), Iowa, Massachusetts, Indiana and Texas; the armored cruisers Idaho, New York, Maine and Brooklyn; the protected cruisers Olympia, Charleston, Columbia, Newark, Minneapolis, Philadelphia and San Francisco, as well as several gunboats. This fleet was anchored in the bay, cleared for action and ready to proceed to sea as soon as carrier pigeons from the scouts should bring the news of the approach of the hostile vessels. Near by were the coast defense monitors Monterey, Puritan, Terror, Amphitrite Miantonomoh, and also Delafield's torpedo boat, the Bainbridge. Jack had gone on board the flagship Oregon as soon as he had anchored after his run down from the navy yard, in order to report to Admiral Woodbridge and to receive his orders. The admiral told him that it was his intention to go outside, meet the enemy, and, if possible, cripple him to such an extent as to prevent the bombardment of the city, and that the Bainbridge and coast defense vessels were to be held in readiness to guard the entrance to the harbor and cover the retreat of the fleet in case it might be compelled to withdraw.

When Jack left the admiral's cabin he was confident he would have an opportunity to add fame to his own name and fresh laurels to the long list of daring naval achievements accomplished by John Paul Jones, Decatur, Preble, Bainbridge (for whom his little vessel was named), Biddle, Rodgers, Farragut, Cushing and a host of others. Throughout the fleet that day there was an expectant hush as of a gladiator resting previous to some mighty effort. All preparations were completed, final letters written, and farewells said, for, though each officer and man hoped for a favorable outcome, every one, even to the meanest powder by, knew that the morrow would most probably bring a struggle so terrible and deadly that many of them would never return.

During the early morning twilight of the next day a pigeon fluttered wearily down to the cote on the flagship, and in alighting set a shrill electric bell to ringing. This faithful little messenger had arrived with its momentous tidings in the shape of a tiny note in a quill secured firmly under its wing. This was soon detached and conveyed to the admiral. In less time than it takes to tell it, the red and white signal lights were flashing out the order to get under way. Soon the rattle of chains was heard as the anchors were hove up; and when daylight broke the fleet was seen steaming majestically out through the Golden Gate, the Oregon leading. Everything was ready for action except opening the magazines, getting out the ammunition, and loading the guns. All hands were intently scanning the horizon ahead and on each bow to catch the first glimpse of the smoke of the enemy's fleet. The silence, punctuated only by the rhythmic throb of the engines, was at last broken by "Sail ho!" from the upper fighting top.

"Where away?" replied the officer on the deck.

"One point and a half on the port bow, sir—smoke!"

"Beat to general quarters" is instantly ordered. The men spring to the guns, which were at once loaded; the turrets are trained from side to side and the guns elevated and depressed to see that everything is working smoothly. The alarm proves to be a false one, for the vessel is made out to be the San Francisco, one of the scouts, steaming in at full speed. She runs close to the flagship while the admiral questions her commanding officer regarding the numbers and course of the enemy, for the purpose of verifying the pigeon message. The hostile fleet is not more than twenty miles ahead! Again the watching is resumed, and within an hour the smokes of a large number of vessels are made out. The fires are forced by powerful fans, and the increased speed of the fleet rapidly lessens the intervening distance. The supreme struggle is at hand. Our ships steam on in column, ready for the bloody fray.

To recount in detail the action of that day would be to chronicle daring deeds, heroic acts and bravery akin to rashness, but all of no avail against such overwhelming odds.

As night fell, Delafield, from the Bainbridge, and the officers on the coast defense vessels, inside the bar, sighted the remnant of our fleet standing in, still stubbornly fighting and protecting the weaker or more disabled ships. Shortly the enemy was uncovered, and the monitors opened fire, compelling an abandonment of the harassing pursuit. The enemy remained just out of range, while the fearful wreck of what remained of Admiral Woodbridge's forces crawled slowly into the harbor.

As the Oregon, guarding the rear, passed the Bainbridge, the admiral signalled briefly but significantly: "Do your duty."

The night is dark and windy. An ominous stillness in the air presages an on-coming gale. No moon or stars are shining to aid the enemy, but instead, the sky is covered with hard, leaden-gray clouds, and a low bank of fog is sweeping in from the westward.

The conditions are propitious, and Delafield prepares for his dash. He takes the Bainbridge close inshore through Bonita Channel, and barely escapes being caught by one of the enemy's gunboats; but, turning on more current, he rushes silently ahead and clear of danger. When almost within hearing of the breakers on Duxbury Reef, he makes a wide detour in order to approach from seaward, for from this direction an attack is hardly to be expected. Nevertheless, he has to go a considerable distance out to reach a favorable position.

He reaches his station at a quarter past eleven o'clock, and in another quarter of an hour the monitors will open fire toward that flank of the enemy opposite to which is Delafield. They will keep up this cannonade for ten minutes, to effect a diversion. As soon as this firing has ceased, Jack's work will begin.

Boom! bang! go the great 10-inch and 12-inch guns. It is a trying time for Jack, but he sees the effect of the ruse, and is again congratulating himself on his luck. The searchlights are all playing inshore of him, the enemy entirely oblivious of the fact that danger is lurking in their rear. Half past eleven! As suddenly as it began, the firing ceases, and Delafield, taking his stand in the little conning tower, orders the crew to their stations.

Slowly the Bainbridge starts ahead, then faster and faster she goes, until, fairly flying, she brings into view the weaker vessels forming the outer line. But Jack disdains such pigmy prey. Safely he flies past the gunboats, but not quickly enough to avoid discovery. On he goes, fearlessly taking the Bainbridge straight toward the battle ships.

"Stand by," he sings out down the voice tubes to the torpedo compartments, and back comes the hearty answer: "All ready, sir."

Now he is but a short distance from the nearest ship. He turns two electric switches and sees the torpedo guns elevated and trained. Then amid a shower of shells he presses a firing key, and the forward torpedo is launched and speeds on its errand of destruction. No need to watch the effect; the magnet is as sure as fate.

Meantime, the Bainbridge's course is changed, so that she may run parallel to the column of battle ships, and the empty gun is lowered. A second later the after-torpedo is on its way for the next battle ship, and Delafield has done half his work.

Long ere this the brave little craft has been the center of a smother of foaming water, lashed into impotent fury by the crashing, bursting shells. But her great speed saves her from annihilation. She tears along with searchlights flashing on her like an aurora and with the waves dashing wildly over her.

Two more of the enemy's most powerful ships sent to the bottom complete her errand. The only damage on the Bainbridge has happened to Delafield himself. A piece of shell has inflicted an ugly wound in his shoulder, and though exhausted by the intense strain and weak from loss of blood, he steers his victorious vessel into the protection of the harbor, then falls senseless on deck.

Not long after, while recovering his strength, Jack received a very official-looking document covered with formidable seals. It contained the information that he had received the thanks of Congress and that he had been promoted to the rank of captain for his gallantry in sinking four of the enemy's ships, thereby causing a withdrawal of their fleet and preventing the bombardment of the city of San Francisco.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Petrified Bodies.

Three bodies, all of which were more or less petrified, were taken from St. Philomena's cemetery, on Troy Hill, Allegheny, yesterday, by the workmen who are transferring the bodies to the new cemetery at Homewood. One of the bodies was that of a girl, about 10 years of age. All of them had been buried about thirty years. The bodies of the man and woman were petrified from the thighs down.

The best specimen of the three was that of the girl, which was in a complete state of petrification. A peculiarity about the body, however, was that the limbs were hollow, a condition that is very seldom found. In removing the remains from the grave the workmen, who were careless, broke the body in two. All three were placed in a box and taken to the new cemetery, where they were reinterred.

The body of a man was also found upon which there was a superfluous growth of hair. That of the head was almost nine inches long, while the beard was fully a foot in length. The hair had a vigorous and lifelike appearance and had undoubtedly attained its growth after the body had been dead.

On account of so many sight-seers congregating in the cemetery, a rule has been passed to exclude all persons except those who have first secured a permit entitling them to watch the work. The undertakers of Allegheny are now the principal spectators.—Pittsburg Times.

...AISED BANK CHECKS

HOW SHREWD PROFESSIONALS DO THEIR WORK.

State of Affairs Long Known to Bankers and Secret Service Men Is Made Known to the Public—All Safety Devices Are "Beaten."

Great Skill Shown.

The recent arrest of the ringleaders of regular check-raising and forging syndicates has been a revelation to the public, says the New York World, but has made generally known a state of affairs which bankers and secret-service men have been aware of for many years.

The Government offered a reward many years ago for a writing ink which could not be removed by acids or other chemicals. There were hundreds of inks offered and not one of them met the requirement. Those that actually were indelible were worthless for writing and would not flow, while the best of those that would flow were only indelible when allowed to lie a long time on a porous paper.

What is true as to ink is true as to the thousand and one mechanical devices for protecting commercial paper which have been put upon the market. There are four or five firms in New York alone which have made from a million to four million dollars each by the manufacture and sale of articles of this kind, not one of which but has been "beaten" scores of times, and not one of which is of the slightest value except as against the efforts of the merest tyros in the check-raising industry.

So profitable has become the forging and check-raising industry that capitalized syndicates—such as the Valentine gang or the Becker gang—have deliberately engaged in it and have stolen great sums in an incredibly short time.

Carelessness in making out checks is, of course, a fruitful source of crime, as in many instances the possibility of making a safe alteration is glaringly before the eye. The temptation has brought many a young man to ruin, but the losses from this source are trifling compared with those from the regular professional check-raisers. These gentry have an equipment of tools and chemicals as complete in their way as the tools used by burglars, and the manufacture of these articles, especially for criminal purposes, is quite as extensive as is the manufacture of burglar's tools. The outfit consists of three or four kinds of acids for removing ink; all the various cutting machines used for cutting out figures in the body of the check, a device at one time supposed to be invulnerable, but one of the easiest of all to beat; a complete supply of twenty different kinds of delicate brushes and a palette of artists' colors.

These colors and brushes are used to restore the lines in tinted paper after the tint has been taken out by the acid in removing the ink. Great sums of money, by the way, have been spent in the manufacture of this tinted paper—money entirely thrown away, as the knaves have processes which restore the tint wherever their operations may have destroyed it, and restoring it so perfectly as to utterly defy detection.

The nippers are used especially to beat the figures out of the check or draft by the various machines made for that purpose. With the nippers which are curiously and delicately pointed, the minutest particle of paper can be picked up and deftly handled. The width of the figure is measured, and then the expert knows, provided he does not recognize it at a glance, which he generally does, just exactly what machine cut it. With his own corresponding machine he cuts the same figure from the same kind of paper—for a stock of every variety of paper used is part of his equipment—and fills in the cut-out figures by the aid of the nippers and his materials for dressing and hardening down the surface after his work is done.

UNITED STATES MAIL FLAG.

The Beautiful Pennant Now Flown by a Dozen American Vessels.

An official Government flag is seen in this country nowhere but in the port of New York, and on the high seas only between that port and the cities of La Guayra, Venezuela; Havana, Cuba; and Tuxpan, Mexico. It is the pennant of the ocean mail service, and flies upon the mizzenmasts of twelve subsidized American vessels carrying the United States mails by contract. It consists of a red field with a blue border, having the American eagle in blue and the words "United States Mail" in white letters. It measures fifteen feet long and has been in use a little over two years. Last year it was seen also in San Francisco along the Pacific route to Panama and Hong Kong, but the contract with the steamship lines that bore it was discontinued.

THE MAIL FLAG.

The St. Louis, together with the New York and the Paris, also of the American line, and already carrying the mails, but not under contract, have lately begun service under contract to Southampton, England. Later the St. Paul, of the same line, will be added to the contract list, making in all sixteen vessels flying Uncle Sam's postal flag.

Tabby Does the Housework.

Bildad is the name to which a cat belonging to Miss Angie Eddis, of Stockton, Cal., answers. Miss Eddis owns a little ranch just outside the city, which she cares for herself, and also comforts her crippled father and exercises a supervisory care over Bildad. Miss Angie has a dozen fine bearing almond trees that bring in no inconsiderable amount, and Bildad is invaluable to her in taking care of the nuts. Every morning in falling time Miss Angie sets a large basket out in the orchard and Bildad begins work, frisking about back and forth under the trees, picking up the plump brown nuts, never ceasing till the basket is full, when he goes in, letting his mistress know, by pulling at her apron, that he needs help. Aside from thus relieving Miss Angie of all the trouble of gathering the nuts, Bildad's services are called into requisition to protect them from rats, which otherwise would begin to ravage the trees as soon as the young almonds show evidences of maturity.

Another one of Bildad's accomplishments is that of churning, at which he is quite an adept. Old Mr. Eddis, who has quite an inventive faculty, has manufactured a little churn, with a unique, light-running treadle, upon which Bildad mounts and treads away with the most praiseworthy industry till the work is done. So expert has the cat become that he can tell by the sound of the milk when the butter has come, and strikes with his paw on the little bell which is attached to the churn to let his mistress know.

Try It Yourself.

A very curious fact is the impossibility of moving your eye while examining the reflection of that organ in a mirror. It is really the most movable part of the face; yet, if you hold your head fixed and try to move your eye while watching it, you cannot do it—even the one-thousandth of an inch. Of course, if you look at the reflection of the nose, or any other part of the face, your eye must move to see it. But the strange thing is that the moment you endeavor to perceive the motion the eye is fixed. This is one of the reasons why a person's expression as seen by himself in a glass is quite different from what it is when seen by others.

Fascinating Hungarians.

Princess De Caraman-Chimay's elopement with a Hungarian gypsy band leader has turned the attention of Paris away from the similar case of Palikaris Ferko, who died there the other day. He appeared as conductor of a Hungarian band at the 1889 exhibition, and, though he was small and ugly, fascinated a rich unmarried girl of respectable parentage. She took the violinist to live with her, bought off his wife for $4,000, and spent $200,000 a year on him, till her relatives stopped her by obtaining a consell judiclare for her. She still had money enough, however, to enable him to drink himself to death.

It is because the press gallery is just underneath the ladies' gallery in the House of Commons that the parliamentary journalist is said to be only a little lower than the angels.

NELSON DINGLEY.

Talked of for Secretary of the Treasury Under McKinley.

Nelson Dingley, Congressman from Maine, has made some long leaps toward national prominence during the past year, notably as the author of the tariff bill which bears his name. Mr. Dingley is talked of for Secretary of the Treasury in the McKinley cabinet.

Mr. Dingley comes of an old Yankee family and was born in Maine 65 years ago. He is slight of figure, thin of face, sharp of eye, quick of speech. He is not rugged, and some people have thought Mr. Dingley not physically able to stand the wear and tear of the treasury, the office which killed Folger and Manning and Windom.

NELSON DINGLEY.

"There is nothing in this world besides my wife and children that I am more fond of," said Gov. Dingley to Correspondent Wellman, "than journalism. When I was in college I edited the college paper. I was also a correspondent for a number of city papers, and after a bit the editors got in the habit of writing to me for articles. Pen work came easy to me. Public speaking I acquired when I had to, but I took to the pen as a duck takes to water. After I left college I studied law, and studied it thoroughly, not because I intended to practice, but I knew the value of that training for the mind. I advise every young man who can do so to study law, no matter whether he intends to practice it or not. It is an education in itself. I was admitted to the bar, but never hung out my shingle. About the first thing I did was to buy a half interest in the Lewiston Journal, then a weekly paper. I was an editor for twenty-five years before I came to Congress."

During all that quarter of a century of newspaper making, first on a weekly and then on a successful daily, Mr. Dingley was writing editorials on economic topics. The currency, the tariff, the revenue, the expenditures of the government were his favorite topics. He studied them from the bottom up. He read every book of value that was ever written on these topics. Of course he was not long in getting into politics. First he was sent to the State Legislature, where he made the acquaintance and formed the friendship of Mr. Blaine, a friendship which continued as long as Mr. Blaine lived. He was Speaker of the State House of Representatives for several years. More than twenty years ago he was Governor of Maine. In 1881 he was elected to Congress to take the place of William P. Frye, who had been promoted to the Senate. He has been in the House ever since.

Cultivate Small Farms.

Japan, and not France or Belgium, would appear to be the land of petite culture. According to a recent American bulletin a couple of acres is considered a large tract for farming purposes. Most of the farms are smaller, and on a little plot a surprising variety of crops is cultivated—a few square feet of wheat, barley, maize and millet; a plot of beans, perhaps ten feet wide by twenty feet long, a similar area of potatoes and peas, and a patch of onions "about as big as a grave;" beetroot, lettuce, turnips, sweet potatoes and other crops occupy the rest of the area. The farmer examines his growing crops every morning, just as an engineer inspects his machinery, and if anything is wrong he puts it right. If a weed appears in the bean patch he pulls it up; if a hill of potatoes or anything else fails it is at once replanted. When he cuts down a tree he always plants another. As soon as one crop is harvested the soil is worked over, manured and forthwith resown to another crop. It is estimated that nine-tenths of the agricultural land of Japan is devoted to rice, and as this is a crop requiring much water the paddy fields are banked up into terraces, one above the other, and divided off into small plots twenty-five feet or thirty feet square, with ridges of earth between them to prevent the water from flowing away when they are flooded. All farming lands are irrigated by a system that is a thousand years old. Some of the ditches are walled up with bamboo wicker work and some with tiles and stone. Nearly half the total population of Japan is engaged in agriculture. Silk and tea, the two chief exports of the country, are raised almost entirely by the work of women.—London Times.

WHEN LIFE IS YOUNG.

How Pedagogues Made It Miserable for Youngsters Years Ago.

Cruel and unusual punishments are discountenanced nowadays in civilized countries. One must go to the Spanish possessions, or to some barbarous part of the world, in order to find cruelty in regular practice by recognized authority. It was not always thus, of course. Even so late as the early part of the present century a variety of tortures were commonly applied by school teachers to their pupils. Many of these were exceedingly ingenious, and very distressing, but an impression then prevailed that they were necessary to bring out the latent virtues of youth which might otherwise remain undeveloped.

KNOCKING HEADS TOGETHER.

The United States Bureau of Education has recently had made a number of large drawings representing some of the tortures which used to be applied in schools, and from these accompanying pictures are made. From the present day point of view they are decidedly interesting, and may well cause any old boy of these times to congratulate himself that he was born so late. Consider, for example, the case of the unfortunate youth who is kneeling on dried peas, or of that other little chap, who is trying with all his might to stand on one foot in a waste basket.

History has preserved the memory of a pedagogue named Hanherle, who died about the middle of the eighteenth century in a village of Swabia. It is recorded of him that during a period of service extending over 51 years and 7 months, he inflicted 911,527 blows with the rod, 124,011 blows with the cane, 20,989 raps with the ruler, 136,715 blows on the hand, 10,235 blows over the mouth, 7,905 boxes on the ear, 1,118,800 raps on the head, and 22,703 "notabenes" with Bible, catechism and singing book. He made 777 boys to kneel on peas and 613 to sit on a three-cornered piece of wood, not to mention various extraordinary punishments which he invented himself. The worthy school teacher was a methodical man, and these notes are taken from his own business memoranda.

HORSING.

It was not until the latter part of the eighteenth century that popular dissatisfaction with this method of education began to grow. There was bodily exercise in the schools of these days, it is true, but the teachers received the benefit of it, and the pupils served merely as parts of the "apparatus." The latter, in England, were obliged to have their hair frizzled, with powder and pomade; they wore embroidered coats, knee breeches, silk stockings, and a sword at the side. No costume can be imagined more inconsistent with the natural activity of children or better calculated to cause them discomfort.

The notion that children have rights which grown people are bound to respect is rather new. Boxing the ears was a favorite method of punishing children up to the time of the present generation, but it has gone out of favor, owing partly to the fact now recognized that it is apt to cause deafness. Striking the tips of the fingers with a ruler was another torture, very painful.

In oriental countries the bastinado, applied with strap or rod to the soles of the feet, is a favorite form of punishment in schools. The ancients were great whippers. In Sparta there were ceremonial occasions when boys, merely for glory and as a quasi-religious rite, were whipped so severely that they died; and such a death was considered very glorious. Horace, the Latin poet, mentions a famous pedagogue of his day as "the flogging Orbilius."

Bills 45 and 46

We publish today, Senate Bills. No., 45 and 46, introduced this week into the Senate at Indianapolis, by Senator Nusbaum. From this it would appear he is hard at work in the interests of his people. We presume he has given these subjects a good deal of attention and would no doubt be pleased to have any additional suggestions from the people, especially those familiar with these matters.

Senate Bill 45.

A bill to regulate the duties of the Board of county commissioners and auditor, repealing all laws in conflict therewith and Providing a penalty for the violation thereof.

Be it enated by the General Assembly of the State of Indiana:

Sec. 1. That the Boards of County Commissioners of the State of Indiana, shall on the first day of each regular session of the Commissioner's Court examine and audit the books of the county treasurer and auditor of their respective counties.

Sec. 2. That it shall be the duty of said board of county commissioners to compare the allowances made by said board, at the preceding sessions with the stubs of the warrants drawn by the county auditor in payment of such allowances.

Sec. 3. That it shall be the duty of the board of county commissioners, at their regular sessions, to examine all warrants redeemed by the county treasurer and turned over by him to the county auditor for credit, and compare the same with the stubs in the auditor's office corresponding with said warrants and satisfy themselves that the warrant and stubs correspond in every particular and that the said warrants are properly stamped "paid."

Sec. 4. That the issuing of county orders or warrants by any member of the board of county commissioners or by the county auditor, at any time, other than when the board of county commissioner are in sessson, is hereby prohibited.

Sec. 5. That any member of the board of county commissioners or county auditor violating any of the provisions of this act, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined in any sum not exceeding fiive hundred dollars nor less than fifty dollars and be liable to the county upon their official bond, in a civil action, for any damages sustained.

Sec. 6. All laws or parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Senate Bill 46.

An act to provide the manner for proof of claims for allowance by board of county commissioner, repealing all laws in conflict therewith ank providing a penalty for the violation thereof.

Be it enacted by the General assembly of the State of Indiana.

Sec. 1. That no allowance shall be made by any board of county commissioners for any claim against the county, unless the claimant shall file with such board of commissioners a detailed statement of all the items and dates of charge, nor until such competent proof thereof is adduced in favor of such claim as is required in other courts, and no claim shall be otherwise allowed.

Sec. 2. All laws or parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Sec. 3. Any member or members of board county commissioner violating any of the provisions of this act, shall upon conviction thereof, be fined double the amount of the allowances by him or them made and shall be liable to the county for any damages sustained thereby.

MARRIED.

Wednesday's Daily.

As foreshadowed in yesterday's DAILY, there was a wedding in town last evening, a union of two well known and popular young people, Miles Baxter and Miss Minnie McDowell. The ceremony was performed by Rev. F. C. Colvin, their pastor, at the residence of the bride's grandmother, Mrs. Barclay, at 8 in the evening. There were present about forty invited guests, chiefly the relatives of the bride and groom, and at the conclusion of the ceremony and congratulations there was a splendid supper. An abundance of appropriate gifts were receivedby the young couple, and they start in their new life with the happiest of prospects and an abundance of good wishes. At the present, their home will be with Mrs. Barclay, with whom the bride has always had her home. The COURIER unites with all who know them in extending congratulations and good wishes.

Mrs. Lewis Dead

Since putting in type the local in another part of this paper, we learn that Mrs. G. W. Lewis is dead. Cook came home on the noon train and brought the sad news. After writing to us yesterday, it appears she continued to grow worse and by midnight last night it was seep the end was near. She suffered greatly except when under the influence of opiates, as her injured arm was terribly swollen and this extended to the adjacent parts of her body. She died at 1:30 in the morning. The funeral will be tomorrow, Wednesday, at the house, at 10 a. m. and the interment near her early home in Scipio township, Allen County.

Chop Grinding.

I am now ready to grind chop feed, fresh cob and oats, or corn and oats, as required by customers. Grinding done on Tuesdays and Fridays. Call on me at my home on those days, and have your work done.

Mrs. Woodworth

The Mentone Gazette says "A dispatch says Mrs. M. B. Woodworth, the noted trance evangelist, is conducting meetings at Syracuse, Kosciusko county. Nearly one hundred conversions reported and the community is crazed with excitement by alleged miracles which are being wrought by Mrs. Woodworth, Syracuse has become a mecca for persons suffering with bodily ills, and the reports of cures effected are nothing short of miraculous, people believing that Mrs. Woodworth is possessed of divine power.

—Scaly eruptions on the head, chapped hands and lips, cuts, bruises, scalds, burns are quickly cured by DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve. It is at present the article most used for piles, and it always cures them. Davenport the druggists —What has become of the talk about starting a cement factory at Turkey Lake in Steuben county? It has been claimed that they have valuable marl beds there.

—The old lady was right when she said, the child might die if they waited for the doctor She saved the little one's life with a few doses of One Minute Cough Cure. She had used it for croup before. Davenport the druggist.

—AGENTS WANTED:—Two gentlemen and one lady to canvass DeKalb county, Guaranteed salary of $40.00 a month. Address James W. Barnes, No. 6 Arcade, Fort Wayne, Ind.

—To cure all old sores, to heal an indolent ulcer, or to speedily cure piles, you need simply apply DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve according to directions. Its magic-like action will surprise you Davenport the druggists.

—T. O. Doremus, the Lake Shore trainmaster, who met with an accident at Jackson yesterday morning, an account of which was in yesterdays DAILY died at 11:00 o'clock last night. His leg was cut off above the knee and he died from the effects of the accident.

—The length of life may be increased by lessening its dangers. The majority of people die from lung troubles. These may be averted by promptly using One Minute Cough Cure, Davenport the druggist.

Friday's Daily.

—Henry T. Myers and wife, of Collingwood were welcome callers at this office to-day.

—S. S. Potter and wife were at Ari yesterday attending the sale of the personal property of Mr. Potter's father, whose death was mentioned a few weeks ago.

—Mrs. M. Clifford, one of our subscribers at Nebraska City, Neb., in sending her subscription, writes that she is just recovering from a protracted illness. We hope to hear of her speedy recovery.

—Fort Wayne is tearing down the old court house. It requires hard work to get it down, which proves it is not so rotten as they thought it was.

—M. A. Miller of the Practical Boiler Works went down to Columbia City this morning to figure on a job of work, which of course he will get. He informs us that they are quite busy at present, last week having more work than they could handle.

—Mrs. Guy Plumb writes from Baltimore she is just recovering from a long sickness. She had gone to that city to visit her daughters, Amy and May and took sick about eight weeks ago. She will remain there till warm weather. All the rest are in good health. She sends her annual remittance to the COURIER for which she has thanks.

—Cook Ford has a letter from Mrs. Ford, at Hicksville. Her mother is suffering a good deal from her injuries and can rest only by the aid of opiates. It was her arm that was broken. She was going down cellar, when a board broke and she fell. The arm was badly broken, and the wrist dislocated besides. Mrs. Ford will remain with her mother till she is better.

—Our townsmen Messrs, C. A. Rafter and Harry Culbertson are erecting a new Hoop factory at Mourenci, Mich. These gentlemen are both interested in the factory at the Junction and through their careful management have built up quite a successful business. We understand they will both move with their families to the above city —About every newspaper in the state and nation is publishing an article describing how effectually gum chewing distorts the contour of a lady's face, causing wrinkles and muscular outlines where symmetrical sweetness is wont to dwell, says the Rochester Republican. That's all true enough, but what about the sweetness of a young man's mouth who chews tobacco and squirts the filthy stuff to the right and to the left all along life's pathway. His mouth looks like a mashed rotten apple and his breath has the fragrance of decayed hen fruit. If the objectionabl features of young ladied are limited to gum chewing, let them chew, and if young men do no worse they will be angels in comparison.

Monday's Daily.

—Jim Lewis and wife were at Albion over Sunday the guests of his parents.

—J. Wm. Wagner, one of our solid Garrett friends made us a call to-day. He was over here on some matters in court in which he is interested.

—Harry Reed up at Waterloo, is one of the latest of our friends to pay way ahead on the COURIER. We like to "keep in touch" with such men.

—Frank Boyle of the Junction was in the lunch counter at Hillsdale, last evening when the special train left and he was compelled to remain over there till this morning.

—Cook Ford received a telegram from his wife at Hicksville Sunday forenoon asking him to come there, as her mother, Mrs. Lewis, was worse, and that blood poisoning had set in. Her daughter Maggie Ford, was also sent for from Fort Wayne, and Mrs. Frank Ryan a sister of Mrs. Lewis, who resides at Attica, Ind., also came up. All met to-day noon at Auburn Junction, and went to Hicksville. From this, we fear Mrs. Lewis is in a dangerous condition.

Tuesday's Daily.

—Emmet Ensley sends from Ashley for the COURIER. He is working in the yards at Ashley switching.

—Dr. E. L. Siver, of Fort Wayne, was here to-day to attend the meetidg of the stockholders of the First National Bank of which he is a member.

—That is quite a joke about "Penn rose," being a play on his name. He is Quay's new senator just elected from Pennsylvania.

—W. H. Ernest, the expert is here again looking over the vouchers etc. to cover the four years before Mr. Fair's term.

—Mrs. G. A. Bishop is quite sick at her home corner Jackson and Eleventh streets. Dr. Vesta Swarts is treating her.

—Mr. Fisher of Michigan a brother of Mrs. Wm. Walsworth has been visiting the relatives here and in this vicinity several days but returned to his home this week.

—Cal. Husselman left this afternoon for Geneva, Ind., where he will lecture before the Farmer Institute. J. J. W. Billingsly, of Indianapolis will also be in attendance. Friday and Saturday they will attend a similar institute at Angola.

—We omitted to state yesterday, the amount of the bail given by Perry Fair. It is $500 as the charge against him so far is only for raising the two county orders. We do not understand that he has confessed to anything except that.

—The Bishop & Lackey dry goods store will now be known as "The Bishop & Lackey Co. Several new stockholders have been added and the capital stock increased to $20,000 with a surplus of $5,000. They will continue their successful practice of buying and selling for cash.

—Henry Jones (colored), who murdered Homer Thomas, a fellow convict at Michigan City prison has been sentenced to death. He will be the first to be executed in the prison north. Gallows were constructed for Parker and McAfee, the Indianapolis murderers, but were never brought into service.

Wednesday's Daily.

—No court this week, but the grand jury is still busy.

—Mrs. C. P. Urie of Butler was in the city today the guest of Mrs. Cupy.

A liberal accident insurance policy, at lowest rates, in an old line company, written by WALTER C. HARTMAN.

—Mr. Martin another gentlemen from Bluffton is here assisting in the work of going over the books at the court house.

—The meetings at the Lutheran church continue with increasing interest and growing attendance. It is difficult for all to find room in the building now.

—Mr. Harpster, of Troy, was a caller to-day. It will be remembered that his mother died recently, but his father is still living and in reasonably health.

—Mrs. Charles Wagoner at Fairbury Neb., sent in this week and paid her subscription way up into '98. She writes they are having lovely weather out there almost like spring.

—Laporte has a "Cooking Club" which holds regular meetings at which are also literary exercises. We notice they met last week at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Blair. Mr. B. will be remembered as the son of Gen. Blair of Waterloo.

—The two COURIERS, DAILY and WEEKLY, both have received several new names to their list within a few days. We are glad that our friends appreciate our endeavors to give them fresh news that is reliable.

—Harry Ward, of Kendallville, was in town today visiting his aged mother Mrs S. B. Ward, as he often does. Mr. Ward was well known here years ago, but for some years has been in business at Kendallville, where we believe he has been very successful.

—This week, there are struggles in most of the states over the election of a U. S. Senator. It will be remembered that one third of these members change regularly once in two years. and as there are generally some deaths or resignations the number is actually greater than one third.

—We publish today the delinquent tax list and it is gratifying to note that it has not increased in size as has been found in most other counties. Auditor Horst will post notices in all parts of the county and those interested can get copies by calling on him.

—Mrs. Farmer who moved a few weeks ago to Bluffton where her husband is manager of the telephone exchange, sends us the cash and orders the Old Reliable COURIER forwarded to her address. We have added several new names this week. People appreciate a paper filled with county seat news and that's why our list is increasing.

—Walter S. Dickinson, son of Sherman Dickinson, arrived home January 1, from Lincoln, Neb., where he has been for the past six years. He had grown so that even his father did not know him at first. He has often seen Mr. Bryan and says he is one of the kindest and best men he ever met. He also met Howard Casebeer quite often and says he is doing well and has a large practice. Like Bryan, Howard had taken Greeley's advice and went west to grow up with the country.

—The Auburn Flour Mills has changed hands, Mr. Richwine selling out to P. L. Bishop, of Greentown, Ind. Mr. Bishop is a miller of many years experience and he has retained in his employe Doc. Baird, who all our readers know is also an excellent miller. Since Mr. Bishop has taken possession the mill has been running at its full capacity and this fact alone proves that the new manager is thorough and is giving to his customers the very best of flour. It is the intention of Mr. Bishop to stock up with flour and then he can always accommodate his customers. He will move here with his wife and daughter in a few months, or as soon as the schools close, his daughter being a teacher at present. The farmers of DeKalb county will find Mr. Bishop a gentleman and they should call at his mill and get better acquainted with him. We hope he may continue to receive a large patronage.

CONCORD.

Mr. Hugh Watt left Monday for a visit with his son Ira in Wisconsin.

Grover Morr has a severe attack of rheumatism in his limbs.

A. J. Rogers of Auburn freighted a new organ last Monday morning for concord church. Rev. C. W. Evans was there from St. Joe waiting its arrival. Rev. Evans and Amos Seberts purchased it on Thursday before.

Thos. J. Krise lost a valuable horse last Monday. A few days before he was offered $100.

Master Walter Baker is better.

Mrs. L. Howey is quite sick at this writing

BUTLER.

The Near Year has opened and we are all settling down so the old treadmill of business and labor again.

Morse has moved his grocery into the Hashing building, and Mr. Steifel is fitting up the vacated room for a dry goods store.

The Opera House block has now one saloon, and a new groceryand general store operated by a Mr. King a stranger among us.

Cal. Chambers has purchased the John Blaher dwelling and moves his saloon in the Ben Steifel three story brick on south Broadway.

The scruption at the county seat has stired our village from center to circumference. It has been a nine days wonder. The cry is, go to the bottom whoever the guilty ones may be.

J. A. Campbell, wife and Florence visited Norwalk, Ohio, during the Holidays. The little metropolis was exceedingly dull, as almost all other places are at the beginning of the year The new M. E. church at this place which has been one year in building, when completed sometime this year will be one of the finest structures of its kind in Ohio. After a brief stay there they visited Toledo.

A new boarder has come to stay with Clyde Needy's.

A stranger is holding a very interesting series of meetings at the Church of God. Attendance very good.

Frank Brunkhart's aged father was buried last week.

Annual Meeting

The annual meeting of the members of the DeKalb County Mutual Fire Insurance Company, will be held in Auburn, the last Saturday in January, 1897. A full attendance is desired as this is the election of officers.

R. SAWVEL, Sec.
Auburn, Ind. January 11, 1897.

New Officers

At the election of the First National Bank of Auburn, the following officers were elected this afternoon:

DIRECTORS
C. A. O. McClellan. J. H. Ford, R. J. Fisk, D. A. Garwood, E. L. Siver, James McClellan, Chas. McClellan.

OFFICERS
C. A. O. McClellan - President
D. A. Garwood - Vice President
Chas. McClellan - - Cashier

Without A Rival.
As a positive cure for sprains, bruises, and pains of all kinds, Salvation Oil has no equal. Mrs. Frank Juif, 518 Gratiot Ave., Detroit, Mich., writes: "I used Salvation Oil in my family and can say it has no rival as a liniment; it certainly cures pains. I sprained my ankle and it cured me and since then I have always used it for any pains and bruises." Salvation Oil is sold for only 25 cents. No other remedy will do the work as promptly.

Horrible Find.

Mrs Sloffer Found Dead in Bed Tuesday Morning

Mrs. Shaffer an aged lady, in her 90th year was found dead in bed at Ari yesterday morning. Heart failure is supposed to have been the cause of her death.

To Subscribrs.

Subscribers to the WEEKLY are again urged to try and keep closer up in their dues. If you cannot send in all that is due, send a part, if it is but $1. It will help us and reduce your debt that much. But we are aware that many can pay, but are careless. Don't wait, but bring it or send, and it will be greatly appreciated.

The Upight Boiler.

The occompaning cut is a fair illustration of the enterior of the new upright boiler recently patented by M.

A. Miller of the Auburn Practical Boiler Works. This boiler is a success in every particular and Mr. Miller is to be congratulated on his ability as an inventor.

Township Orders.

The supreme court recently refused to sustain the appeal of the state of Indiana from a judgment of acquittal given by the circuit court of Noble Co. in favor of George M. Ray, the school supply man. Ray was indicted for obtaining money under false pretenses consisting of representation as to the value of seven warrants issued by township trustees of Shelby county, purporting to be given in payment for school supplies of, the value of $3,188. The state claimed that the warrants were of no value as they were fraudulently issued, and did not represent any necessary school supplies furnished by the townships. The jury acquitted Ray, and the supreme court holds that the appeal was not properly taken, and refuses to disturb the judgment.

A Large Funeral

T. A. Doremus, The L. S. & M. S. Train Master Respected By Many.

The funeral of T. O. Doremus at Jackson, Mich., Sunday was the largest ever witnessed by men of mature years. A special train from Fort Wayne took on employes and friends at every station along the line, and when the train reached there five coaches were crowded. Mr. Doremus has been trainmaster for over twenty-five years. It seems that his friends were numberless. The line of march from his late residence to the cemetery was very large. There were 800 men in line, representing members of the Commandery, A. O. U. W., Three Railway Orders, and the Lake Shore employes and their friends. Following the remains were 49 cabs and carriages, besides the people who walked on the sidewalks on each side of the street. The floral offerings at the home and at the grave were all money could buy, in fact money contributed for flowers was saved and a crayon portrait will be secured and presented to the family, as a token of respect from the friends. Mr. Doremus carried $5,000 life insurance $2,000 being in the A. O. U. W. and the balance divided up in the other orders.

Those from Auburn who were in attendance upon invitation of Agent DeLapp were L. J. Miller, Oran Miller, Charlie Borst, Frank Hogue, A. Lewis, C. E. Van Auken, Charley Emanuel, J. C. Lochner and Mr. and Mrs E. T. DeLapp.

On the return trip the train made a run which for speed eclipsed all former efforts in that direction. It left Jackson at 5 o'clock in the evening and reached this city at 8:24 o'clock, covering the entire 100 miles in three hours and twenty-four minutes. The fifty-eight miles between Montgomery and Fort Wayne was traveled in fifty-five minuets, including several stops and slowups. Deducting the time consumed by the "dead stops." the average speed of the train from Montgomery to its destination was seventy seven and one one-third miles an hour. The engine was No. 74. with Engineer N. B. Corns at the throttle.

Kankakee Drain.

Laporte, Porter, Lake, St. Joseph, Jasper and Starke counties are working up a scheme to have the Kankakee river straightened and the channel consequently deepened, so as to drain more of the swamp land. It will have to be done on something the same plan that public ditches are made, only in this case the state already holds about $100,000 in funds that may be applied to this work. It is claimed the counties can issue bonds to pay for the work as fast as it is completed, and the land owners will re-imburse the counties, when they pay their taxes in the next year or two. They would begin in St. Joseph county, go to the Illinois line. It would reclaim a vast amount of land. It looks now as if the plan would succeed.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

PURELY VEGETABLE.
The cheapest, purest and best family medicine in the world! An effectual specific for all diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Spleen, Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!
Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common, as a bad breath; and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your appetite, complexion and general health.

CONSTIPATION
should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact, nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!
This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache, for the relief of which take Simmons Liver Regulator.

IN 1897.

FICTION: The Martian, the new novel by Du Maurier, the eagerly expected successor to "Trilby," begun in October Number, 1896, with illustrations from the author's drawings. A new novel by Frank R. Stockton—developing a Twentieth Century Renaissance—full of humorous situations and characteristically illustrated. A Pair of Patient Lovers, by William Dean Howells. Other striking novelettes by American authors. Short stories by Mark Twain, Thomas Nelson Page, Richard Harding Davis, Owen Wister, John Kendrick Bangs, Ruth McEnery Stuart, Octave Thanet, Mary E. Wilkins and other popular writers.

SCIENCE: Story of the Progress of Science during the Nineteenth Century, a series of papers by Dr. Henry Smith Williams, supplemented by contributions on special subjects by expert scientists. Articles on the relations of curious psycological manifestations to physiology by Dr. Andrew Wilson.

AMERICAN FEATURES: The Mexico of To-Day, a series by Charles F. Lummis, splendidly illustrated—the result of a recent visit to Mexico undertaken for HARPER'S MAGAZINE. Mexico is preeminently a silver-producing country, and its monetary operations rest entirely on a silver basis. Owing to the keen discussion of certain economic problems in connection with issues of urgent importance in American politics, these papers, will command general attention. American Historical Papers by Woodrow Wilson, John Bach MacMaster, and James Barnes. The true story of Sheridans's Ride, by Gen. G. A. Forsyth. Continuation of Howell's Personal Reminiscences of eminent literary Americans.

AFRICA AND THE EAST: While Man's Africa, a fully illustrated series of papers by Poultney Bigelow, theresult of Personal observation during a recent trip to Africa covering the whole field of European exploitations of that country. Illustrated articles by Stephen Bonsal on the transformations going on in Eastern Siberia, recently visited by the author. Hungarian Sketches, written and drawn by F. Hopkinson Smith. Colored physicians of South Carolina have formed a State organization.

The number of volumes circulated by the free libraries of New York city during the year is estimated at 1,500,000.

The Kiel canal is lighted over its sixty-two miles by electricity and is the longest distance in the world lighted continuously in that way. There are 5,000 poles.

According to a recent order of the Secretary of War the dimensions of the standard United States flags are five feet six inches by four feet four inches. The order also provides for the new colors to be issued to all infantry and artillery regiments and the battalions of engineers, and also to all regiments of cavalry.

The fetes commemorating the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of the sea route to India by Vasco Da Gama were to have been held at Lisbon next year, but have now been postponed until May, 1898. It was in the month of May, 400 years ago, counting from 1898, that the great navigator arrived at Calicut.

The import of iron into Russia in 1894 amounted to 837,859 tons, consisting of 170,467 tons of raw iron and 687,392 tons of wrought iron, steel, machinery and other iron products, against 570,317 tons imported in 1893; consequently the total amount of iron consumed in Russia in 1894 was 2,304,145 tons, being 453,658 tons more than in 1893.

A smart young man in Kansas employed his father to work for him during the month of December, offering him 1 cent the first day, 2 cents the second, 4 the third, and so on, doubling the amount every succeeding day. He was surprised when his figuring showed that at the end of thirty days he owed the "old man" just $10,737.23.

A bill drafted by Henry L. Clinton will be presented in the coming New York Legislature providing that persons acquitted of murder on the ground of insanity shall not be immediately released from custody, as Marie Barberi was, but kept under restraint in an asylum for not less than ten years, subject to release by the Governor.

Governor Atkinson of Georgia has signed an anti-trust bill, recently passed by the Legislature of that State, which puts under the ban all "arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts or combinations made with a view to lessen or which may tend to lessen" free competition in the importation, manufacture or sale of any article or product.

A peculiarity of high buildings is attracting interest in New York since the building inspectors have honored the structures with belated attention. It has been learned that many of them swerved fully a foot from the upright during the recent hurricane, though this, by experts, is cited as a proof of their strength. A well-known photographer near Fifth avenue, who is next to the roof of a skyscraper, found that the tremulous motion injured his negatives, and hit upon a queer expedient of overcoming this. He has constructed a gigantic tank with pontoons to float his machinery, and no amount of listing now interferes with his business.

The University Medical College of New Orleans has undertaken an enterprise which promises excellent results. It has determined to establish a training school for negro women as nurses. The object is to supply well-trained nurses who will serve for moderate pay. The trained nurses who are now in New Orleans are not numerous enough to meet the demand, and they are paid for their services at a rate which many people who need them cannot afford. It is believed that the negro nurses to be trained at the new establishment will find employment and serve a good purpose without interfering at all with the white women who are engaged in similar work.

Andrew Jackson's Way.

Although the government pays the rank and file of its employes greater salaries than they would be likely to command in private business, with shorter hours and easier work on an average, the days of the impecunious clerk in Washington are by no means ended. So writes a Companion correspondent, who goes on to say:

The cabinet officers take the ground that the departments cannot be used as debt-collecting agencies, but at the same time they see to it that employment shall not be given to those who can, but will not, pay their bills. An old gentleman said to your correspondent the other day that he recalled a very interesting incident which occurred in Jackson's administration.

Among the clerks in the Treasury Department at that time was a young man who had a chronic disinclination to pay his board bill. His landlady was a widow in needy circumstances, but was unable to get a cent out of him. He gave his notes with Micawber-like cheerfulness, and they went to protest with clock-like regularity. Finally she went one day to the White House and called upon the President.

She told her story, and as she proceeded Jackson's eyes began to snap in a dangerous manner. He told her that she ought to be paid, and requested her to get the clerk's note for the amount. The lady replied that she was unable to pay the costs of the protest, but the President assured her that this time there would be no such expense.

She went over to the Treasury, and had no difficulty in getting the young fellow's note for thirty days for the full amount of the indebtedness. Then she carried it to the White House. The President glanced at it and wrote on the back, "Andrew Jackson."

"Now, madam," said he, "put that in the bank, and we will see which one of us will have to pay you the money."

The note was deposited for collection, and it is needless to add, was paid by the clerk, who afterward went to see President Jackson, apologized, and promised to mend his ways.

"Botanical Names."

Some people whose botanical learning is not very deep are passing fond of using Latin names for plants and flowers. A London journal tells of a garden in Brixton, near that city, which is kept by an old gentleman who delights to have all his plants labelled with high-sounding "botanical names"—it does not matter in the least what; and so some of his more learned friends have helped him to distinguish appellations.

He has, for instance, a bank of roses, the plants in which bear these labels Nux vomica, Nisi prius, Ipecacuanha peruviana, Particeps criminis.

It is easy to see to what professions the friends belonged who supplied the worthy gardener with these eminently scientific names. The gardener is proud of them, and they undoubtedly answer every purpose of the planter.

They remind one of the story of the Rev. Sydney Smith and the new-rich lady of Kensington. She was quite ignorant of either Latin or botany, but she had a fine conservatory, and she considered it a proof of her own cultivation to know the botanical names of all plants.

These names she committed carefully to memory, and one day, when Mr. Smith called, she took him to the conservatory and reeled them all off to him. She showed him the Pelargonium quercifolium and the Cheiranthus lceanus and the Mezembryanthemum and the Amygdalus persica, and scores of other such high-sounding names—which were, after all, but common flowers and fruits.

Sydney Smith listened until he was tired, and then, turning to the lady, asked:

"Madam, have you the Rubeola morbillis?"

The lady stopped short. What in the world might the Rubeola morbillis be? She had not the slightest idea. But she did not wish to display her ignorance. It might be something familiar of which she had not learned the name—and the name was pretty, anyway. So she put on a bold face and replied:

"Not just now; but I had it last year, and gave it to as many of my neighbors as I could."

"Ah! Did you, indeed?" said the great clergyman, and left her ignorant of the fact that he had simply asked if she had had the measles!

Two Billions for Pensions.

One of the most striking facts in the report of the Interior Department is that during the last thirty-one years, or since the close of the civil war in 1865, the government has paid out for pensions, including the cost of distributing them, the enormous sum of $2,034,817,769.

The amount paid last year, $138,214,761.94, was nearly $600,000 less than that of the previous year, and far below that of 1893. Still, once more the prodigious annual sum of $141,000,000, which is more than double the average of the thirty-one years, is required, that being the estimate for the twelve months beginning July 1, 1897. It is, therefore, absolutely certain that the aggregate pension outlay since the war will, within three or four years, have exceeded the amount of the whole interest-bearing public debt, when at its climax. In fact, two and a half years more at the present rate of appropriations will put the pension expenditures at the top.

How is it that, nearly a generation after the close of the war, the pension outlay is fivefold greater than it was a dozen years after the war? For, in 1875, it was, if we have the correct figures, only $29,456,212; the next year, $28,257,396; the year following, $27,963,752; the year after that, $27,137,019.

The causes are three, one being the introduction of the policy of paying arrears of pensions to those who were put on the roll, as established under Hayes; a second, the opening of the rolls to new classes of pensioners, scores or hundreds of thousands strong, as, for example, in the dependent pension act; finally, the raising of the rates of pensions, which is a constant process. Secretary D. R. Francis, in his annual report, proposing to increase by 50 per cent one such class.

Commissioner Lochren long ago estimated that, in the ordinary course, the pension roll would be decreasing in number by the year 1895. But here is 1897 at hand, and ebb tide has not yet set in. There are now more pensioners than ever before. The latest figures give us 970,678 names on the roll; and, if a table before us is correct, the number for last year was 970,524; for the preceding year, 969,544; for the year before that, 966,012.—New York Sun.

Clocks in High Buildings.

There is one disadvantage about very tall buildings which is just now being noticed by the occupants. It involves some annoyance to those who have not made provision for it.

The trouble is the stopping of pendulum clocks by the vibration of the buildings. Many a pendulum clock that has kept accurate time for years in old-fashioned low structures has refused to run at all when moved into some one of the new tall steel-framed buildings in the lower part of the city. On the lower floors of the buildings the clocks run fairly well, but when higher up in the buildings they become more whimsical and on the top floors will not run at all.

Mr. Dunn, of the weather bureau, has a fine pendulum clock in the tower of the Manhattan Life Building, which has not done an honest day's work since the weather bureau was moved into the new offices. It has stopped so often that it is no longer to be relied upon. The pendulum swings continually, but only from the vibration of the building, as the clock has not been wound for weeks. The only relief is in replacing the pendulum clocks with others that have balance wheels.

Her Reason.

"Maria," said Mr. Dawson, "why do you always keep the window shades down? The house looks like a dungeon to me."

"I want to be able to say," his wife replied, "that my neighbors have called on me. You don't suppose that any of them would come if they could see from the outside what we've got, do you?"—Cleveland Leader.

A Possibility.

Politics of the Day

HARD TIMES LINGER.

There is a feeling almost amounting to despondency that seems to pervade the entire country because the expected revival of business that was promised during the campaign has not come about, and the wheels of the factories are still idle. There were many who actually believed that the changing of the names of the Presidents, leaving the conditions remaining the same, would bring back confidence; that as soon as it was settled that McKinley was to fill the executive chair for the next four years the dormant industries would awake from their slumber and activity would take the place of the torpor that had prevailed. That this was a foolish expectation any one of sense might have known, and none better than the men who were most active in proclaiming that the day after McKinley was elected the factories would start up. It was a good political dodge, and had the desired effect. Those who were influenced to vote for McKinley because of the promises and vituperation will have ample time during the winter to sit down and do some thinking. But one cannot blame the men who are so impatient to have prosperity return, who are out of work and out of money to meet the necessities of a long winter. And it is only surprising that they are as patient under the dreadful burden as they are showing themselves to be. But it will be wise for the leaders of the Republican party to bear ever in mind that these promises stand against them, and that they must fulfil them or that party and all that it signifies will be swept away like chaff before the breath of the hurricane when the time shall have come for the people to again decide who shall be the chief executive of the nation and what the policy shall be. The situation at present is summed up in a few words. It is a money period of industry, and that alone is active; all other industries are absoutely lifeless. The money changers are the only ones who are doing business. They have it to loan on gilt-edged security to any one who dares to venture into business, but they are careful not to invest it in business themselves. And therein do they show good judgment, for no one has the hardihood to engage in trade or manufacturing under the existing conditions. It may be that their good judgment ceases there, and that the time may come when they will wish that a more liberal policy had controlled their actions, for if there is not a change for the better there will be one for the worse to such a degree that no man can tell what the consequences may be. There is a limit to starvation and suffering. When that limit is reached by an individual the end is that of suicide or crime, and the end with a multitude is open rebellion and civil war. We might as well look this squarely in the face, as to try and deceive ourselves into the belief that these things will not come about.—Utley's Weekly.

The Old Year and the New.

The year 1896 has been a disappointment to pretty nearly all the world, and notably to the people of the United States. The prediction had been made that we would see the end of our financial uncertainties long before it had run its course, but we are floundering in fear and doubt still. We were told that if we would elect McKinley President prosperity would quickly enter our doors, but the dame is yet tarrying and many of us have almost given up hope of again receiving a visit from her.

There is reason, however, for expecting that the next year—1897—will see the realization of at least some of the good things that were expected from the dying one. To be sure, we cannot tell just what our Republican political masters will try to do with us, but the probabilities are that they will be careful not to arouse any further enmities against themselves. They may even try to relieve the financial stringency by adopting some of the ideas of the Democracy which were denounced during the last campaign, but the reasonableness of which is becoming clearer every day.

It may also come to pass during the new year that the tyranny of the trusts will be smashed, although there is no likelihood that the monopolies which fought so fiercely for McKinley's election will be disappointed in their expectations of higher tariff duties and bigger profits for themselves.

Of one thing we are reasonably sure, and this is that we will find a good market abroad for our breadstuffs, and this means more money for us, even if Congress fails to act as it should on the financial issue. There is a slight war cloud, to be sure, in our sky, but it is a small one, and is almost certain to be dissipated. Spain does not want to fight us, and we do not care to fight her. We bid 1896 good-by without regret, but we can welcome 1897 with a cordial handshake and the wish that it will do better for us than its predecessor.—New York News.

Postal Saving Banks.

In Great Britain the postal savings bank system has proved an unalloyed success. It is a boon to the workingman of frugal habits, and, besides, creates a foundation upon which that "sure thing" dear to English hearts, the annuity, is built. Savings banks do not suspend in England, leaving depositors nothing to show for their years of thrift and self-denial. And the system is as simple as it is satisfactory.

Interest is paid at the rate of 2½ per cent. When a depositor's total account exceeds £200 no more deposits can be made, but buying consols through the postoffice, investing any sum from one shilling upward at the current price of the day. The postoffice will also sell stock obtained through it, charging a commission of ninepence for the purchase, or sale of stock in amounts below £25. Thousands of working people thus become owners of government stock, while savings banks under private management do not endeavor to compete with the government banks. Life insurance can be obtained in amounts of from £5 to £100. The £5 insurance is for children between the age of 8 and 14 years. The policies can be made payable at death, on the attainment of the age of 55, 60 or 65, and on the expiration of periods of 10, 15 and up to 40 years.

Sporadic attempts have been made from time to time to establish a similar system in this country, but they have failed through the powerful influence brought to bear by bankers, who borrow the people's money at a nominal rate of interest and loan it again at usury.

The advantage of postal savings banks is so apparent that it does not admit of dispute. It insures the depositor absolutely against loss, and at the same time gives every citizen that saves a direct interest in the perpetuation of his country and its institutions.

The assertion is ventured that within five years after the establishment of such depositories practically all the small hoardings of America would be attracted to them, and the federal government could secure quite a revenue by becoming a money lender on a large scale to nations less favored than our own.

Tariff, Not Currency.

Hon. William Lindsay, United States Senator from Kentucky, whose defection in the late canvass was such a disappointment to his friends, and such a discouragement of Democratic effort in a State so closely balanced as was his, is of the opinion, now, that a reunion of all real Democrats in Congress is among the probabilities of the winter. He thinks:

"There will be such a clamor on the part of the manufacturing trusts for increased and inordinate protection as to force all the Democrats into one solid, compact body, shifting the issue from sound money to protection, amalgamating all disintegrated elements and bringing together that which has been torn asunder. You will have scandals growing out of the greed of the protected interests that will fill the newspapers before July, superseding every other sensation."

What Senator Lindsay expects, appears to be quite certain to come to pass. President-elect McKinley has won whatever distinction he enjoys among the public men of his party by his extreme devotion to high tariff views. His name is identified, among all politicians, and in all sections, with the idea of the taxation of the people for the benefit of capitalist manufacturers. The currency question he had all but ignored, previous to last June, voting, indeed, in Congress, for the unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of sixteen to one, but assuming no leadership, one way or the other, in the debates on that question.

He was, and still is, a tariff protectionist, pure and simple, although, for the purposes of the campaign of 1896, he suffered himself to be put forward as the opponent of silver coinage and the champion of the gold standard. He naturally feels less interest in that issue, now that the election is over, than in the struggle for high taxation, to which his public life has been devoted.

Having disposed of Senator Wolcott's proposal to reopen European negotiations for a silver ratio, by giving his full permission to the attempt, the President, after the fourth of March, will call his extra session, and the old hum drum tariff debate will be trotted out to befog and delude the nation.

The Democrats in Congress should welcome the opportunity of reuniting their forces and making battle against protective theories, and against the taxation of the many for the benefit of the few.

Bryan Not Muzzled.

The lecture delivered at Atlanta a few days ago by Hon. William J. Bryan was worthy of the distinguished standard bearer of Democracy in the campaign.

"I'll tell you, my friends," said Mr. Bryan at a reception tendered him in Atlanta, "I don't want to be considered a candidate for President of the United States. I don't care to sit on the stool and behave myself for four years." In other words, Mr. Bryan does not intend to keep a muzzle on his mouth. He is a man of deep convictions and likes to let people know what those convictions are. He may and he may not be nominated in 1900, but he will continue to be a power for good in American politics.—Exchange.

Heavy Burden on the Masses.

The evil and the curse of our times is extravagance in our government. The injustice and the wrong of our present system of raising revenue for the Federal Government is in the exemption of wealth and property from contributing their just proportion of the taxes. This is robbery of the masses by the wholesale for the benefit of the classes, whose wealth and property are not reached by the Federal tax gatherer.—Augusta, Ga., Chronicle.

Adopting the American Method.

Our consul general at Vienna reports that the glucose trust in Austria has secured a prohibitive duty from that government whereby the American article has been shut out of the Austrian market. It is curious to see how the trusts and tariffs flock together the world over.—Philadelphia Record.

The stoppage of silver coinage does not seem to have brought prosperity to India any more than to the United States, judging from the numbers dying of starvation in the former country.

Despite the promise of prosperity to follow the election a large number of people are still carrying nothing but their hands in their pockets.

On the eastern coast of Ireland it rains on an average of 208 days in the year, in England about 150 days, at Kazan about ninety days, and in Siberia only sixty days.

PRINCE OF MAGICIANS.

The Great Herrmann Could Not Juggle with Death.

The theatrical world and the thousands who had witnessed his wonderful art were shocked by the news that Prof. Alexander Herrmann, the great magician, had died suddenly. He was in his private car on the Buffalo, Rochester and Pittsburg Railroad and was going from Rochester to Bradford, Pa., where he was to give a performance that evening. At Ellicotville, Cattaraugus County, it was found that he was ill. A physician was called, but Herrmann was dead before he arrived. Up to that time he was in the best of health, having played in Rochester the night before. Heart trouble was the cause of death.

The name of Herrmann in connection with conjuring is over a century old, the art having been passed from father to son and from brother to brother. Alexander was born in Paris 50 years ago. His father was a distinguished German physician, but his knowledge of magic equaled that of medicine. His oldest son, Carl, 25 years the senior of Alexander, became famous as a magician when the latter was but a child, and he taught his brother. At 11 the pupil was more clever than the master and at 14 he made his debut before the Queen of Spain. Early in the '60s Alexander came to this country and here he had since lived, being naturalized in 1876. He made three tours of the world and spoke Spanish, German, French, Chinese and Russian as well as English. He made and lost fortunes, built and sold theaters and at the time of his death owned a villa and park on Long Island, several horses and a fine steam yacht. He belonged to over 100 clubs in Europe and America.

THEY PASSED HIM ON.

Lon Wah Journeyed as Freight but Paid Heavy Tribute to Brakemen.

Lon Wah had a goodly proportion of this world's goods when he left Peking—at least it was wealth from a Chinaman's standpoint—for he had his passage money and enough more to open a laundry in St. Louis and to keep him in provender until the laundry was on a paying basis. He would have become one of the bloated aristocrats of St. Louis' Chinatown had he arrived in that shape, but unfortunately he did not. He is a child of misfortune and a victim of blackmail. This time it was the godly American who "exhibited "ways that are dark and tricks that are vain." At least he matched the "Heathen Chinee," and a little more.

Lon Wah had conceived a plan, not peculiarly Chinese, of riding sans railroad ticket. He smiled a wide Mongolian smile and blinked his almond eyes as he crawled into an empty box beside a pile of freight in the City of Mexico. He had attended to such preliminaries as having the box labeled, taking a good supply of boiled rice and perforating the box as a means of ventilation. He journeyed thus by freight to Fort Worth, Texas, without molestation, and was felicitating himself upon his success when he was discovered.

A lynx-eyed brakeman spied him and pounced upon him without ceremony. "Cough up or over you go," he shouted, emphasizing the demand by punching Lon in the stomach with a stick poked through the airholes of the box.

Lon Wah explored the recesses under his all-enveloping shirt, and produced a small coin, a very small coin. But the brakeman was inexorable, and after another punch or two Lon Wah fished up another coin. A third of larger denomination satisfied the brakeman as far as his personal wants were concerned, but he passed the word along to thoroughly that by the time he of the almond-shaped orbs and the flowing shirt reached St. Louis he hadn't street car fare left.

Critical Moment.

Whittier, the poet, and Lucy Larcom were once driving in a buggy drawn by a restless animal. The horse become more and more vicious, and the buggy swayed like a ship in a storm. But never a word would Lucy spare on the high-erected theme which then engaged her mind. At last Whittier could stand it no longer, and as he redoubled his efforts with the reins, he exclaimed: "Lucy! If thee do not stop talking till I get this horse in hand, thee will be in heaven before thee wants to!"

Sermons of the Week

Heart Religion.—A religion of the heart, not of the head, is the religion that makes man or woman contented with God.—The Rev. John Mackay, Roman Catholic, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Wages of Sin.—The true wages of sin are broken hearts and blasted lives, wasted opportunities, shrunken energies, shattered hopes, and ever-increasing despair; not exhilaration, but decay; not life, but death.—Rev. S. H. Roblin, Universalist, Boston, Mass.

Conscience.—In the Christian the conscience is trained so that a man feels the colossal imperative of duty spurring him to lofty endeavor. Conscience is the voice of God in the soul, and must be obeyed.—Rev. W. G. Partridge, Baptist, Cincinnati, Ohio.

United Nations.—All nations are united. The prosperity of one affects the prosperity of all. This is especially true in modern times, when the means of communication and transportation have become so rapid and complete.—Rev. C. H. Eaton, Universalist, New York City.

Work.—Work is not religion, but there can be no true religion without work. Satan keeps many people out of the kingdom to-day by getting them to believe that works will take the place of vital faith in Jesus Christ.—Rev. G. W. Ridout, Methodist, Philadelphia, Pa.

Religion in Universities.—The State universities are great mission fields. By the very nature of their establishment they cannot support religious training, which must, therefore, be supported in connection with the universities by religious bodies.—Rev. W. M. Mertz, Disciple, Detroit, Mich.

Our Youth.—A great many of the young people of to-day stand on the brink of death, and oftttimes perish morally because the parents sleep and the church is negligent in not performing the sublime duties that God has appointed as a part of its work.—Rev. Edmund Hewitt, Methodist, Camden, N. J.

The Past.—The church which cries out that her chief business is to interpret the past is a dying church. The society that believes her chief business is to conserve past customs, to obey past traditions, is a dead, soon to be rotten, society.—Rev. W. S. Rainsford, Episcopalian, New York City.

The Day of Grace.—The Scriptures say that we can quench the spirit; that we can sin away our day of grace, and in many ways we may array our wills against God. God has a purpose; that purpose is in Christ, who invites all, and every lost sinner will be a suicide.—Rev. G. C. Lorimer, Baptist, Boston, Mass.

The Family Altar.—Wherever the family altar is allowed to fall into decay there is seen a corresponding decay in true Christian hospitality and consecrated Christian conversation about the dinner table. There is a peculiar blessing which rests upon the household where Christ is a familiar guest.—Rev. F. P. Parkin, Methodist, Germantown, Pa.

Happiness.—Happiness does not come unbidden, and must be sought out and conducted in person. Keep sweet when you are tempted to despond. Cheerfulness is a life-preserver, which will hold you up when you are plunged into the deep waters of trouble. A great many people don't stop at borrowing trouble. They try to buy up all in the country and corner the goods.—Rev. E. E. Ide, Lutheran, Baltimore, Md.

The Bible.—Cease for a while the reading of fiction, the reading of reviews about religion, or even of his commentaries on religion, for a diligent study of the Word of God itself. The church will realize a great awakening of spiritual purpose and under the influence of the individual life the service of the kingdom of God's grace will be mightily multiplied.—Bishop J. D. White, Episcopalian, Fort Wayne, Ind.

A Pacing Ostrich.

This is the ostrich which sets the pace. He is the pioneer ostrich pacer which pulls a sulky. His owner thinks pacing by ostriches is the coming sport when the horse is ultimately retired, as is threatened by the advent of the bicycle, the electric car and the horseless carriage.

This particular ostrich in his pacing act is an attraction at Elitch's Garden in Denver, and he strikes a lick which bids fair to wipe out all trotting records achieved by the Maud S.'s, Nancy Hankes and Alixes of the trotting turf. He has never been let out to his full speed yet. If he was he could probably give the fast mail a close rub. He can both trot and pace, and travels like the wind.

It was some trouble to break him to harness, but when once he understood what was expected of him he got down to work.

A New College.

"Yes," said Mr. Spiffin, "I never had no such chance at an education myself, but I am determined that my son Abner shall have the best there is going. I shall send him to college."

SAVED BY HIS FRIEND

WOULD NOW BE IN HIS GRAVE BUT FOR A FRIEND'S ADVICE.

A Wealthy Indiana Farmer's Timely Escape from the Malignant Enemy that Had Pursued Him for Years.

From the New Era, Greensburg, Ind.

One of the leading farmers of Ripley County is Jonathan L. Weis, of Napoleon, Ind. Mr. Weis is a wealthy and influential tiller of the soil, and was a soldier in the late war. He was one of the first to enlist, and served for three years, coming home broken down in health and suffering from rheumatism, which had been brought on by the great exposure to which he was subjected. Although previous to his enlistment Mr. Weis had been a strong, healthy man, ever since the war he has been a physical wreck, being almost a skeleton, such great destruction has that dread disease worked upon him. Mr. Weis for many years was unable to do any work, being compelled to hire others to do his farm work. To a New Era reporter he stated that to-day he would have been still in the same condition physically had not a friend advised him to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which quickly and permanently cured him, and to-day he weighs more, eats more, and can do more work than at any time since his dismissal from the army, although at a fairly advanced age.

"For years," said Mr. Weis, "my pains were almost unbearable, and during damp weather they were especially severe. I could sleep but little, and as I had no appetite I rapidly dwindled away from a large man into almost nothing. I consulted different prominent physicians and tried several patent medicines claimed to be good for my trouble, but none of them did but little good. As soon as I began taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills I noticed a difference, and by the time I had taken a few boxes I was completely cured. Had it not been for that medicine I would have been in my grave long ago."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effect of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, all forms of weakness either in male or female. Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post paid on receipt of price, 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

An Enterprise that Paid.

The establishment of a line of steamers between Seattle and eastern Pacific points by the Nippon Yusen Kaisha Steamship Company was a wise business enterprise, as has been demonstrated by the heavy shipments to and from the United States. These have grown to such an extent that an additional steamer, the Agapanthus Maru, has been added to the fleet.

WOMAN'S STRUGGLE.

All women work.

Some in the homes.

Some in church, and some in the whirl of society.

Many in the stores and shops, and tens of thousands are on the never-ceasing treadmill earning their daily food.

All are subject to the same physical laws; all suffer alike from the same physical disturbances; there is serious derangement in the womb. Lydia E. Pinkham's "Vegetable Compound" is the unfailing cure for this trouble. It strengthens the proper muscles, and displacement with all its horrors will no more crush you.

Backache, dizziness, fainting, "bearing-down," disordered stomach, moodiness, dislike of friends and society—all symptoms of the one cause—will be quickly dispelled, and you will again be free.

How to Remain Young.

Strive always to be calm; be cheerful and sleep well;
Delight in music; much with little children dwell;
With moderation eat; salute the opening day
With glad "Good-morning!" be it rosy dawn or gray;
Thy burdens bravely bear, yet make thou no delay
To help a feeble brother on the rugged way;
Think not too much of self, nor idly fret and grieve
That thou must all earth's wealth and beauty some day leave;
Trust thou in God; and in the holy footsteps tread
Of those who live forever, tho' men count them dead.
way;
Wise as the serpent, and yet harmless as the dove—
Be thou like Christ in heavenly patience and love.

LOVE'S COMING.

If a loving countenance, beaming with good humor and intellect, and exact symmetry of figure, constitute beauty, then Jennie Selby was beautiful.

Jennie was completely happy, and this feeling communicated itself in a measure to her parents, when they contemplated their youngest child, who they hoped would cheer their declining years. They had two sons, likewise, the eldest being married and engaged in the same business as his father, and on the high road to mercantile affluence. The second son was at college, not having completed his 17th year.

Jennie Selby was in her 19th year, when one summer afternoon her father drove up to the house, accompanied by a gentleman whom he introduced as Mr. Lamberson. On beholding the stranger a cold thrill, which she could neither account for nor suppress, crept over her heart. On retiring to dress, she chided herself for the folly, and endeavored by her attention to her father's guest during the evening to atone for what might have appeared to him the coldness of his first reception.

Reynold Lamberson had spent the best part of 20 years in one of the West India islands, where he had patiently and indefatigably worked his way to the summit of affluence. At the time we introduce him he might have been 45 years of age, but his robust constitution appeared to have suffered little either from time or the effects of a warm climate. In person he was tall, gaunt and remarkably ungraceful, and his face was what would have been considered as decidedly commonplace. But he had a warm heart, a kind nature and a tale of sorrow or distress never fell upon his ear when his hand was not proffered to the stricken one, backed by his purse. He was one of the few men who could accept a favor and feel no humiliation, for it appeared to give him pleasure to do good. His connection with Mr. Selby had been of a mercantile nature, and of such a kind as to imprint on the heart of that worthy gentleman no small idea of the goodness of his esteemed correspondent.

Jennie Selby could hate no one. It was not her disposition to be unkind, yet she could not avoid a feeling of uneasiness whenever Reynold Lamberson was alone with her. One day Mr. Lamberson was absent until evening, and when he returned he informed the Selbys that he had purchased an adjacent property to their own. It was a magnificent place, far superior to the home of Mr. Selby. He moved into it, had a housekeeper and servants sent to him, and soon made himself at home. Never a day passed, however, that he did not visit the house of Mr. Selby.

Jennie Selby finally got enough accustomed to Reynold Lamberson's presence to avoid the dislike he had at first inspired. That gentleman had done all in his power to make himself agreeable, and if he was not blessed with personal charms his estimable character was not to be overlooked. Jennie was certain there was something excellent in Reynold Lamberson, because her father set so high a value on his friendship.

About this time young Freeman Selby came home from college to spend his vacation, bringing with him a friend named Perry Dana. It was no wonder that a good-looking and talented young man like Dana should captivate the heart of Jennie Selby.

To say that Dana was a passionless person would not have been correct. Still, there was a certain coldness in his nature that was insensible to the warmth of love, and though he might prove a tolerably sympathizing friend, he never could play the role of a lover. Poor Jennie Selby did not, or would not, see this.

So day by day went on, and only found her more interested in her brother's friend. But there was a heavier sorrow soon to come to the Selby home, and Jennie was to feel its bitterness more than any member of the family. Her brother had returned to college, and with Perry Dana. Not a word of love had been spoken by the young collegian during his stay, and yet he had taken moonlight walks, read poetry and even composed a sonnet for Miss Selby, and at last had gone away, leaving a void in Jennie's heart that could not be easily filled.

Jennie's father suddenly found himself stripped of all the steady accumulations of an industrious life. The family would have had no home had not Reynold Lamberson stepped forward and purchased it for them from Mr. Selby's creditors. Jennie's gratitude was intense. In the first moment of her delight she imagined all was regained when that beloved spot was saved. In her ecstacy she wandered round the pleasure grounds with the ardor of a child. At one of these times she was standing by a favorite rosebush, when Reynold Lamberson came striding down the walk which led to her retreat, swinging himself along, as it were, by the vibration of his arms; his large hands, every finger of which seemed in motion, outspread as though anxious to grasp whatever might come within reach. Jennie's first impulse was to avoid him, but gratitude toward one who had rescued her father from ruin forbade her, and when he came to the spot where she had sat herself down, there was nothing in her heart but a generous feeling toward the man who had done so much for them all.

Her little hand was clasped in his; she looked up into his face, and as the tears sprang to her eyes, she exclaimed: "God bless you, Mr. Lamberson!" and then her head fell upon his hand, which he had grasped, and her hot tears trickled over its rugged surface.

When Jennie recovered from her agitation the ungainly figure of Reynold Lamberson was kneeling before her as a suppliant for her love. Poor Jennie had not the most remote idea of how she returned to the house. She found herself in her own chamber weeping bitterly.

Weeks rolled away, and Reynold Lamberson came not as was his custom to the house of the Selbys; but he wrote letters to Jennie that breathed a spirit of unbounded generosity.

It was during this period that Jennie Selby first began to think of sacrificing herself that prosperity might fall upon the gray hairs of her parents in the evening of their life. Her eldest brother had been closely connected in business with his father, and he, too, with his wife and children, had been engulfed in the misfortune that had swept over his father's house. Reynold Lamberson was rich enough to advance him sufficient money to save him from poverty and ruin.

It was no wonder, then, that all the Selby family should look with favor on the suit of one who had so opportunely came to their assistance in the day of their trouble. Mr. Selby was not a man to bear up under any great misfortune. His heart seemed broken within him, and he moved about his home a mere shadow of his former self, scarcely noticing what occurred about him. His wife showed more fortitude; the first act she did was to discharge all the servants, that a strict economy might rule in her house. But a concealed mental malady was preying upon her, as well as her husband, and, though she carried a brave mein and cheerful front, she could not wholly shut out the truth from Mr. Selby's eyes.

All this and the dreadful future—the descent of her parents' gray hairs with sorrow to an untimely grave, all might be removed by a few strokes of the pen of Jennie Selby. The struggle was severe, but the die was finally cast. The letter was sent, and there was no recall.

Jennie has informed her parents of Reynold Lamberson's offer of marriage and of her acceptance of the same. Little did her parents imagine the sacrifice that young heart was making that they might enjoy repose.

Reynold Lamberson was sitting in his luxurious study when he received Jennie's reply to his letter. He read it without a muscle of his face moving, and when he had concluded perusing it rose, and taking his hat, walked over to Mr. Selby's house. He met Jennie at the door with a sunbonnet in her hand.

"I was merely going out to cut some roses for my mother's table," she said. "I think the presence of flowers has the power to dispel a great deal of gloom, and my poor mother is so fond of them."

Reynold Lamberson's face was more grave than usual, and Jennie could not fail to notice it. He replied in a voice that seemed so husky that Jennie looked up in his face in wonder.

"I will go with you," he said. "I have something to say to you, and I am glad that it will occur in the open air, for I would not of choice speak it within doors."

Jennie walked down the steps with Lamberson by her side. Her heart beat wildly; she felt there was something coming for which she was not prepared. They came to a seat by some shrubbery. Lamberson pointed to it, and said: "Sit there."

She took her seat mechanically, and without raising her eyes awaited his words.

He did not offer to sit beside her, but stood with folded arms and heaving chest, looking down ere he spoke. At length he said:

"Perhaps you have considered me ungenerous in asking you to marry me under the circumstances which have so unfortunately occurred. I am well aware that my personal appearance is not likely to aid my suit. You are beautiful. I have scarcely a claim to common good looks. But I have a heart—a heart that loves with a devotedness you little dream of. I do not expect you to love me, but if you ever become my wife I predict that my homely face will grow brighter and better looking to you every day you live beside me. I will win your love by kindness, and there is scarcely a heart that can long withstand a pure and unselfish devotion. Having said this, I have only one more remark to make. If you dislike me so much that it will give you pain to become my wife, I will here this moment release you from your promise, and, leaving you, never look upon your face again."

Jennie Selby rose and stood beside him. Taking his broad hand in her own, she said:

"As heaven is my witness, I will try and do my duty by you. I have no wish that you should suffer on my account. We cannot always control our feelings. You know this as well as myself. I am willing to trust to time and to yourself to work a change in my affections. This is all I can promise. Can you take me thus?"

"I can," was the reply.

The beautiful Jennie Selby is now the wife of Reynold Lamberson, and her parents believe their daughter is as happy as she assures them that she is.—New York News.

A Hair-Drying Machine.

To Miss Gwendolin Waters, of Denver, Col., belongs the honor of patenting a machine for drying the hair after a shampoo at home. The invention consists of a portable folding frame which may be readily adjusted to the body and which holds the hair spread over it in such a manner as to permit the free circulation of air through the hair. When the appliance is not in use its arms may be detached from the back piece and folded together into a small and compact package, which may be readily stowed away in a drawer or box.

EQUINE DENTISTRY.

An Interesting Branch of Veterinary Surgery...How it Works.

The average life of the horse in this country is twenty to twenty-five years; usually the horse's teeth last through his life, wearing down, however, with increasing age. Only the lower jaw of the hose is movable, and its motion in feeding is sideways. The incisors, or front teeth, which the horse uses in nature for biting off its food are comparatively little used in captivity; in which condition the horse's food is of such a character as would call for the use of grinders only, that is the molars, or back teeth. The incisors, however, though not used in mastication, continue to wear down from attrition, as they are brought together by the movement of the jaw with the constant use of the molars. Cribbers and wind-suckers wear down the incisors and break off the edge from them. One way in which the cribber can be told is from these indications. It is by inspection of the incisors, with the amount of wear to which they have been subjected, the age of the horse is determined.

In the male horse there are back of the incisors, and between them and the molars, tusks or canine teeth, like the tusks of a boar, which the horse uses for offense and defense, and it uses its incisors also for biting and fighting. The bit generally rests against the two front molars and the under jaw, which are sometimes worn away by a pulling horse; when a horse grabs the bit he takes it between the front molars of the upper and lower jaws.

Horses' teeth are rarely filled. There is seldom occasion for it; decayed teeth in horses are unusual. Sometimes a horse breaks off a molar in such a way as to leave a cavity in which food might lodge and rot the tooth. Such a cavity might be filled with amalgam or with gutta percha, and the manner in which the teeth are used tends to keep the filling in place. More often found than decayed teeth are dead teeth, which are teeth that are no longer nourished in the usual way. A dead tooth may have the same effect that the presence of a foreign body in the jaw would have; it may cause ulceration of the bones of the face, reduce the horse in health, and impair its value so that it may be necessary to extract the tooth; if the tooth is extracted in time the horse is all right.

Extracting a dead molar, or, as is comparatively rarely done, a decayed molar, is an operation for which a considerable amount of preparation is required and one often requiring great strength on the part of the operator, as well as a certain knack of handling the forceps. The tooth is long and firmly imbedded. The horse's jaws open back to a point, and the molars are near the back of the mouth, where the space between the jaws is small, and where the tooth is most difficult to get at. In proportion to its size, the jaw of the horse is more fragile and easily broken than the jaw of man.

The horse probably does not suffer great pain from the extraction, but it resents the treatment, and it is necessary to secure it firmly; it is put in stocks or thrown. The contrivance called the stocks is a portable stall, with movable bars, which can be so adjusted about the horse that it cannot move. It is used for other purposes also, for instance, in clipping horses' tails. If not put in stocks, the horse is hobbled and thrown, and so secured that it is firmly held. Sometimes chloroform is administered to the horse, not so much with a view to deadening the pain as to relax the muscles. The horse is placed only about half under the influence of the anaesthetic. The horse is very sensitive to its influence; the use of it is attended with risk, and care and careful attendance are necessary in administering it. Sometimes the pain is deadened by injecting cocaine into the gum with a hypodermic syringe, or the gum is treated with a sponge dampened with cocaine.

The horse's mouth is held open with an instrument. The beak of the forceps has a cutting edge, thus making it possible to settle the beak firmly down about the tooth. The tooth may come out comparatively easily; sometimes a tooth is loose, but it is more likely to be firmly held in the jaw. Sometimes when a tooth can not be pulled out with the forceps it is taken out with the forceps used as a lever, a block is placed for a fulcrum on the tooth next in front. Sometimes the horse's jaw is trephined. A piece of the jawbone at the base of the root of the tooth is removed from the outside. It may be that with an opening at the root the tooth can be drawn; if it cannot be it is knocked out from the under side. When trephining has been performed the cavity around the roots of the tooth is scraped out and freed from all diseased matter.

The necessity for having a tooth extracted arises comparatively seldom; probably not one horse in a hundred ever has a tooth pulled; 90 per cent. of the teeth that are pulled are molars. The charge for extracting a molar is usually $25; for extracting an incisor from $5 to $25.

Size and Speed of Waves.

Many different answers have been given to the question: "How high are the greatest ocean waves?" M. Dibos, a marine engineer and laureate of the Institute of France, has lately made some personal observations on this subject. He described waves encountered in the North Atlantic which had a height of at least four feet. Driven before a heavy wind, waves may advance at the rate of from 35 to 40 miles an hour, and such undulations of the ocean may travel more than 500 miles from the point where the wind created them without being accompanied by any disturbance in the atmosphere.

Baby Fits a Doll's Coach.

The mother and father are above the average size. The child is very lively, and the doctors say it will live.—New York Press.

The Considerate Visitors.

"Sleepy" Burke says that when he is robbing a house he always tries to bring the awakened owner of the establishment to his senses by explaining the midnight caller is "only a burglar who wants his money." This is reassuring. Until now when the man of the house opened his eyes to see a masked ruffian holding a cold revolver to his temples, he always supposed that the visitor was the new minister paying pastoral calls or his long-lost brother, who ran away to sea twenty years ago, and now returns laden with a heavy coat of bronze on his cheeks, a bag of cashmere shawls for the ladies and a spray of pink coral for the parlor table.—Chicago News.

Danger Everywhere.

If we live in a region where malaria is prevalent. It is useless to hope to escape it if unprovided with a medicinal safeguard. Wherever the endemic is most prevalent and malignant—in South and Central America, the West Indies and certain portions of Mexico and the Isthmus of Panama, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters has proved a remedy for and preventive of the disease in every form. Not less effective is it in curing rheumatism, liver and kidney complaints, dyspepsia, biliousness and nervousness.

French peasants have a belief that if a fire with much smoke is made in the stove on the approach of a storm, safety from lightning will be insured. Schuster shows that the custom is based on reason, as the smoke serves as a very good conductor for carrying away the electricity slowly and safely. In one thousand cases of damage by lightning, 6.3 churches and 8.5 mills have been struck, but the number of factory chimneys was only 0.3.

There is something that ought to be tacked up in every grocery! It's on a signboard over a large New York store in Broadway, where they don't believe that "substitution" pays. And nobody does believe it, except shifty and short-sighted storekeepers. When a woman wants Pearline, for instance, she won't be satisfied to have some inferior washing-powder in its place. It is a fraud on the customer and a fraud on Pearline. You can help to put a stop to it. When you ask for Pearline, don't let any imitation of it be substituted for it. 635

"For a number of years past I suffered untold agony from dyspepsia, and how to get rid of it I did not know. I tried every remedy friends could suggest, still I got no relief, and my business being sedentary, that of a bookkeeper, it was getting almost unbearable. I often had to lay off for a day or two. I consulted our family physician, but the medicine he prescribed for me only gave temporary relief. Finally I was induced to try Ripans Tabules. It was not long before I felt greatly relieved, and now, thank God, I have not lost a day in the last year. I can fully recommend to all who are afflicted as I was, and in my case it is always a fact that One Gives Relief."

WINE OF CARDUI TREATMENT OF FEMALE DISEASES

Thousands of women are nervous, tired, have headache, sick stomach, fainting spells, dizziness, scanty or profuse menses, weak back, constipation; their sides, shoulders and limbs ache constantly—in fact, they suffer from general debility of the whole system. The superior tonic qualities of McELREE'S WINE OF CARDUI make it the leading remedy for this class of troubles.

L. D. Pangburn, New Virginia, Iowa, says: "My wife has suffered for years from general weakness, pain in top of head, back and neck—at times could not do her work. One bottle of McELREE'S WINE OF CARDUI has given her instant relief. The effect is wonderful."

LIQUOR ORDINANCE

An Ordinance to Regulate the Sale of Liquors by the Quart and the Running of Quart Shop Saloons Within the Limits of the Incorporated Town of Auburn.

Be it ordained by the Incorporated Town of Auburn, DeKalb County, in the State of Indiana:

Sec. 1. That no person, company or corporation, shall within the limits of said town, sell intoxicating liquor, spiritous, vinous or malt, either or all of them, by the quart (or in other words run a saloon known as a quart shop) without first having procured a license from the said Incorporated Town of Auburn, granting the privilege to sell said liquor and to run said quart shop saloon.

Sec. 2 Any person, company or corporation desiring to sell liquor and to run a quart saloon in the manner provided in the preceding section, shall before entering upon said business pay to the treasurer of said Incorporated Town of Auburn, a license fee, in the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars, for said privilege to sell said liquor and to run said quart shop saloon for each and every year said liquor is so sold and saloon so run.

Sec. 3. Upon the payment of the license fee as is provided in sections two (2) of this ordinance, the treasurer of said town shall issue to said person, company or corporation a receipt showing that said license fee has been paid and upon the presentation of said receipt to the Town Clerk of said town, he shall issue to said person, company, corporation a license granting the privilege by said town, through its officers, to sell said liquor and to conduct said quart shop saloon as is in this ordinance provided.

Sec 4. Any person violating any of the provisions of this ordinance, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined in any sum not less than ten dollars nor more than one hundred dollars.

Sec. 5. This ordinance shall be in force and effect from and after its second publication in the AUBURN COURIER, a weekly newspaper printed and published in said town of Auburn.

In witness of the passage of the above ordinance, the president of said Board of Trustees has hereunto set his hand and caused to be attached hereto the corporate seal of said town this 4th day of January, 1897.

L. J. MILLER, Pres. Board.
Attest MILO D. HUSSELMAN, Town Clerk.

Lightning Rods.

An Aged Cleaned Out a Montana Town's Treasury

[From the Helena Mont. Independent]

The lightning rod agent struck Granite County some time ago, and as a result the school buildings of that prosperous county are well protected, but in few of them are there pupils to enjoy the benefits of instruction. This condition of things was revealed by a letter sent to the office of the state superintendent of public instruction a month or two ago.

A county institute was to be held in that county in a few days. This letter from that county superintendent advised that it be postponed, owing to the fact that there were only about a half-dozen teachers in the county to attend.

In accounting for this small teaching force, the superintendent said there were no schools in Philipsburg open, as they were waiting for the completion of the new school building, which would be after Jan. 1, Referring to the country schools, she said lightning rod agent had been through the county, and the money intended for chool purposes had gone for the purchase of lightning rods.

Some of the Helena trustees have met this season the lightning rod expert. One of them talking yesterday of his experience with him said:

"One day a most pleasant and genial gentleman appeared in my office. After inquiring if I was one of the school trustees, he said: 'I am here for the purpose of selling lightning rods. When I tell you that I presume you will want to tell me to get out. But, while I am selling lightning rods, I want to say I am not a typical agent of that sort of goods. Ten years ago I was a school trustee in Ohio. We built a fine school house, and as a matter of economy we did not provide the building with lightning rods. The first week the school was opened there came an electrical storm. The school house was struck, the teacher killed and three of the pupils so severly injured they never recovered I was one of the most bitter opponents of the lightning rod proposition and when that terrible catastrophe occurred I felt as though I were a murderer. I resigned and went through that section putting lightning rods on school houses at my own expense. After I had used my own money I continued the work, only charging the actual cost. Thousands of school houses in these United States are to-day equipped with these lightning rods due to my exertions. I did not come here to sell lightning rods, but when I saw the unprotected condition of your school houses, I felt I must see the trustees and tell them of the awful responsibility there was upon them in that respect, and tell you how one man has suffered remorse for years for just such neglect as you are now showing.'"

Notice.

All persons indebted to Drs. Matheny & Hines must settle within the next 30 days or the accounts will be put into judgment. The books are in my hands for settlement.

Freaks in Trees.

Two interesting items about trees are given in the New York Sun, of which the cherry story will probably be the more appreciated.

There is an "Ohio Beauty" cherry tree in the old Bassford orchard in Brown's Valley, California, which bears from 11,000 to 15,000 pounds of fruit every year. The tree is so large that a scaffolding has to be built around it so that the cherries can be picked.

In felling a big tree at Ivorytown village, in the Connecticut Valley, the other day, the woodsman drove his ax into a big, round stone exactly in the heart of it. With difficulty he exhumed the rock which weighed thirty or forty pounds. How the stone got into the trunk is a mystery to all farmers who have noted the pheomenon. Still more curious is the fact that the stone had no affected the tree's growth.

Fair Matter

The Fair matter is still boiling. Saturday, he obtained bail and was liberated. He is in very poor health, and it was not advisable to keep him in confinement longer than necessary. It is also understood that he has made a confession as to what he knows of the whole trouble. If this is so, of course the details are not yet made public. The grand jury knows all about it, however. To-day, the grand jury is engaged on another case.

Scott's Emulsion

is made up of the most essential elements that go to nourish the body. Where the appetite is varying or lacking, it increases it, and where digestion is weak, it aids it to perform its function in a more vigorous way. It enriches the blood, makes healthy flesh and cures chronic coughs and colds by making it possible for the body to resist disease. Our friends tell us "IT WORKS WONDERS" but we never like to over-state the merits of our remedy even when it has been tested and tried for over twenty-five years. If you will ask for it, we will send you a book telling you more about the subject than we can put in a few words.

Go to your druggist for Scott's Emulsion. Two sizes, 50 cts. and $1.00.

COURT.

Thursday's Daily.

There has been a great deal of miscellaneous work done, besides the special cases we have mentioned from time to time.

DIVORCES

Besides the Sherwood divorce already published, we find Elizabeth Raub divorced from Jacob Raub and name changed to Olinger; John F. Kagey was divorced from Sarah Kagey; Mollie Berry from Samuel Berry; Bertie Molden from Charles B. Molden; Florence Rohrabaugh from Ed. C. Rohrabough, and she has custody of the child, Elizabeth Bricker from Henry Bricker; Sarah A. Meade was given a divorce from Caleb A Meade, and her property put back in her name, which again is Sarah Cass. Mr. Meade, we understand gets back only what he put in. We believe he went to some expense in the way of repairing the buildings. Mattie Cattell vs Jonahan Cattell, was given a divorce and custody of child.

JUDGMENTS.

J. D. Leighty as administrator for the estate of James Draggoo, was given judgment, against Wm. Knepper for $125; vs C. H. and James Ling for $506; against D. N. Terry, $156; vs S. B Howey, $225; vs Fred. Becher, $130 The First National Bank gets judgment against I. M. Grube for $166; D. N. Terry, $234- F. J. Stafford, $115; Geo. Stamets, $62. The Toledo Brewing Co. vs Pfeiffl $1415; Durfee vs Griffin, $880 and foreclosure ordered; M. Teutch vs Tefft, $161; Garrett Bank vs Fanning et al, $92; John S. Boots vs John Knoder et al., $73; John S. Potts vs Bailey and Ferguson, $127; State Life Ins. Co. vs. S. D. Hanna, $80; Hannah Draggoo vs I. M. Grube, $279; Corbin, administrator for Corbin estate vs L. D. Collins, $240; I. O. Bachtel vs Solomon Shearer, $77; Alice Parker vs E. B. Strong, et al., $402 and such other sums as came due, and foreclosure ordered; H. P. Stroh vs Waterloo Broom Co., $674 and foreclosure ordered.

Sarah A. Smith was adjudged to be of unsound mind, and F. M. Hines appointed her guardian. Adam Boyer was declared of unsound mind and Baliss Boyer appointed guardian.

The Case of Krontz vs VanAuken for possession of the effects of the surveyor's office, goes to Steuben county.

Carey Pence vs C. T. Rogers, J. T. Crimmins, receiver, petitioner is allowed $600 exemption as prayed for.

In the case of Alfred McIntosh vs Geo McIntosh for trespass, and damages, the plaintiff got $33.91

CRININALS CASES.

The assault and battery case of State vs Sullivan from Garrett, resulted the jury acquitting the defendant.

The case against Aaron Moore, nuisance, was continued.

The cases for trespass, against Elijah and John Sherwood, both go over to the March term.

In the the trespass case against Wm Sherwood, he was fined $5 but appeals to appellate court.

Of the men sent up for one year, we have already noted. The charge against Frank Swan, was petit larceny; against John Hoffman, burglary and petit larceny; against James Murray, grand larceny; against Henry Thomas, bringing stolen goods into the county.

Of the two cases against Coffinberry, one is for grand larceny and embezzlement and the other for grand larceny. In each case he give $16,000 bail. His bondsmen are: John D. Paul, Elmer Clark, B. Hunsel Warren L. Webster and Chas. W. Camp.

Friday's Daily.

Judge Penfield has been putting in a part of the week at Indianapolis, presumably working in the interest of Fairbanks for U. S. Senator. Judge Watkins, of Huntington, has been holding court here in the meantime, and so the work, or a part of it at least, has been going on.

We have had the pleasure of making the acquaintance of Judge Watkins and find him a very agreeable gentleman, and he seems to be considered a jurist of ability. Of course, the work he is called for is in the main, such cases as are difficult to get a local judge to try. Among these cases, are those in regard to the ex-trustees of Jackson and Smithfield townships. He has already passed on some motions in these cases, and will have some others to decide to-day. It is also possible that he may be called on to try the Fair case, as Judge Penfield, being one of the bondmen, could not sit on that case. And it looks now as if the other cases taken, to Steuben, would have to come before him. He returns to his home to-day, provided no new work comes up to interfere.

Judge Watkins to some extent resembles Senator David B. Hill, of New York. His bald spot is, however, a trifle wider, longer and whiter. Still he seems to know "where he is at" better than Hill does just now.

We find in looking over the court reports we made yesterday, that we overlooked a case against Elijah Sherwood, in which he was fined for assault and battery. The Sherwoods have been figuring in so many cases, that the omission of one or two would not make much difference any way.

Prosecutor Davis informs the COURIER that he hopes to bring on the Fair case before this term closes, and will do so if possible. We are glad to hear this, as it is a case in which all our people are intensely interested, and besides if the parties are not guilty, it should be found out and they be let off.

To day, Friday, the case of Smith vs John Lumm, of Garrett, is being tried before the jury.

The grand jury is still busy at work. It is supposed that they are continuing their investigations into the county matter. It has been the longest and busiest session any grand jury has had for many years.

—The grand jury adjourned right after dinner to-day to meet next Wednesday to finish what business will then come up.

Saturday's Daily.

Ourpeople complain, and justly we think, of many cases that are taken from this county to other counties on a change of venue. But it should be noted that oftimes, a case is brought here from other counties. On the present docket are several. One is the case of First National Bank of Huntington vs. Henry. Arnold, Galbraith et al. And all the cases in regard to the Ashley Furniture Co. are from outside the county. Still this furnishes but poor comfort for the taxpayers who are not interested in any of the cases.

As noted the other day, the cases against the ex-trustees of Jackson and Smithfield go slow. In the case of Jackson, there had been 72 demurrers filed and we understand had once been passed on. This term they were "re opened" and Judge Watkins went through them again. He over ruled all from No 1 up to No 38, also No's 39, 40, 41 and up to 56, also No. 58. He sustained demurrers No. 38, 42, 56, 57, 59 and the rest up to 72. Of course this is all in the nature of preliminary work to get the judge's rulings on points of law, and make the cases easy and short if possible, when they at last come up for actual trial.

In the Smithfield case there is similar condition, but they are so much easier as to show up only 19 paragraphs in their demurrer.

The last case tried, before the temporary adjournment, was that of Chas. F. Brown vs John Lumm of Garrett, a case for damages. Myers & Mountz were attorneys for Brown, and Roby & Sharpless for Lumm. It was not completed when Judge Watkins started for home yesterday, and in the absence of Judge Penfield, C. E. Emanuel was temporary judge to receive the verdict when the jury should come in. The verdict acquitted the defendant, and the jury was discharged and instructed to meet on Monday of week after next, January 18. There will be no court all next week. But the grand jury will meet again on Monday Jan. 11.

We were mistaken in our report of the "contempt" case against those attorneys. We had mentioned commissioner Gunsenhouser as one of them. But he was not made a party to it.

The cases of J. Somers vs I. M. Grube, et al, and of Martha A. Dittmars vs the same, the work is to be resumed January 18.

The case of John Taylor vs Smithfield township, nothing definite has been done.

There is a divorce case pending between Gertrude McCullough and James McCullough. It is ordered that notice be published in the Auburn COURIER, and trial set for March 10.

The Anheuser-Busch Compnay sues Romeo B. Tarney and Lyman Lockwood on a note calling for $984. The judgement is against Tarney, with Lockwood as surety.

The case of David W. Fair vs H. N. Coffinberry to set aside a deed, is put down for Jan. 18.

People are asking us every day, why court is so slow, and why it is now going to stand idle a whole week with so much important work pressing. We cannot answer this, as we do not know the reason. It is true that Judge Penfield has been several days in Indinapolis, but as far as we know, another judge could go on with the work and keep cases going. It may be that attorneys or the parties are not ready, or cannot get ready in time. Or, it may be that some cases are purposely delayed by the parties or the attorneys. But the people would liketo see business go on. The county cases, like those against Perry Fair, the people are very anxious about. And Fair himself is perhaps anxious too. If he is guilty it ought to be settled and let him begin his punishment. If he is innocent the sooner it is found out, and he set free, the better. And if there is any good reason why court should not be working every week of every term, we would be glad to publish such statement in the interest of the public.

None Equal to Dr Hand's So says Mother

Nelsonville; O., Dec. 20, '95—Dr. Hand—Dear Sir:—"I have been using your remedies for my children for over four years, I have used many other medicines but have found none equal to yours. Have recommended Dr. Hand's Colic Cure to many others mothers and persuaded them to try it; they all say it proves satisfactory. I am the mother of nine children and am never without a bottle of all of Dr. Hand's Remedies in the house." At Fischler & Son's 1

He Was an Asker.

Shakespeare says that a rose by any other name would smell as sweet, but this is principle that is not capable of universal application. Give a dog a bad name and hang him, runs the adage, which was evidently borne in mind by the domestic who figures in the following anecdote, related by Mrs. Andrew Lang, wife of an English poet:

"In the days of my childhood a friend of my own was informed by a favorite housemaid that she wished to give warning, as she was going to be married. Indeed, said the lady, and what is your future husband? Please, 'm, he's an asker. 'A what?' 'An asker.' 'I don't understand, what does he do?' 'Well 'm, he-he goes about the streets and if he sees any one coming along that looks kind, he-well, he just stops 'em and asks 'em to give him a trifle, and he makes quite a comfortable living that way.'" "Do you mean a beggar?", 'Well'm, some people do call it that; we call it an asker.'"

Best Cough Medicine.

Many merchants are well aware that their customers are their best friends and take pleasure in supplying them with the best goods obtainable. As an instance we mention Perry & Cameron, prominent druggist of Flushing, Michigan. They say: "We have no hesitation in recommending Chamberlain's Cough Remedy to our customers, as it is the best cough medicine we have ever sold, and always gives satisfaction. For sale at 25 and 50 cents per bottle by Davenport the Druggist.

Tell The Age.

The Columbia City Post has resurrected this old-time arithmetical trick:

"Girls of of a marriageable age could not take to tell how old they are, but you can find out by following the subjoined instructions, the young lady doing the figuring: Tell her to put down the number of the month in which she was born, then multiply it by 2, then add 5, then multiply it by 50, then add it to her age, then subtract 365, then add 115; then tell her to tell you the amount she has left. The two figures to the right will tell you her age, and the remainder the month of her birth. For example, the amount is 822. She is 22 years old and was born in the eighth month (August.")

Save The Children.

When children are attacked with cough, cold and croup, Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup will prove a quick and sure cure. Mr. Elmer E. Baker, Blandon, Pa., writes: "We have used Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup for cough, cold and croup, and found it the best cough medicine and cure for these affections. We never run out of it, but always keep it on hand." Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup is sold everywhere for 25 cents. Insist on having it.

—Recently the house of representatives passed a bill to take effect July 1, 1897, which legalizes the use of private postal cards, the cards to be no larger than the official cards, and to be carried by affixing a stamp. This will save the government the difference between the price of the stamps used and the cost of the cards, together with obviating the handling and storing of large quantities of cards.

Civil Service.

A few years ago, says the LaPorte Argus, there were 80,000 offices, not counting the postoffices, at the disposal of the president through congressmen. The civil service law has been extended until there are now, exclusive of the postoffices, but about 2,000 offices outside the classified list where examinations are required before appointments can be made. Of the consular appointments only twenty-two are now outside the civil service rules. Either the republicans will have to flagrantly violate the laws or there are going to be a great many disappointed republican office seekers.

Old Pennies.

According to good authority there are 119,000,000 old copper pennies somewhere. Nobody knows what has become of them, except once in a while a single specimen turns up in change. A few years ago 4,500,000 bronze two-cent pieces were set afloat. Three millions of these are still outstanding. Three million nickel three-cent pieces are scattered over the United States, but it is very rarely that one is seen.

Recorder's Office

Volume XXVII | Auburn, DeKalb County, Indiana, Thursday January 21, 1897. | Number 3.

CASH! WHY? CASH!

We have discovered that we can save our customers money by doing away with our books entirely. Everybody Aants to buy CHEAP and we know we can sell you enough CHEAPER to more than offset the inconvenience (if it is an inconvenience.) We desire to state briefly why we are changing to a STRICTLY CASH BASIS on HARDWARE and cash or notes for farm machinery, wagons and buggies.

1st. Nearly all the other stores in Auburn are doing a cash business and we have to carry more accounts than we can offord to do, at the prices we have been getting.

2d. It takes an extra man to keep books and we propose to do with one less man and cut the profit that much, thereby SwVING YOU MONEY.

3d. In a busy day we quite frequently forget to charge as afterwards we find out when men come to pay for goods and we have nothing charged to them.

4th. Some few people when they owe an account and have not enough money to pay it and buy the articles they need in our line will go some place else and buy and pay them the cash and still owe us on acconnt.

5th. A few accounts get mixed as for instance J. Jones buys something and it is charged, and when we start out make our colleftions, we wonder whether it is John, Joseph Jacob or Jonathan Jones. We try all of them, get CURSED by most of them, and paid by none of them, sometimes.

6th. We meet all competition in price and now we propose to beat all competition by buying for cash and selling for cash.

7th. We are going to sell at such close margins that we will get the hardware trade because prices will tell.

Come and see us when you want anything in our line and we will explain our system more fully to you.

Very Respectfully Yours,

BROWN, CULBERTSON & BOLAND.

MR. COFFINBERRY DEAD

The Terrible Strain of his troubles, Combined with Heart Disease.

He Expires Ten Minutes after New Warrants had been read to Him.

In spite of all the exciting events of the past few days, in which Mr. Coffinberry was looked on as a possible criminal, the news that came this morning of his sudden death, came as a terrible shock. He died at about 6:30 this morning and the particulars are about like this:

Deupty Sheriff Platter started over there at about 5 a. m. to serve another warrant on him, and bring him over to Auburn. This was on the new indictment for "raising" the county orders, as mentioned in Saturday's DAILY. In addition to the "raised" orders, it had been found that orders were in existence that had never been presented to the county treasurer, and of which that officer probably knew nothing whatever. Such an order, might have on it, the apparent endorsement of the treasurer, "not paid for want of funds," and would then draw interest. But this signing of the treasurer's name, was a plain forgery, and on this was based one of the many new indictments. The new warrants against him, were ready to be served as early as Friday afternoon but the officers did not go over to Garrett, as they had assurances that he would be over here Saturday morning. But at Saturday noon he had not come, and Deputy Platter then started over there. As it had been represented that Mr. Coffinberry's health was in such a critical condition that it would not be safe to take him from home, the court, as is proper in such cases directed a physician to go along with the officer and see whether he could be brought over or not. Dr. Buchtel was sent over, and he and Deputy Platter reached there about the middle of the afternoon of Saturday. They found Mr. Coffinberry in very bad condition and suffering continually from severe attacks of heart trouble. They staid there till 7 in the evening, the doctor being all the time at his bedside, and doing what was possible for his relief. But he finally instructed Mr. Platter, that it would not be safe to move him over. He advised waiting till Monday morning. This was done, and this morning about 5 o'clock Mr. Platter and Dr. Buchtel went over again. On reaching Mr. Coffinberry's residence they rang the bell and were admitted by Will Coffinberry who said his father was in bed upstairs, ane showed them up. After the usual greetings, Mr. Coffinberry said "I suppose you have come for me." He was answered that such was the case, when he at once replied that he would dress and go with them, as he felt well enough to go. There was no examination into his condition by Dr. Buchtel, as Mr. Coffinberry's confident assertion, that he felt able to go, made any examination unnecessary. Mr. Platter suggested that he, Coffinberry, ought to first hear the warrants, read, to which he readily agreed, and sat half reclining in bed while this was done. While the new warrants for embezzlement of which there were several, were being read, he did not seem to be affected, but when the one charging him with forgery was read, it evidently surprised or frightened him, for he at once showed on his face, a pained and very marked expression. With a groan as if in pain, he asked to be taken to the water closet near by. Mr. Platter went with him. Mrs. Coffinberry in the meantime had arisen, and was dressed. She had occupied another room and was not present until Mr. Coffinberry and the officer came back from the closet. As Mr. Coffinbery went back into his room to dress, Mrs Coffinberry was left in the room with him, till he was dressed, the officer remaining outside the door. He then came out and told Platter he was ready, and it was then proposed to telephone for their team, which had been left at the livery stable. Will however, said it was too early, as there was no night service. So Platter suggested that Dr. Buchtel go and get the team. This he did. In the meantime Mr. Coffinbery drank a cup of coffee and soon after fell faint into a chair and from that he was helped into bed by his sister, Mrs. Prentiss who is staying there now.

When Dr. Buchtel returned, he was met at the door by Will Coffinberry, who said "Hurry up, and go up to see father, he is having a very bad spell." The Doctor hurried upstairs, and found him dying. He administered some emergency remedies, and gave a hypodermic interjection. In a few minutes, the family physican Dr. Thompson, who had been hastily summoned, came in and also gave a few injections but all to no avail. Mr. Coffinberry died within ten minutes from the time Dr. Buchtel seturned. It was a tragic scene, the heart broken wife, the sons and the sister, all suddenly bereaved and under circumstances of such peculiar distress! But all talk of snicice or poisoning is no doubt without any reason.

Of course, the officers came home, and the case against Mr. Coffinberry as far as he personally is concerned, is ended. The cases involving Fair, and investigations already begun, will no doubt bring to light any wrong doing of his, if any such has existed, and in this way the truth will come out and the people know whatever may be in the cases that were being urged against him.

—The Gazette's extra was a little misleading. For a correct statement, see the DAILY.

The County Cases.

The understanding now is, as we learn from Clerk Long, that the cases against Perry Fair and Mr. Coffinberry will be brought up in court on Monday of next week. January 18. Our people will be glad to hear that this prompt action has been resolved on, as public attention has been fixed on the matter for several week. Of course it is well known that Judge Penfield will not try these cases, as he is one of the bondsmen, and another judge will be called in. This is certain. But there is besides, possibility that the entire thing may be taken to another county on change of venue. We hope, however, that this will not be done, but that the trial may be at home. We believe that justice to both sides, will be as fully secured in this county as if it were taken elsewhere. And besides, our people have got a prejudice against having a case taken away, as they believe it adds to the expense, without furthering the ends of justice. But whether tried here or elsewhere, we hope it may be fully sifted to the bottom, and all done with a view to satisfy justice and save expense to the taxpayers.

His Committees.

Our people will be interested in knowing how our representative, Hon. C. M Brown has fared at the hands of Speaker Pettitt in his choice of committees. We find that Mr. Brown is on three different committees, that of "Fees and and Salaries," that of "Benevolent and Scientific Institutions," and that of "Corporations." All these are liable to be important committees, though they may not be this time. It depends on the matter that may happen to be introduced into the legislature. For instance, if a law changing the salaries of county and state officers should come up, the work will be difficult and important. We feel assured however that the Auburn members will be found at their posts and at work.

Attack Prevented

It will be an agreeable surprise to persons subject to attack of bilious colic to learn that prompt relief may be had by taking Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy, In many instances the attack may be prevented by taking this remedy as soon as the first symtoms of the disease appear. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Davenport the Druggist.

Primary Elections.

Kentucky, says the Laporte Argus, has a primary law, that was agreed on by the leaders of both parties several years ago, and then adopted as the law. It provides for making the nominations of all parties at one election held under the Australian election law of the state, with the same penalties for violating its provisions. It simply puts the primaries under the strictest legal control, and it works to the entire satisfaction of all parties. It is not improbable that the Indiana legislature will pass such a law in this state. It would only be necessary to copy the Kentucky measure that has proved so satisfactory.

A county superintendent occasionally gets some bright answers in examinations for teacher's license, but these from another county are pretty rich. Stability is taking care of stables, and also means stables in general. A mosquito is the child of white and black parents. Obelisk, one of marks of punctuation. Doxology, dropsy in the head. Ironical, something very hard. Monastery, a place for monsters. A raffle is a sort of a gun. Ventilation is letting in contaminated air. A reherasal is what theyhave at a funeral. An incendiary is when you go around preaching and singing hymns. Expostulation is to have the smallpox. The boy was cursory when he ran to catch the train. The man was very cursory because he swore a great deal. A critic is something to put your mind onto. Cannibal is two brothers who kill each other in the Bible. An impulse is what the doctor takes hold of to see if you are sick. A dipthong is a very contagious disease. The boy was sick with information of stomach.

Electoral Count.

In every state the electors met on Monday, at the state capital to go through the real election of a president. These men vote directly for the candidate. The electors of this state voted for McKinley; of 13 in Kentucky, one voted for Bryan and the rest for McKinley. In each state they make three copies of their vote. One is kept by the district judge; one is sent by mail to the vice president, now Mr. Stevenson, in Washington, and the third copy is carried in person to the vice president by one of the electors chosen by the electors at their meeting. He gets 25 cents a mile one way for his expenses. This looks like small pay, but the men from Oregon, California, etc. will receive about $800 or $1000. The man from Maryland will get but a few dollars. Mr. Stevenson will put all these packages in a small safe kept in his office for that purpose. Then on the second Wednesday in February these votes will be opened and counted and the result announced in the House, where both the senators and members of the House are present. Alabama will be counted and announced first and then the other stater in alphabetical order. Should objections be made to the report of the vote of any state, the two houses will separate and consider the matter, each in its own room and later will meet and report what decision they have reached. If they agree, the vote is counted or rejected accordingly. If they disagree, the matter is laid aside and the rest of the vote counted. Then if one man has a majority without the vote of the contested state' it may never be called up. But if the vote of that state is necessary, then some way will be taken to decide the question, as was done by the electoral commisson in the Tilden case. This time it will be found that McKinley has 272 votes and Bryan 175.

My Baby.

CANTON, O., 2-26-'96—Hanl Medicine Co.—"My baby had been having wind colic since her birth and she was two months old when I procured a bottle of Dr. Hand's Colic Cure. In less than two weeks' time she was cured of having colic and has never had it since. We had tried several other medicines, but they did no good. I can cheerfully recommend your colic cure to be the best. Mrs. F. H. Rock," Sold by Fischler & Son, 25c. 2

The Grandest Remedy.

United States Minister Dead.

The steamer Monowai, which has arrived at San Francisco, brought advices from Honolulu to the effect that United States Minister Albert S. Willis died at 9 a. m. on January 6, after an illness covering several months, resulting from the attack of pneumonia he suffered while on his vacation to the United States. In April last the Minister and his family left Hawaii for their old home in Louisville. While in San Francisco on the return trip, the Minister contracted a severe cold which settled upon his lungs. This was the immediate cause of his death.

Sixteen Children Burned to Death.

Fire completely destroyed the Buckners' Orphans' Home near Dallas, Texas. Sixteen children were cremated and nine injured, three of them fatally. All the dead except one were buried in the home cemetery. Rev. J. V. Buckner, manager of the home, officiated. The home physicians are in attendance on the injured. All the farmers in the vicinity turned out and assisted in making coffins, digging graves and burying the little victims.

Spain Relents.

A dispatch from Madrid says that at a Cabinet meeting just held, the Queen Regent presiding, it was agreed to introduce reforms in the Island of Cuba and a royal decree on the subject will be published on the King's fete date. It is added that it is possible that Julio Sanguilly, the American citizen recently sentenced at Havana to imprisonment for life on the charge of conspiracy against the Government, wi l be granted a free pardon.

Shot His Father.

Harry Aylor is in jail on a charge of having shot his father, William Aylor, at Gallipolis, Ohio. The son claims he did the shooting to save his mother's life. He says the elder Aylor assailed his wife. Harry sought to defend his mother. The elder Aylor became all the more enraged, and, it is claimed, whipped Mrs. Aylor terribly. Harry determined to defend his mother, secured his father's revolver, and shot him through the head.

Shot Dead Before the Czar.

Berlin special: The Lokal Anzeiger publishes a dispatch from St. Petersburg reporting a lamentable incident which has occurred in the Czar's presence. The Czar, it seems, beckoned to a gardener who was working in the park at Tsarskoeselo. The guard, seeing the man running toward the Czar, shot him dead, supposing that he was a would-be assassin. The Czar was deeply affected by this occurrence.

Expired in a Physician's Chair.

Michael Carroll, a wealthy farmer, in the town of Nekimi, Wis., died in a doctor's office, while under the influence of chloroform, administered to counteract the pain caused by the amputation of a finger. An examination made beforehand gave no indication of danger, death being due to the condition of the blood vessel walls. Carroll was 65 years old, and a resident of Winnebago County since 1895.

Double Tragedy.

A dispatch from Chattanooga, Tenn., says news was received there from Rugby, Tenn., that Benjamin L. Davis of the Tobard Inn, had cut his wife's throat and then killed himself. The cause is a mystery. Mr. Davis was a clerk in the Gibson House in Cincinnati until last fall, when he went to the Tobard Inn. Before going to Cincinnati he had been employed in the Netherlands Hotel in New York City.

Mother and Babe Drowned.

Jennie Browning, a beautiful girl, near Monterey, Ky., took her babe, slipped to the Kentucky River and jumped from a shantyboat. Both mother and child were drowned. The mother had the measles and was possibly delerious, and brooding over recent trouble probably prompted suicide. The bodies were recovered.

Confessed a Murder.

Paterson Rivers, who died at the County Infirmary at West Union, Ohio, once said he killed a man in Pennsylvania. He claimed to have come from Philadelphia. The Philadelphia police were corresponded with, but knew nothing of the alleged murder. He was 75 years old.

Face in the Fire.

William Spence, an aged resident of Leesville, Ohio, was found by his wife lying face down in a grate. She dragged him out, but death resulted in two hours from terrible burns. Paralysis caused his fall.

Sherman Accepts.

Senator Sherman has been at Canton to visit McKinley. On his departure for Washington he said to the Associated Press representative, "I have accepted the State portfolio."

Deputy Marshall Killed.

W. A. Bird, Deputy United States Marshall of Jackson, Ky., was instantly killed by Jacob Neace while in the discharge of his duty, Friday. The Sheriff and a posse went to the scene of the murder to arrest Neace.

Horribly Mutilated.

At Windfall, Ind., the wife of Dr. Winser Austin was fatally injured by an explosion of natural gas that accumulated in a cave used for storing vegetables. She was blown through a board wall and horribly mutilated.

90,000 Starve to Death.

In the district of Jabalpur, India, which had a population of 2,000,000, 90,000 persons have died of starvation. Thousands of others will perish, despite efforts that may be made to succor them. Many now living are so weak they cannot assimilate food.

Counterfeit $20 Note Afloat.

A dangerous counterfeit of the $20 United States silver certificate has been discovered. The note is of the series of 1891, check letter B. The most noticeable defect is in the treasury numbers, which, although of good color, are too heavy and out of alignment.

PRIESTS ARE IN PERIL.

Eighteen Carried Away or Slain by Philippine Rebels.

The papal delegate at Washington, Archbishop Martinelli, has received discouraging news from his vicar general, Roderiquez, in Rome, regarding the rebellion in the Philippine Islands. In an interview Mgr. Martinelli discussed the situation in both the Philippine Islands and in Cuba with considerable freedom. "Our order is very strong here," said the Archbishop, "as we have several bishops and 330 priests scattered all through the provinces. It was too much to expect that all of them had escaped, and the news I received is sad. I have two letters from my vicar general, and he informs me that five Augustinian priests in parishes about Manilla have been carried off by the rebels, and no news whatever has been received from them. In the absence of information we believe that they are dead. Thirteen Dominican priests were also either carried away or slain by the rebels, and those who were taken off were afterward killed; so we suppose the same fate has befallen the members of our order. The rebellion in the Philippines is likely to prove a most horrible affair, as the natives are only semi-civilized. Spain, too, is handicapped to some extent by the fact that she maintains on the island only a scattered army of about four thousand men. Spain will have a difficult task to subdue the half-barbarous people of the Philippines."

CONTEST FOR CORN ISLAND.

Nicaragua Fortifying to Resist Occupation by Columbia.

At Corn Island and its fortifications 100 men are now clearing lands to extend the fortifications. The Nicaraguans have 500 pounds of dynamite and ten electric batteries. Mr. Donaldson, formerly a United States army engineer, located the dynamite mines and fortifications and then left the island for Managua. Thus far the Colombians have determined to contest every foot. Gen. Reyes says "the problem" will be solved by dynamite. The little steamer Lucy B., owned by Herbert Y. Bingham, the British consul of Nicaragua, stationed at San Juan del Norte (Greytown), has been chartered by the Nicaraguan Government for an indefinite period to carry troops and act generally as a warship. If this affair should result in an actual collision the Lucy B. may be blown to pieces by the Colombian man-of-war—a risk which the owners seem willing to take. From sources that may be considered trustworthy it is said the Colombians have really the first right to Corn Island, but the island has been a ground of dispute between Colombia and Nicaragua for years.

COLORADO'S MINERALS.

Total Value of Last Year's Production Was $36,253,674.

The total value of the mineral production of Colorado for the year 1893 is represented by the following figures:

Gold	$17,512,385
Silver (commercial value)	14,787,180
Lead	2,887,109
Copper	1,067,000
Total	$36,253,674

The output of gold during this period fell $2,000,000 short of expectations, but, notwithstanding this disappointment, the State stands at the head of the list of producers of both gold and silver. California coming second with a gold record of $16,500,000 and silver $148,000, and Montana third, with $4,500,000 in gold and $10,000,000 in silver.

EUROPE LIKES OUR APPLES.

Total Shipments for 1896 Were 2,156,334 Barrels.

The total shipments of apples for 1896, and including the first two days of the present year, to European markets were as follows: From Boston, 725,642 barrels; from New York, 454,771 barrels; from Montreal, 699,496 barrels; from Halifax, 204,095 barrels; from Portland, 71,297 barrels, and from Philadelphia, 1,033 barrels, making a total of 2,156,334 barrels, as against 527,524 barrels for the preceding year.

Raised to Affluence.

Charles Camp, a little crippled lad who from his invalid chair sells papers at the junction of Madison street, Ashland and Ogden avenues, Chicago, and whose bright face has been familiar to frequenters of that locality for the last four years, has fallen heir to property the value of which is estimated at $40,000. It was bequeathed to him by his father, who died eighteen months ago at Spokane, Wash. The estate consists of a farm and valuable improvements. The possession of a sum of money many times greater than most men are able to acquire in a lifetime of frugality and industry is scarce compensation to "Charlie," whose short career has been terribly blighted by the loss of both his lower limbs, the result of a street car accident. The unfortunate lad, through his mother, was awarded damages in the amount of $50,000, the largest judgment of its kind ever granted in Chicago. The case was afterward appealed by the street railway company, who finally settled with Mrs. Camp for $9,000, of which her attorneys succeeded in grabbing $5,700. Judicially separated from her husband, with heavy incumbrances on her property, Mrs. Camp was forced to rely on the precarious earnings of a small cigar store and news stand. Young Charlie, as soon as his affliction permitted, was regularly wheeled by Willie Adams, a waif whom Mrs. Camp had befriended and who now shares in the family's good fortune, to Madison street and Ashland avenue, where the sturdy little cripple offered newspapers for sale. Three weeks ago the news of the family's good fortune came. For over a year the executors of Mathias Camp, from whom Mrs. Camp obtained a divorce in 1886, and who died in Spokane in June, 1895, have diligently sought tidings of his heir, young Camp. Mrs. Camp, with Charlie and his faithful attendant, Willie Adams, will leave for Spokane next month, where they will permanently reside.

Steel Mills for the West.

A gigantic project is to be carried out by a joint stock company of Western Pennsylvania mill workers. It is the building of a great iron and steel plant at Port Angeles on Puget Sound, northwest of Seattle, Wash. The plant will cover thirty acres, and the cost will be about $1,500,000 to $2,000,000. Work will begin in the spring. The Board of Trade and Chamber of Commerce of Port Angeles offered an immense bonus, which was accepted. The plant will employ 2,000 men. The plant will consist of a blast furnace of 300 tons capacity, thirty 30-ton open-hearth furnaces, a bloom and billet mill, a rod mill, a bar mill, a wire and nail mill, a sheet mill, a tinplate mill, a foundry, machine shop, blacksmith shop, and boiler shop.

Stephens Is for Business.

Gov. Stephens, in his inaugural address to the new Legislature of Missouri, declares his ambition is to make his administration distinctively a business administration, and calls upon the Legislature to make the present session a business one. "Partisanship," he says, "should be moderated, if not suppressed, and unseemly strife should be avoided."

No Water in Schools.

Owing to the pollution of Lake Michigan, the Chicago Board of Education passed an order directing that the supply of drinking water in all the public schools be shut off until further notice. It is likely that for some time the equipment of every Chicago school boy and girl will include, besides the time-honored bag and lunch box, a water bottle or two, slung over the shoulder and containing boiled water brought from home. Some of the principals anticipate much annoyance on account of the lack of water. Others think it will not occasion any inconvenience, believing the children will learn at once that they must quench their thirst before leaving their homes. It is not likely that the schools will be deprived of water for any length of time. The members of the board will doubtless get together and arrange for boiling it, or introducing filters. Neither is it anticipated that any hardship will follow the operation of the order. The children are in school only three hours at a time, and can get along without water if necessary. If it was at a different season of the year there might be some suffering.

A CITY OF DEAD AND DYING.

Over Half of the Inhabitants of Bombay, India, Have Fled.

Over half the population of Bombay, is estimated to amount to about 900,000, has fled from the plague, and the erstwhile crowded streets, docks and bazaars are not recognizable. Business in piece goods, crockery and hardware is at a standstill, and the money lenders have vanished. The courts are deserted and the judges and officials have gone to a healthier clime. Many of the native doctors, graduates of the college, have fled, and those remaining refuse to attend plague cases, or, when they do attend them, will not touch the sufferers, dreading contagion. Clerks and others whose vocations call them to the city daily have removed to suburban stations, where the people are mostly living in thatched huts. It is estimated that 800,000 persons are encamped at Andheri, from whence they will soon be forced to migrate owing to the lack of water and sanitation, threatening to breed cholera. The cemeteries are already filled to overflowing, and the wind is spreading the contagion. The nights are made hideous by cymbals and melancholy dirges. Often difficulty is experienced in burying the dead, friends and relatives refusing to carry the corpses. In some instances women have assisted in carrying the dead bodies. A large number of plague corpses at the Tower of Silence, the Parsee burial place, have not been eaten by the vultures inhabiting it. Corpses have been found in the streets. The official returns show that up to Wednesday there were 3,394 cases of bubonic plague and 2,356 deaths from that disease.

NEW USE FOR CORN STALKS.

E. S. Cramp Has a Scheme Which Will Benefit the Farmers.

Edwin S. Cramp, the millionaire ship builder of Philadelphia, is now interested especially in the production of padding for warships and fodder for cattle from cornstalks. Thanksgiving Day last Edwin S. Cramp was granted a patent for the new invention he bought from the inventor. Experiments have been made in the East for six or seven months and in every case they have been very successful. Now the scheme is to be introduced in the West, and next year a considerable portion of the cornstalk crop of Illinois and Iowa is to be bought from the farmers and used in making both the fodder and the ship padding. The British Government has become interested in the new discovery of the Cramps. If it is pleased with the results of its investigation and decides to adopt the invention it will mean that a large additional demand will be created, and, of course, the corn raisers will be the beneficiaries. The process for manufacturing the two things—cattle food and ship padding—is simple, as explained by Mr. Cramp. It consists in separating the pith from the outer stalk and grinding each. The outer portion of the stalk is converted into coffer-dam, as the article used in the ships is called. The pith when ground and prepared is the food for cattle. A factory is to be established at Rockford, Ill.

DID IT TO ESCAPE TAXATION.

Millionaire John D. Rockefeller Uses the Church to Evade the Law.

Millionaire John D. Rockefeller, who took the stand in New York in the suit brought against him by Rev. Dr. Daniel C. Potter in the name of the Tabernacle Baptist Church, was asked: "Who was the real owner of the lease obtained from St. Mark's Church?" "I was," he answered. "But it was held in the name of the church; why was that?" "The reason for that," replied Mr. Rockefeller, "was to escape taxation. If I had held the lease in my own name the property would have been taxed. If the church had held it, it was exempt from taxation."

Rejoicing in San Francisco.

An open air mass meeting was held at San Francisco to celebrate the defeat of the funding bill. Fireworks, oratory and pyrotechnics were the features of the jubilant celebration.

Short in Their Accounts.

Harry Ferguson, postmaster, and P. P. Hoop, money order clerk, of Colorado Springs, Colo., have been arrested, charged with the embezzlement of government money.

NATIONAL SOLONS.

REVIEW OF THEIR WORK AT WASHINGTON.

Detailed Proceedings of Senate and House—Bills Passed or Introduced in Either Branch—Questions of Moment to the Country at Large.

The Legislative Grind.

By a vote of 168 to 102, the House Monday rejected the funding measure proposed by the Pacific Railroad magnates. All substitutes were similarly disposed of, and the only thing left for the Government is to now institute foreclosure proceedings. The Pacific Railroad lobby was overwhelmed at the large majority against the bill. Comparatively unknown members of the House appeared to have studied the question carefully and they poured hot shot into the Pacific Railroad and its management. President Cleveland has already announced in default of legislation by Congress he would proceed at once to foreclose the second mortgage which the Government now holds and either buy in the first mortgage or take the chances in the courts of securing enough for the Government. It is the lien to make itself whole. It is the general belief that if the President carries out his threat Mr. Huntington's friends will immediately make a new and much more favorable proposition to the Government, which can be accepted through the medium of a new bill to be passed by Congress. Secretary Olney, in behalf of the United States, and Sir Julian Pauncefote, on the part of Great Britain, affixed their signatures to a new treaty, by which, for a term of five years, the two English-speaking nations agree to abide in peace and without a resort to arms, all possible questions of controversy being referred to a court of arbitration, with the single exception that neither nation surrenders its honor or dignity to the judgment of arbitration. Later in the day President Cleveland sent the treaty and a message earnestly approving it to the Senate, and that body immediately ratified it.

The House witnessed a sensational episode Tuesday, Mr. Johnson (Cal.), who recently made a bitter attack on Editor Hearst of San Francisco and New York, was himself made the target of denunciatory charges by Mr. McGuire (Cal.). The wordy due grew out of the publication in the Congressional Record, as a part of Mr. Maguire's remarks on Mr. Johnson's speech in which Mr. Maguire defended Mr. Hearst, and without the mention of Mr. Johnson's name, detailed some matters in Johnson's early life when he resided in Syracuse, N. Y. Mr. Johnson got the floor on a question of privilege. He was at times dramatic. He denounced Mr. Maguire's attack on him as wanton and cowardly and told the story of his indictment thirty-four years ago in New York for forgery and how he had gone out to California to rear a new home and make a new name. Then with a bitter invective he paid his respects to Mr. Maguire and Mr. Cooper of Wisconsin, who characterized his attack on Mr. Hearst as cowardly. In reply Mr. Maguire said: "He whines at this attack on himself. He thinks only of himself. He does not think of the grief and anguish until it strikes himself. Why did not he think of these things when he made the attack on another who was not present and who was not a member of this body. Those charges are false, and it ill-becomes the author of those charges to whine because I reply." Futile effort was made to have the remarks of both stricken from the Record. The Senate passed the day in lively political debate, upon the free homestead and fourth-class postmasterships.

The Senate, in executive session Wednesday, had up for a time the nomination of David R. Francis to be Secretary of the Interior, but no action was taken. Senator Vest, of Missouri, was the principal opponent of confirmation, but he was seconded by Senator Pugh, of Alabama. Senator Gear introduced a new bill for the settlement of the Pacific railroad indebtedness, constituting the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior and the Attorney General a commission with full power to make a settlement of the indebtedness of all the bond-aided Pacific roads to the government, upon approval of the President. After a very dull day devoted to passing bills of minor importance the House plunged into a warm controversy over a bill to tax oleomargarine and other imitations of dairy products

The Senate Thursday passed the free-homestead bill. It is a measure of far-reaching importance to the West. The effect of the bill is to open to settlement all public lands acquired from Indians, free of any payment to the Government beyond the minor office fees, and to release from payment those who have heretofore settled on these lands. The number of acres involved is 32,252,541, which would have yielded the Government, at the prices heretofore established, $35,343,006. The lands are mainly arid and those who have settled upon them are unable to make payment by reason of the scanty products of the soil. The Senate adjourned until Monday. The House spent almost the entire day debating the Grout bill, to subject oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products to the laws of the States into which they are transported. The bill was passed by a vote of 126 yeas to 96 nays. The advocates of the measure took the view that the States should be allowed to regulate the sale of a product sailing under false colors, and the opponents that the bill would establish a dangerous precedent, and invade the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce. In a speech in support of the bill Mr. Henderson of Iowa said with much emphasis: "The opposition to this bill comes from the capitalized institutions in Chicago and Kansas City. It comes from men like Armour and Swift, who are destroying the great cattle interests of my State and other States by keeping down the price of beeves and keeping up the price of beefsteak."

Notes of Current Events.

It is said that Adelina Patti is anxious to secure the decoration of the Legion of Honor.

Kate Dunn, 23 years old, a servant living at New York City, was shot in the head by Michael Minneter, a laborer. Minneter then shot himself in the head.

The third and last of the torpedo boats being built for the United States at the Columbian Iron Works was successfully launched. Her total cost will be $97,500. She is 160 feet long and sixteen feet broad.

Bedros Effini, the Armenian who was recently appointed subkaimakan of Tscharsandjak, Turkey, was assassinated two days after his arrival there.

Secretary Herbert, of the Navy Department, has decided to increase the present naval corps of inspectors of steel used in the construction of naval vessels of the United States by the appointment of a number of expert civilians.

The appellate term of the Supreme Court of New York has handed down a decision to the general effect that a husband, although living apart from his wife, is responsible for debts contracted by her for necessary articles in the absence of any agreement to the contrary.

FROM FARM TO STATE

GOV. JAMES A. MOUNT INAUGURATED.

Indiana's New Executive Takes Up His Duties Without Display or Ado—Farm-like Simplicity Rules—Gov. Matthews Says a Brief Farewell.

Mount Sworn In.

Without display or ado Indiana changed Governors Monday. James A. Mount came to Indianapolis from the farm to receive the oath as the chief executive and Claude Matthews, after having served the people of the State for four years, left the capitol to go back to his broad acres on the Wabash. William S. Haggard, a newspaper man from Lafayette, succeeded Mortimer Nye, a lawyer of LaPorte, as Lieutenant Governor.

The ceremonies incident upon the installation of the new officers occupied less than an hour. In the presence of the Senators and Representatives in the Senate chamber the Lieutenant Governor was inaugurated at 12 o'clock. From the chamber the inaugural procession marched to the lower south rotunda of the capitol, where the new Governor was inaugurated.

It was the wish of the incoming Governor that there should be no attempt at show and his wishes were respected. There was no inaugural parade; no men in uniform and no special display of good clothes. A single brass band far up in the balcony furnished all the music. Among the thousands who came in to see their representative take the oath of office were five brothers of the new Governor. The oath was administered by Chief Justice Jordan of the Supreme Court.

Gov. Matthews said a word of farewell. "It is but an exchange," said he in the course of his remarks. "My successor leaves the plow; I return to it. Proud of Indiana at home and abroad; proud of her splendid record in peace and in war, exulting in her illustrious history of the past, my heart and my hand will ever respond to that still grander future which, under the blessings of God, shall be hers."

The inaugural address of the Governor was brief and to the point.

The new Governor and Lieutenant Governor, with their wives, assisted by the other State officers, held a public reception in the Governor's parlors in the evening.

Legislative Proceedings.

As soon as the upper house got back into its own chamber after the joint session had listened to Gov. Matthews' message Friday, Senator Shively of Richmond introduced an anti-trust bill. The bill provides that any company or corporation which joins a trust shall forfeit its right to do business in the State, and provides further that the officers of the company or corporation joining a trust may be fined $500. The attorney general of the State is directed to prosecute all companies or corporations that become members of trusts, and as an incentive it is provided that he shall receive a fee of $500 for every conviction. Prosecuting attorneys are also authorized to begin prosecutions. The House did nothing except to adopt new rules, one of which requires a two-thirds vote to appeal from the chair. Both houses adjourned until Monday to await Gov. Mount's inaugural.

Tuesday was given up to caucusing by both houses, no regular business being transacted. It was definitely settled that C. W. Fairbanks should be sent to the Senate, but not before much feeling and a strong opposition had developed. The minority strength was divided between McKeen, Gen. Lew Wallace, and Judge Taylor.

The only measure of importance offered in the House Thursday morning was a bill by Representative Nicholson, author of the temperance law of the last session, putting the holders of Government licenses on the same footing as saloonkeepers and making them pay the same license fee to the State. Since the Nicholson law was passed many saloons have refused to take out licenses, but have run as quart shops. The bill will drive them out of existence. In strange contrast with the introduction of this measure in the House was the reception of each Senator by mail Thursday morning of a four-ounce bottle of whisky from a Terre Haute distilling firm. Some members, when it was known what the packages contained, refused to take theirs from the postmaster of the Senate, and others jokingly alleged that they were disappointed in the amount and were waiting for larger bottles.

Uncomfortable.

A New England woman who lives in an inland town attended the recent Christian Endeavor convention in Washington. She spent one night of the journey on board a steam-boat. It was the first time she had ever traveled by water. She reached Washington extremely fatigued. To a friend who remarked it, she replied: "Yes, I'm tired to death. I don't know as I care to travel by water again. I read the card in my state-room about how to put the life-preserver on, and I thought I understood it, but I guess I didn't, though. Some way, I couldn't seem to go to sleep with the thing on."

He Leaped for Joy.

The whimsical Suvarof, one of the Empress Catherine's favorites, on receiving the marshal's baton, ordered a Te Deum, and commanded a number of chairs to be placed in the center of the church, one for each officer his senior. He appeared in the sacred edifice arrayed in his pajamas, or something less than their equivalent, and proceeded to vault over these files of chairs, taking each in its due succession. It was not until the conclusion of this performance that he donned the new uniform and desired the horror-stricken clergy to proceed with the office.

An Encore.

The little word "again" once threw a large assembly into fits of laughter. It was at a public meeting in New York. One of the speakers, the Rev. Mr. R., had the misfortune, when he tried to take a seat, to miss his chair and come down at full length on the platform. The accident occasioned not a little subdued mirth. When at last it came his turn to speak, the presiding officer introduced him in these words: "The Rev. Mr. R. will again take the floor." The reverend gentleman never met with so enthusiastic a reception as greeted this announcement.

He Looked It.

A sheriff of Edinburgh had forgotten his two-penny ticket. Asked for his fare, "I have already paid it." "Then where's your ticket?" "I have lost it." "Then you must pay again." "Come, now, my friend," said the sheriff, "just look into my face and tell me, do I look like a man who would tell you a lie for such a trifle as two-pence?" The cash-taker inspected the countenance thus offered as a guarantee for its owner's integrity, and then dryly said: "I'll just thank you for the two-pence."

Minor State Items.

Three Muncie school-ma'ams took men to support last vacation. They will teach their terms out.

William Scott, aged 22, while driving across the track of the Wabash Railway, east of Peru, was struck by a train and instantly killed.

A 3-year-old child of John Jones of Peru, fell on a hot stove and had its face so badly burned that one cheek peeled off, its recovery being doubtful.

Dan Smith, who was sentenced for life to the Prison North sixteen years ago from Hagerstown, for the murder of his father, has been pardoned by Governor Matthews.

At Brookville, Health Officer West has been officially notified that Mrs. Charles Davis and babe of Bath, are suffering from small-pox. This is the first instance of this disease in Franklin County for many years.

George F. Harper, Captain of No. 1 Hose Company at Evansville, was found in a bath tub with his throat cut and his wrist gashed. He had attempted suicide, but his physicians say he has a fighting chance for life. He had been married but three weeks.

Dan Kemp, a wealthy farmer living near Anderson, does not allow any hunters on his farm. The other day, he made a man pay $16 fine for trespassing on his farm. The hunter then dug up an old case where Kemp had driven fast, and had him arrested.

A farmer's house near Anderson was robbed, the other night, and he put bloodhounds on the trail. The dogs followed the burglars to the home of a colored man, but, as the farmer had no authority to make any arrests, he had to leave, none the better off.

The partly decomposed trunk of a man was found in a field near Heltonville. It is thought to be the body of one John Davis, an inmate of the poor farm. When found the extremities had been eaten away, evidently by hogs, and identification is not complete.

The City Council of Brookville has passed an anti-cigarette ordinance. One feature provides for an annual license of $150 for dealers in cigarettes or cigarette paper. Another provides for a fine for smoking cigarettes on the streets or in public places.

Believing Albert Newsom has estranged his wife's affections, Andrew Brazzell, near Columbus, has sued him for $5,000 damages. Mrs. Brazzell sued for a divorce some time ago. Brazzell lived on Newsom's farm and Newsom boarded with the family.

James Skirvin, a leading citizen of near Bloomington, was stricken with paralysis and now lies in an unconscious condition. While his wife was waiting on him, she threw up her hands and fell to the floor dead, of heart disease. The couple have eight children.

John Ryan was caught robbing a clothing store at Marion. He had informed a policeman that he intended to commit the crime, as he was cold and hungry, and preferred the penitentiary to his present fix. The judge gave him two years, and he was disappointed.

County Commissioners and many physicians of Wayne County are considering plans to build a county insane hospital on account of the crowded condition of the Eastern Hospital. This cannot be done, 'tis said, without permission from the Legislature, and a bill will probably be introduced.

Charles Boyle of Jasper County, went squirrel hunting with a city boy. A squirrel was treed and Boyle climbed up to chase it from its hiding place. It jumped and the boy on the ground raised his gun and fired. The load struck Boyle in the back of the head, inflicting a wound that may prove fatal.

Captain W. A. Winebrenner, Company H, Fourth Regiment, Chief of the night police force in Warsaw, accidentally shot and dangerously wounded himself. In attempting to transfer his revolver, a Colt's 38-caliber, from one pocket to another it fell on the stone sidewalk and discharged. The ball entered his thigh, and lodging near the groin, has not been found.

Isom Collins, aged 23, of French Lick, while in the woods hauling wood, is supposed to have shot himself. He was found by some neighbors who were passing by, lying beside the wagon with a revolver in his hand. On examination he was found to be shot through the chest. He was alive when found, and rallied enough to walk to a stream near by to get a drink. He laid down to drink and was unable to rise again. He was carried to his home, where he died in a few hours. It is not known whether the shooting was suicidal.

The American Tin Plate Company, through C. H. Neal of Columbus, Ohio, have purchased the tin mills of Montpelier at Sheriff's sale for $50,000. These figures are considered low as the plant was appraised recently at nearly $100,000, and was put in a little more than a year since at a cost of $125,000. The mills have been in receiver's hands for several months, and were sold at the Court's orders. The Elwood company will send men there to get the plant ready for starting by January 25. Employment will be given to 125 men.

John A. Slider, Kokomo's Third Ward Councilman, jumped from the second story of his business block and was badly crushed and bruised on the earth, thirty feet below. It was his third attempt at suicide. He was followed by two men, who thought that he contemplated taking his own life. He broke away from them on the roof and leaped backwards. Some time ago, he used poison, and later tried a pistol. He'll probably die, this time. He was recently arrested for stealing some gas pipe and was to have been tried soon. He's prominent and popular.

Several days ago the report was published that George W. Reed, a wealthy old farmer, and childless, had died. Since then no less than a dozen heirs from all parts of the country have filed claims against the estate. Mr. Reed, who is alive and well, says he never before heard of any of the applicants.

George Collins, 10 miles west of Orleans committed suicide the other day. He and a companion were hauling logs to the station near by, when Collins jumped off the wagon and threw himself under the wheels of the wagon, both wheels passing over his neck and killing him instantly. He leaves a wife and two children.

"White Caps" are posting signs of fire in Madison County. A week ago, a fence leading to the barn of Fred Bronnenberg was fired in four places, but the flames were put out before the barn was reached. A notice was found on the barn stating that it would be burned unless a roadway through Mr. Bronnenberg's farm is opened up at once.

A Northern Indiana preacher, while preaching on the significance of little things, the other Sunday, said: "The hand which made the mighty heavens made a grain of sand; which made the lofty mountains made a drop of water; which made you made the grass in the fields; which made me made a daisy." And there the congregation baled.

GRAY AND SILVER.

I had a love; dark-haired was she.
Her eyes were gray.
For sake of her across the sea
I sailed away.

Death, sickness, tempest and defeat
All passed me by;
With years came Fortune, fair and fleet,
And rich was I.

Again for me the sun looked down
Familiar skies;
I found my love, her locks had grown
Gray as her eyes.

"Alas!" she sighed, "forget me, now
No longer fair."
"I love thine heart," I whispered low,
"And not thy hair."

—C. E. D. Phelps.

TRIAL AND TRIUMPH.

"George Tudor, stand up. You are charged with neglecting to support your wife. How do you plead—guilty or not guilty?"

A young man, not more than thirty, yet old-looking in the dissipated lines and hue of his face. A good face once, with high forehead and the contour of an intellectual brain. Now the bloated cheeks and lack-luster eyes, soiled skin and carelessly-worn, shabby attire rendered the whole aspect of the man positively repulsive.

The contrast in the appearance of his wife, standing up erect and sternly determined as his accuser, was almost incredible. The bystanders involuntarily started in surprise to see such a woman announce herself as the wife of such a man. Unmistakably a lady in look, speech and manner. Tall and shapely of figure, elegantly attired in well-fitting, dark-colored garments, her white face, albeit now hard and stern, had the stamp of superior education and high breeding; and so great was the dissimilarity between this woman and her husband it was almost impossible to conceive how they could ever have lived together.

The painful story was soon told. It was the old, pitiful tale that is constantly enacted in every-day life, whose sad denouement is brought into our police courts every day. They had commenced their married life nearly ten years ago with the brightest prospects of a happy, prosperous future. They had a well-furnished home, and his ability as a salesman commanded a salary much more than required for their needs, and they looked forward to the day not far distant when he would be at the head of a lucrative business of his own. Each month a portion of his earnings were placed in the savings bank, and his wife cheerfully assisted to the utmost in her power in the care and frugality of her household arrangements, in swelling the amount of money laid by.

In an evil hour George fell in with convivial companions, who gradually drew him into the downward path of drunkenness, followed by the still more ruinous habit of gambling. In vain the wife pleaded and used all her wifely arts of attraction to keep him at home and wean him from these horrible habits; a spell of irrepressible evil seemed to enthral the whole power of his will, and he steadily sank lower and lower into the dark path of hopeless destruction. He lost his position; savings were soon swallowed; furniture was sold to buy food, and now himself a loathsome wreck of his once fair manhood, his wife was living in a small, scantily-furnished upper room, eking out a half-existence by her needle.

"Does he not give you any money for your support?" asked his Honor.

"I have not received one dollar from him in three months. He drinks and gambles every cent he earns."

"She is harsh and cold. She refuses to live with me," said the man, in a husky voice.

"While he continues in his present debased condition I would rather die than associate with him," the woman quickly interjected, with a shudder of disgust.

"Still you insist that he shall support you?" said the judge.

"While I bear his name it is my right to be supported by him. But all I ask now is that he will give me as much as will pay the rent of the room I occupy. I will struggle through to attain my own livelihood."

"But would it not be better to live together, if he promises to provide for you?"

"I lost faith in his promises years ago. God only knows what I have suffered in the meantime. And I ask you, judge, if you think a woman with any sense of refinement and self-respect could bring herself to live with a man who has sunk to the loathsome condition to which he has attained?"

Here the woman pointed a finger direct at her husband's repulsive face, and the man dropped his eyes and cowered in conscious abasement. The next moment, with a strange look of blended tenderness and scorn, she added:

"Looking at him as he is now, it brings a sense of shame to me to think that I once loved him with every pulse of my heart. Now, if he will enable me to pay the trifle of three dollars a month rent until I may be in a position to earn it myself, and keep away from me, I will not trouble him any more."

The promise being finally given, the woman, with set lips and the same white, stern face, passed out of the court room.

"George," said a loafer companion of his, as they passed out into the street, "that's pretty hard lines for a man to have to give money to a woman who treats him as scornfully as if he was dirt under her feet."

"It's my own fault. She did love me once, just as she said. And I made her home a miserable one. I wish I was dead!"

No mere words can express the passionate fervor with which the wish was uttered.

"Oh, well," said the other, in a careless, sneering voice, "it's pretty certain she don't care shucks for you now, so let's go in somewhere and have a drink."

"No, she don't care for me any more," seemed to come involuntarily from the half-closed lips of George, as he turned on his heel and walked away. He rambled down by the wharf, and a score of times was tempted to jump into the river and end the aching weight at his heart that pressed him down like a lump of lead.

One astonishing thing grew out of the scorn his wife had cast at him. He would let her see that he was not the lost object of loathsome disgust she had so pitilessly set him down to be. Not another glass of liquor would he drink—never again would he gamble.

The next morning he presented himself before a man who had formerly employed him, after such a cleansing of his person and attire as had not been effected in years before.

"Mr. Truman," he said, "I want to try and be a better man. Will you give me a position? You can give me any salary you like—or none at all—till I prove that I am worthy to be trusted."

"George, I gave you up long ago, but I'll try you."

A month later the first three dollars were sent to Mrs. Tudor. And so with the second and third. He could have spared a little more, but he had a settled purpose in his mind. He was bent on saving every possible dollar till he could set himself up in business and show his wife that there was the right stuff of manhood about him.

But the messenger he employed to take the money informed him that his wife had been sick and was suffering for want of sufficient food. He straightway sent five dollars in addition, and began to double the amount of the monthly pay.

It was now late in the fall, and winter was fast approaching. He learned that his wife's employment had fallen away so that her means of subsistence became yet more circumscribed. He still further increased the amount of his remittance. With a feeling of pain that struck him like a blow, a portion of it was returned, with the information that she would not permit herself to encroach on his requirements.

George took this as another proof of how utterly she had cast him from her. It hardened his heart to bitter feeling, and he came very near seeking to drown recollection in another drunken debauch. He said to himself she was hard and cruel, and he would care nothing more about her.

But he found this was impossible. Chancing to see her one day, his heart jumped with the old quick bound and his pulse beat in a hot glow as he watched the white, beautiful face. He watched her graceful figure as far as he could distinguish it amid the throng, and still gazed after the retreating form long after it was gone. Every harsh feeling vanised from his breast, and he felt an inexpressible longing to win her back to himself.

And yet he knew it was useless. All love for him was dead in her heart. The fire was extinguished and would not be relighted.

As if to prove that this was true, the next money he sent to his wife came back, with a note stating that she had accepted the position of companion to a lady of wealth, which gave her such a home as would preclude any further need of assistance.

"She's lost all feeling; she's as hard as a stone," he said.

But he was mistaken. When some days later the messenger who had carried the remittances to his wife sought her presence with the announcement that her husband was lying seriously ill she at once said:

"I will go to him," and she did so there and then.

She found him delirious, raving of the wife he had lost. She nursed him as only a true wife can. The doctor gave but little hope of his recovery. At least, he said, he would have to suffer a long, wasting sickness before there would be any change for the better. Mrs. Tudor bowed her head and patiently fulfilled her wifely duties. Thanks to her tender care more than all other things, the crisis was passed, and he began the slow process of getting well.

By this time their means were exhausted, and the wife set herself to the task of earning bread for both, first removing to a couple of cheap rooms to get away from the very much extra cost of boarding. Friends assisted them to a few articles of furniture, and George's employer was very kind to them. He not only gave of his abundance, but busied himself to secure a finer class of needlework from his lady acquaintances than could be acquired at the stores.

In his delirious ravings Mrs. Tudor learned of the struggle her husband had made to be a better man, and the knowledge sank deep into her heart. She said nothing, but never was man more tenderly cared for. Never in their first days of happy prosperity had he seen such watchful solicitude for his welfare—such untiring efforts to secure his comfort.

She had always been a proud woman. Brought up in a home of plenty and refinement, she had never been called on to lift her hand to any menial or laborious employment and through all the latter period of their poverty had always clothed herself as became a lady.

In the most pinching of her want she clung to the good attire. Now she sold it, and for the first time arrayed herself in the very humblest garments. She did it for her husband. He knew that she had done it for his sake, while she would not for her own, as well as that the sun shone above his head. It was a new revelation of a true woman's heart, such as not in a lifetime of prosperity would he have ever known.

It cut him to the heart to see this grand woman in such humble garb, but it thrilled him with ecstacy to his soul. He said to himself as he sat propped up on his pillow watching the beautiful face bent over her needlework: "I never really knew her till now."

He told the truth. More than that, his wife had not really known herself, either. The touchstone of suffering had brought out the bigger qualities of her womanhood like refined gold from the furnace; and it is certain that at no period of their prosperity had she felt so much of tranquil happiness as now when the battle of life for daily bread was at its hardest.

She knew that she had won back her husband to the true nobility of his manhood; that he was no longer the loathsome, degraded being her soul revolted at, but a man who would hereafter hold himself up to the full stature of manhood's requirements in manful struggle for their mutual weal.

Surely God had sent this suffering to bring them together and show to the erring husband the full measure of a good woman's faithful love. Never in his life could he forget this time of hard trial, with a delicate woman working through the long weary hours to maintain him.

Never did his heart give such a jump of delight as when he was able once more to set his own shoulder to the wheel and lift the heavy burden from his wife. And, pulling together bravely, in the unison of perfected love, they gradually drew out of the slough of their impoverished condition, slowly but surely, as must ever be where two hearts in true affection pull in mutual trust together.

Two years later, when George and his wife sat together in a nicely-furnished home, the latter attired in good garments that became her so well, and the husband had recovered all his old bright health and manly dignity of bearing, they conversed of his time of sickness and hard struggle with poverty. At length he said, clasping her hand in fervent affection:

"My darling! I pray God you may never be called on to pass through such another ordeal."

With a look of love that thrilled his soul with ecstacy his wife responded:

"I would not have missed it for the world."

BLOODTHIRSTY TURKS.

Murderous Bludgeon-Men in the Streets of Constantinople.

From "A Bystander's Notes of a Massacre," by Yvan Troshine, in Scribner's, we quote as follows:

Such men as the bludgeon-men one does not often see in the streets of Constantinople. Of the better class of Turks there were none among them. They were of a class like the wharf-rats and 'longshoremen of Western lands. They were of all shades of color, from the white-skinned Laz and Circassian to the brown and hook-nosed Kurd and the coal-black Nubian from Africa. Their faces were a study of fearful passions. There were faces seamed and scarred like the head of a fighting bulldog; faces distorted by malice and greed; faces seared, as by fire, case-hardened in ignorance of all except vice, and ferocious as an angry tiger. Some of those faces burnt their way into my memory and remained for days; a haunting revelation of brutal instincts and beastly desires which made one wonder how it was possible to have lived in safety for weeks in a city containing such men.

These men are not armed in the common sense of the word. Some of them had revolvers, and the most of them had knives. But they seldom used either; for awkward questions might be raised if the police were called to account for failing to arrest armed civilians on the streets. Carrying axe-helves, pick-axe handles, heavy clubs, like baseball bats, jagged fragments of broken scantling; carrying anything that can crush the skull of man, this horrible rabble flooded the streets of all Christian quarters of the city, like an all-desolating tidal wave, silent but irresistible. Their silence by day was almost as terrible as their howls by night. They would be seen going along the street, when they would meet an Armenian who had ventured to attempt to reach his home. Without a word they would break his skull and go on their way, entirely unmoved, and hardly having spoken a loud word. If resistance was offered they had only to say, "The Giaours resist!" and a horde of their fellows would come running from all directions to destroy one who had proved his seditious quality by daring to resist a Mussulman.

Woman Shot a Wildcat.

Miss Harriet Barnard, of Pleasant Valley turnpike, Lyme, Conn., recently was awakened by the sound of a commotion in her poultry house. Miss Barnard's Plymouth Rock fowls are the pride of her heart, as well as a source of considerable income to her, and she hastily dressed and rushed out to the hen yard. She looked in through a window and saw some large animal chasing the terrified fowls. She also noticed that three or four chickens lay dead on the ground.

Hastily rolling a big stone up against the entrance to the yard, Miss Barnard returned to the house and picked up a gun which her nephew had left there. It was loaded. Going back to the hen yard she pushed the gun through the window, aimed at the intruding animal and fired both barrels.

Then ensued a snarling, spitting and jumping the like of which she had never seen or heard. When it ceased she peered cautiously in and saw the animal stretched upon the floor. She dared not touch it. But when Bob Owens, a neighbor, drove by, she called on him for assistance.

Owens went into the yard, and when he came out brought with him a 32-pound wildcat. Miss Barnard almost fainted when she found out the sort of animal she had slain. She sold the skin to a New Haven taxidermist for $10.

How He Answered Them.

A well known artist received not long ago a circular letter from a business house engaged in the sale of California dried fruit, inviting him to compete for a prize to be given for the best design to be used in advertising their wares. Only one prize was to be given, and all unsuccessful drawings were to become the property of the fruit men. After reading the circular the artist sat down and wrote the following:

"The ——— Dried Fruit Company:

"Gentlemen—I am offering a prize of fifty cents for the best specimen of dried fruit and should be glad to have you take part in the competition. Twelve dozen boxes of each kind of fruit should be sent for examination, and all fruit that is not adjudged worthy of the prize will remain the property of the undersigned. It is also required that the express charges on the fruit so forwarded be paid by the sender.

"Very truly yours, ———."

A marked increase in gambling is reported from Belgium.

DELINQUENT TAX SALE.

LANDS AND TOWN LOTS returned Delinquent for the non-payment of taxes for the year 1895, by the County Treasurer of DeKalb County, Indiana, including the interest and penalty thereon, and also for the taxes for the year 1896.

THE AUBURN COURIER.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana office as second-class matter.

THURSDAY.....JANUARY 21, 1897

Home for Sunday.

Senator Nusbaum and Hon. C. M. Brown came home home last evening over the Wabash, the two houses having adjourned over Sunday. The will return Sunday evening. Both are in good health and spirits and are well. We learn that Mr. Brown is on a fourth committee besides the three we had found for him already in the list the "Judiciary committee," the most important committee in the legislature. We are pleased to see our members so well treated in the way of committee assignments.

COURT.

Saturday's Daily.

We were a little off last evening in our statement as to the grand jury. They did not get done that day, but finished to-day. It is also not certain whether the county cases will come up on Monday. A number of Mr. Coffinberry's bondmen were over from Garrett yesterday but what for, we have not learned. There has also been a good deal of talk about Mr. Moody's affairs. It seems that the examination of his books has been going off and on for quite a time and the grand jury has been looking up the matter. Last evening it came out that they had found an indictment against him for embzalement and failing to turn over the funds of his office. The amount of the funds claimed to be embezzled is in round numbers, $3,000. Last night he was put under arrest, and is still in care of the sheriff as we write this at 2 p. m. His bond is put at double the amount charged against him which would make it $6.000. We presume he will give bonds. Mr. Coffinberry's has had another turn of the wheel. In examining the accounts of the office during his term, they have found a number of raised orders on one of which a new in dictment has been foud. This was an order for $29. which has been raised to $229. It is believed there has been a considerable crookedness opened up during his term as auditor, but as to the correctness of this, we cannot say.

Tuesday's Daily.

Deputy Sneriff Platter and Prosecutor Davis were at the north bound noon train to-day, and as the train slowed up they "got aboard," and found there a man named Jackson from Angola, who was "wanted" for patronizing gambling rooms. He had gone down on the forenoon train and it was supposed he would go to Fort Wayne and then come back. Mr. Platter took him in tow at once.

The case from Garrett took a good part of yesterday. A man had rented a dwelling to another man, but they had some trouble about the rent. Then one day when he was absent, the owner broke into the building and took out the household goods. The tenant brought suit for damage.

There is a good deal of criticism, whether just or unjust we cannot say, as to the way some things were done in the county cases. It is said that Mr. Coffinberry was arrested and put into jail before given a chance to get bail, and that Mr. Moody was allowed 24 hours to hunt bail, though the charges against both were nearly alike Again there is criticism about sending an officer over to Garrett yesterday morning, before daylight to arrest Coffinberry. There is also criticism about trying to have him brought over here while in poor health. We cannot decide these questions.

—The small buildings around the Lake Shore freight office is getting to be quite a rendezvous for tramps. There is a small house at the stock yards in which is a little stove. Here they congregate and go out and carry in coal and build a fire. Then one of them come up town and gets a pail of beer and they have a good time the remainder of the night;-unless Marshal West is notified. Last night he went up there and brought two fellows down to the calaboos and locked them up.

Lacked Courage

The People of St. Joe Are No Dectectives.

St. Joe Ind. Jan. 20, '97

SPECIAL TO THE COURIER:

Sunday our citizens received a message from a sheriff in Ohio, to arrest two certain men giving their names in the message and describing their "turnout" who would probaby call at the P. O. here for mail. Naturally enough our citizens hung around awaitto arrest of the criminals by the St. braves. In the evening when the men who had then had assembled to see the fun, the expected and also the unexpected happened. The expected men came in and called for their mail and immediately were not arrested each one thinking it was some other person's business to place them under arrest. The men asked the distanee to the Michigan state line and started on their way. However two of our citizens started in pursuit and overhauled them out two miles distant from the city but one was struck with heart failure and the other thought he would rather die in the cause of the Cubans. After they came back however and were reinforced by the two more men they returned on the trail thinking that their superior force of numbers would give them an easy victory but the roads were too rough and they soon after returned in ignominious defeat. Had Mrs. Sol Barney been notified they would have been arrested or some one would have been shot.

Daily For All.

In view of coming trials of various ex-county officials, and other cases that are to come up in court at an early date, it would be well to call attention to the DAILY COURIER. Subscribers in adjoinging towns, and even those in the country who can get mail easy should make arrangements to get the DAILY during these trials. It cost but ten cents a week, and when it is known just when the trials are to come on, the dimes can be sent with instructions to have the paper started at the right time. This would prove a great satisfaction to those who will not be able to attend as we expect to be present in court wherever it may be, and make a daily report. We make this statement now so all may have time to take advantage of it.

The Legislature.

Our two members, Nusbaum and Brown returned to Indianapolis Sunday evening, over the Wabash via Peru. Both have been industrious in the work before them and are hopeful that though in the minority, some needed legislation in bills they have presented, may be put into laws. Dr. Nusbaum has also been well treated in the way of committee assignments. He is on the committees on "Railways, on "Insurance" on "Public Health," "Public Buildings," and "Legislative Apportionment." The last named is the most important this time. The state may be re-districted for congressmen, though not necessarily so. But it must be redistricted for the legislature, or else the present law re-enacted. Several new plans for the districts have already been proposed. But as far as we have noticed, they all do the same injustice especially to the four counties in the north east corner, nawely Lagrange Noble, Steuben and DeKalb. We see that DeKalb and Steuben are to send a senator, and Noble and Lagrange will send one. This means that both will be republican. Then Noble, DeKalb and Lagrange are each given a member of the House, while Steuben gets none, or only a half a chance, for she and DeKalb will have one jointly. This would be unfair to Steuben for it would be left to the good will of DeKalb republicans whether Steuben ever got a member. Because, when the joint republican convention met DeKalb would have the most votes, and could easily take one of its own citizens, while Steuben county would have to furnish votes to elect him. Of course this may not happen. But it would always be possible Again, of the two senators and four representatives from the four counties, the democrats could get but one the member from DeKalb, while the republicans would have the other five. At present the democrats have two out of the six which is small enough share for the democrats, considering how the vote stands. Steuben county now is always certain of a member of its own for the House. Altogether the present law, as far as this corner of the state is concerned is the fairest that can be. The same is true as to congress. But as we have often said, all this talk about a "fair apportionment" is a deception.

The Delinquent List

The list of delinquent taxes will be found now on our 3d page. Those who are interested should bear this in mind. It will be published two weeks after this issue.

MITCHELL AND THE RAT.

The Latter Showed Fight and Gave the Man a Truly Lively Time.

The time was when Bob Mitchell, an L. & N. Railroad employe, had no more fear of a rat than does a terrier. That was before yesterday. Now he has as much dread of rats and mice as a maiden lady without her bodyguard of tabbies. He was engaged in cleaning out an old room yesterday at First and the river, when his eye happened to rest on one of the dark corners in the room. Two bright, bead-like eyes flashed out in the darkness at him. They were followed by the body of a rodent, which Mitchell now swears was as big as a Scotch collie. Mitchell sidled around the edge of the room with a broom uplifted. The rat ran toward him and Mitchell brought the broom down with a resounding whack. Of course the rat was not under it. Mitchell took up his position in front of the hole from which the rat came, waiting for it to seek its quarters. The big rodent ran excitedly around the room, but could find nothing to hide behind, so it made a bee line for the hole. Mitchell danced about with his broom aloft, and exclaimed with delight "Now I've got you." He did not get the rat. Right up the leg of his trousers it ran. As the big rat climbed up his leg Mitchell dropped the broom. "Wow! wow! wow!" he yelled, like a Comanche, and he beat the side of his leg with his hands. The rat squeaked and bit, while Mitchell ran around the room like "one possessed." He finally caught the rat in a handful of his trousers and squeezed the life out of the vicious animal. His leg smarted and burned. When he made an examination he found that the rat had buried its sharp teeth into his flesh in several places. He had the wounds dressed, but there are grave fears that the wounds may result in blood poisoning.—Louisville Courier.

JAMAICA'S BANANA KING.

He Was a Yankee Skipper and First Brought the Fruit to Cape Cod.

Something over twenty years ago a New England skipper used to make several trips a year from Boston to the northern ports of Jamaica, and would return to Cape Cod Bay, his fleet schooner laden with bananas, for which he found ready and remunerative sale. Other vessels were added to the business, which grew and prospered and soon became too important longer to depend upon the uncertain winds, and steamers replaced the schooners. Bananas were offered in quantities greater than our Yankee mariner, with his limited means, could handle, and a company was formed in 1877, with a capital of $200,000 and two steamers, and the business of systematically growing the banana for export to the United States commenced. From such small beginnings sprang the American company, which now practically controls the fruit export trade of Jamaica. Its present capital is $500,000, and it has a surplus of $1,000,000, and employs twelve steamers. It ships to the United States every year about 4,000,000 bunches of bananas, besides upward of 6,000,000 cocoanuts, and quantities of pimento (allspices), coffee, cocoa and early vegetables. It employs nearly 2,000 men. More than 600 mules are daily in harness engaged in drawing to ports of shipment its varied products. It owns and controls more than twenty estates, comprising nearly 30,000 acres. Free schools are provided for the children of its employes. It has brought great prosperity to a languishing country, and practically created an industry; and its president, the man whose foresight began all this great work and whose energy is now pushing it onward, is commonly known to the Jamaicans as the Banana King.—Harper's Weekly.

A Wonderful New Metal.

Prof. Woods, a Washington chemist, has discovered a substance which can be made to resemble any metal or marble in color and texture, it can be moulded into any form, takes a high polish, reproduces the patterns of the roughest stone or most delicate lace, is acid proof, imperishable, unbreakable and is probably destined to bring about a revolution in arts and architecture. The compound, which has been the result of years of study, is a metalloid in its nature and has been named Proten Plastic from its adaptability to every metal and stone with which it is brought in contact, and also from the innumerable uses to which it can be put. The astonishing changes by which it will take on the texture of any substance is its greatest advantage, and it is by this means that it can be made to resemble gold, silver, copper, iron, steel, brass, glass, granite, marble, onyx, and numberless other minerals.

Explaining It.

"Charley," said young Mrs. Torkins who had been reading Washington's farewell address, "I may be a little slow of comprehension, but there's one thing I don't understand."

"What is it?" he rejoined, with the air of importance which can come only to the few men whose wives think them wise.

"What makes them make so much of an occasion of Washington's retirement?"

"Why—er—that's very simple. You see, he really refused a third term."—Washington Star.

But Smith Didn't Know.

"Oh, Mr. Smyth, your newspaper jokes are so funny I always read them twice."

And after Smyth had departed, with his bump of self-esteem considerably extended, she told the other girls that she had to do so in order to see the point.

WATERLOO.

Uncle Adam Boyer died Friday morning. He had been in poor health for some time, and there had been some trouble caused him, which had ended in his being pronounced of unsound mind, and his son Baliss being appointed his guardian. Had they been patient a short time, he would have saved them this trouble.

Many of our prominent people are lying seriously ill. Mrs. S. Z. Dickinson has been sick for a long time, and her condition is serious. Nearly all of her sons have visited her within a week or so, and now her four sisters are with her. It is the first time the five have been together for forty years.

Uncle Jerry Plum is quite sick also, and his advanced age, 85, makes his recovery a matter of doubt.

Mrs. Sarah C. S. Winslow, is also very ill, and her condition critical. She has never been quite sound since the terrible experience she had with burglars at the time of the fair last summer. It will be remembered, they had forced their way into her house by cutting through the doors with an ax. But this awakened her and while they found her own room bolted, she got another window raised enough to call for help, which finally came, and rescued her from a position that would probably have cost her life, had the men got into her room. They evidently thought she had money, although we believe she never keeps it in the house. We hope that good care will bring her back to health.

Among those seriously sick is Mrs. Darwin Soule, who is surely afflicted with several cancers, and there is little hope that she will ever be better.

Several improvements are likely to be put forward in the spring. But our new block and its improved business conditions are the pride of the town.

Uncle James Bowman still holds the fort although he has been crippled and helpless for so many years.

BUTLER.

The protracted effort at the Church of God, continues with considerable interest, quite a number have already united with the church.

Rob. Warren a traveling phrenological lecturer has held the boards at the opera house all the past week to crowded houses, elucidating the mysteries of this occult science. His lectures were highly entertaining, and instructing and called forth rounds of applause at many happy hits.

The railroads have securing a bit of extra fares during the past, by calling upon Butler men about town to testify before the grand jury to the grief of the many transgressors of the law relating to the unlawful sale of whisky, and its usual gambling hole attendant. If one of the quiet ones in ten is punished after all the effort put forth it will be an unusual harvest for the school fund.

Rev. Hudson, Presiding Elder of the M. E. church officiated at the quarterly meeting here Sunday.

Butler is furnishing a market at a fair cash price for several hundred thousand cords of four foot-wood. This is giving employment to many men, in cutting and hauling it.

The increased freight sales have rendered it somewhat difficult for our Basket Co. to deliver their goods to distant markets and retain a living profit.

Mrs. Jacob Jennings has rented her farm and moved to town. It is reported that Harman Ames, Mrs. Hannah Ockers nephew, will move back on her farm again this spring. He left her farm about fifteen years ago.

—Mrs. Frank Ryan of Attica is here, the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Cook' Fork and other friends.

—It is reported that over forty accession have been made at the Lutheran church.

Hereditary Pensions.

A number of British noblemen are in the receipt of hereditary pensions. The duke of Richmond is the most fortunate of these, for he gets an annual pension of £19,000. The first duke of Richmond was an illegitimate son of Charles II.; and to him and his descendants was given the right in perpetuity to levy a duty of one shilling a caldron on all coal exported from the Tyne. This privilege was waived in 1799 in return for an annual pension of £19,000. Earl Nelson is in receipt of £5,000 a year; duke of Wellington of £4,000, and Lord Rodney £2,000. All these were granted to the first holders of these titles in reward for services to the state, and will continue in perpetuity to the holders of those titles.

A Life Saved.

Marvelous cures of throat and lung affections are made daily by Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. Miss Annie Swan, Petersburg, Va., writes: "My brother was attacked by a bad cough and cold, and it was thought he had consumption. Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup was used, and to our great surprise it made him well and hearty. There is no better cure in the world than this Syrup." Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup is sold everywhere for 25 cents.

Adam Boyer.

Adam Boyer was born in Starke, Co. Ohio, Sept. 10, 1815, and after an earthly career fuller of trials and triumphs than most men are called to see, peacefully passed away, a victim of dropsy Friday a. m. Jan. 15, 1897, at the advanced age of 81 years 4 months and 5 days. He was a son of Peter and Margaret (Hortzel) Boyer, and was next to the youngest of his father's family of 13 children. He came to this state in 1836 and with the exception of one year at the old home in Ohio, he was a resident of this county until his death. He was left without a mother at the age of two years, and often said "I never knew a motherly love until I married mother."

January 11, 1838, occurred the marriage of the deceased to Rebecca Houlton, this union proved to be an exceptionally happy one and continued so until the death of mother Boyer, Aug. 10, 1892, 55 years. A golden wedding aniversary was duly celebrated by children and gandchildren at the old home in Franklin township and is a day long to be remembered for its social remembrances. To this union were born 5 children, 2 sons and 3 daughters.

Twenty-three years ago last month death, for the first time entered the family circle and took there from Ira, aged 18 years. From the date of marriage as above recorded, they resided on a farm till within the last six years he has resided in Waterloo. He was converted one year ago and became a devoted member of the United Brethern church.

Father Boyer was a kind and loving husband, and effectionate, indulgent parent and enjoyed the respect and confidence of all who knew him.

In addition to the above the deceased leaves one brother Michael, two years his senior that lives in Catherine, Mo., the only one left out of his father's family of 13 children; also 4 children, 6 grandchildren and 8 great grandchildren are left to morn their loss.

Services were in charge of Rev. S. H. Yager Sunday, Jan. 17, at the U. B. church.

PLEASANT ENTERTAINMENT.

Port Huron Daily Times says;—"Around the Stove" was given last night in the First Presbyterian church by Hoyt L. Conary. Mr. Conary has rare gifts as a dialectician and an impersonator of character, humorous, grave and gay. To hear him once is to want to hear him many times. The audience for one hour and a half was delighted and charmed. Mr. Conary is a cultured artist, yet retains all the grace and naturalness of a genius born for the stage. He is gentlemanly, scholarly, poetical, musical and—well, be sure and hear him for yourself when he comes again.

Steamships Before Fulton.

An Interesting Story of Early Transportation from Carlyle's Reminiscences

Robert Fulton is famed in history as the inventor of steamboats. But did the idea of applying steam to water transportation originate with him? Apropos of this question, an interesting little story is recorded in Carlyle's "Reminiscences." In 1817, or thereabouts, Carlyle was a teacher of mathematics in an academy conducted by his famous friend, Edward Irving, at Kirkcaldy. During vacation he made a walking tour with Irving, "one Piers," and James Brown to the Trosachs, and home by Loch Lomond, Greenock, Glasgow, etc.

"At Greenock," he says, "I saw steamers on the water; queer little dumpy things with a red sail to each, and legible names, 'Defiance,' and such like, bobbing about here and there, and making continual passages to Glasglow as their business. Not till about two years later (1819, if I mistake not) did Forth see a steamer; Forth's first was far bigger than the Greenock ones, and called itself 'The Tug, being intended for towingships in those narrow waters, as I have often seen it doing; it still, and no rival or congener, till (in 1825) Leith, spurred on by one Bain, a kind of scientific half-pay master R. N., got up a large, finely appointed steamer, or pair of steamers, for London, which, so successful were they, all ports then set to imitating.

"London alone still held back for a good few years; London was notably shy of the steamship, great as are its doings now in that line. An old friend of mine, the late Mr. Strachey, has told me that in his school days he at one time—early in she '90s, I should guess, say 1793—used to see, in crossing Westminister bridge, a little model steamship paddling to and fro between him and Blackfriars bridge, with steam funnel, paddle wheels and the other outfit, exhibiting and recommending itself to London and what ever scientific or other spirit of marine adventure London might have. London entirely dead to the phenomenon—which had to duck under and dive across the Atlantic before London saw it again, when a new generation had risen.

"The real inventor of steamships I have learned creditably elsewhere, the maker and proprietor of that fruitless model on the Thames, was Mr. Miller Laird of Dalwinston in Dumfriesshire (Poet Burns' landlord), who spent his life and his estate in that adventure, and is not now to be heard of in those parts, having had to sell Dalwinston and die quasi bankrupt—and, I should think, broken-hearted—after that completing of his painful invention and finding London and mankind dead to it.

"Miller's assistant and work hand for many years was John Bell, a joiner in the neighboring village of Thornhill. Miller being ruined, Bell was out of work and connection; emigrated to New York, and there, speaking much of his old master and glorious, unheeded invention—well known to Bell in all its outlines or details—at length found one Fulton to listen to him; and by 'Fulton and Bell' (about 1809) an actual packet steamer was got launched, and lucratively plying on the Hudson River, became the the miracle of yankeeland and gradually of all lands.

"These, I believe, are essentially the facts. Old Robert McQueen of Thornhill, Strachey of the India House, and many other bits of good testimony and indication, once far apart, coalescing and corresponding for me. And as, possibly enough, the story is not now known in whole by anybody but myself, it may go in here as a digression, apropos of those brisk little Greenock steamers which I first saw—and still so vividly remember, little 'Defiance,' etc.—saucily bounding about with their red sails in the sun on this my tour with Irving."

Harper's - Bazar In 1897.

The BAZAR, a thoroughly up-to-date periodical for women, will enter upon its Thirtieth Volume in 1897.

As a fashion Journal it is unsurpassed, and is an indispensible requisite for every well-dressed woman. Katharine De Forest writes a weekly letter on current fashions from Paris. In New York Fashions, and in the fortnightly pattern-sheet supplument, ladies find full details, directions, and diagrams for gowns, wraps, and children's clothing. Sandor, Baude, and Chapuis draw and engrave the newest and finest Parisian designs every week.

The serials for 1897 will be: The Red Bridge Neighborhood, by Mary Louise Pool; and Father Quinnallion, by Octave Thanet. Short stories will be constantly presented by brilliant writers, among whom are Mary E. Wilkins, Harriet Prescott Spofford, Marion Harland, Ruth McEnery Stuart, Viola Roseboro, and Margaret Sutton Briscoe.

What Women are Doing in various parts of the Union will form a series of special interest.

Other interesting features are the Out-Door Woman, devoted to healthful sports and pastimes; Music, a weekly critical summary of music in New York; Amateur Theatricals, Embroidery and Needlework, Ceremony and Etiquette, Good Housekeeping, "What Girls are Doing," "Current Social Events," and Personals gleaned from original sources.

Women and Men. Colonel T. W. Higginson will regularly continue his valuable essays.

Answers to Correspondents This column is conducted for the benefit and convenience of readers, and all questions received are answered in rotation, as promptly and fully as practicable.

Art. The BAZAR is a notable picture-gallery reproducing the most beautiful works of American and foreign artists, as presented in the annual Paris and New York exhibitions. Wit and Humor. Everybody turns for a hearty laugh to the BAZAR'S last page.

—Mrs. Miller, of Fort Wayne, is visiting in the family of Mr. Shoudel in Jackson township.

—Charlie Triplet, of Waterloo, one of our veteran subscribers put his credit up to '98 yesterday. Thanks.

—Miss Draggoo, Concord, a caller at this office yesterday. She is going to keep up with the times and take the DAILY COURIER for a while now.

Iss Mary Shoudel has returned to her home in Jackson township after a few weeks visit at Fort Wayne.

—Chas. Kinsey and wife drove to South Milford this morning to visit friends.

—Geo. Walker was in to-day for his annual visit. He is always paid ahead.

We were pleased to receive a call today from Judge Lowry, of Ft. Wayne, who was here getting some work ready for cases in court.

C. F Wingard sends word from the country, that the first robin of the season or the last, he don't know which, was seen there Jan. 12th.

—The Postal Telegraph company has not sold its franchise. Its old contract with the Commercial Cable Co. expired, and was renewed. That is what gave rise to the report of a sale.

—Constipation in its worst forms, dyspepsia, sick headache, biliousness and derangement of the liver are readily cured by DeWitt's Little Early Risers. The little pills never gripe. Small pill, safe pill, best pill. Davenport the Druggist.

—McKinley and his administration offer no change in policy of any kind, to help the people, except to raise the tariff taxes several notches higher. But will an increase of taxes bring better times?

—Ligonier Banner:—W. J. Hogue of this city, has been appointed as deputy prosecuter by Prosecuter Alvord, and has already assumed the duties of that position. Mr. Hogue will have jurisdiction over the cases that will come up from Washington, Sparta and Perry townships.

—Minutes seem like hours when a life is at stake. Croup gives no time to send for a doctor, delay may mean death. One Minute Cough Cure gives instant relief and insures recovery. The only harmless remedy that produces immediate results. Davenport the Druggist.

—Laporte Argus:—Chief Simon Pokagon says the Pottawattamie tribe has a larger claim against the government than the one just settled. It is for 5,000,000 acres of land in Iowa which had been taken from the Pottawattamies without pay. Pokagon expects no difficulty in settling this claim.

—All the different forms of skin troubles, from chapped hands to eczema and indolent ulcers can be readily cured by DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve, the great pile cure. Davenport the Druggist.

—Charlie Speer, of Waterloo, was in town yesterday. He was looking up the title to the ground on which their store stands, as they expect to put up a new brick building on it in the near future. This will be a valuable addition to the town, and to their business.

vide choice cuts of roast pig over the graves of their dead. The Indian kills the pony of the dead and leaves his bow and arrow at the grave for handy use of the departed. But the Kencolonel who asked to swim in Bourbon whisky while in his coffin tops then all.

—Senator Voorhees is still in poor health, though he manages to get to his committee room and do the usual amount of work every day. He retires March 4th. He has had a long and honorable career, and retires at the age of 70. Millionaire Fairbanks takes his place, having earned the office by contributions to the campaign fund.

—Steuben Republican:—A thie frobbed the Hicksville laundry last week and carried off several fine shirts and collars. The village marshall was authorizd to arrest every man he could find wearing a clean shirt, but up to the latest from that place no arrests had been made. What a lot of dirty shirts there must be there by this time.

—The COURIER acknowledges a pleasant call to-day from Jacob Zentner and son George, who live on the Allen County line about nine miles south of Auburn. They were accompanied by Jacob Foltz, of Edgerton, Mo., and Samuel Foltz, of Arcola, Ind. The two latter gentlemen are visiting Mr. and Mrs. Zentner.

An electric corset has recently been patented, says a wicked exchange. It is constructed in such a manner that when a fellow slips his arm around his girl's waist he presses a button; this loosens a spring in the corset, throws sawdust in his hair and kicks him out of doors, where an India rubber bulldog stands ready to scare him into fits. The inventor has also patented a remedy for fits.

—Chicora, Pa., "Herald:" Richard Vensel reports One Minute Cough Cure the greatest success of medical science. He told us that it cured his family of terrible coughs and colds, after all other so called cures had failed entirely. Mr. Vensel said it assisted his children through a very bad siege of measels. One Minute Cough Cure makes expectoration very easy and rapid. Davenport the Druggist.

Saturday's Daily.

—A weed in the garden can be easily destroyed when it first starts. Consumption can be nipped in the bud by One Minute Cough Cure. Davenport the Druggist.

—Soothing for burns, scalds, chapped hands and lips. Healing for cuts and sores. Instant relief for piles, stops pain at once. These are the virtues of DeWitt's Hazel Salve. Davenport the Druggist.

—A torpid liver means a bad complexion, bad breath, indigestion and frequent headaches. To avoid such companions take DeWitt's Little Early Risers, the famous little pills. Davenport the Druggest.

—Mr. and Mrs. Henry, of Souht Whitley, returned home this morning. They have been guests of Mr. and Mrs. Will Schaab.

—Mr. and Mrs. Charles McClellan entertained the Pedro Club Thursday evening, very pleasantly.

—Miss Lulu Rempis, of Waterloo, was in the city yesterday calling on friends.

—Mrs. T. C. Ford came home to-day and was accompanied by some relatives from Fort Wayne.

—M. E. Garrett certainly deserves the title of the poor man's friend. He offers groceries, the entire bill of which is published in to-day's paper, for 79 cents. He ought to sell a thousand orders from this list, and no doubt he will.

—James McClellan, east of the creek settled on the old home farm south of town forty-three years age. But of all the old settlers who then lived in that school district, only two are alive, himself and A. D. Goetschius, the latter being now in Montana. Mr. McClellan has a fund of the memories of olden times.

—Mrs. Phil Plum was over from Waterloo last evening to attend the C. E. social at Mrs. Askew's.

—Adam Hohman, of Sedan, is another new name on our WEEKLY list. We welcome all such.

—This morning Walter Hartman sold John Feagler the house on South VanBuren street belonging to A. B. Richards. Mr. Feagler and family will move to Auburn about March.

—Basswood logs are being hauled to the Zimmerman factory now, in considerable quantities.

—Peter Loutzenheiser is another of our new patrons to the Weekly. All our old subscribers are coming back. That is all right.

—Miss Carrie Finch is here over Sunday, the guest of Lila Baker. She expects to return Monday to her home in Angola.

Tuesday's Daily.

—Hoyt L. Conary "Around the Stove in a Country Store."

—Isaac Speer, of Waterloo, was in town this morning.

—"Don't forget the Club Dance in the Armory Tuesday evening of each week, 25 cents per couple. Music by the Mandolin Orchestra."

—P. L. Bishop, the new proprietor of the Auburn Mills returned to-day from Greentown where he spent Sunday with his family.

—You take no chance when you go to the opera house Saturday evening, if not satisfactory then your money will be refunded.

—Mr. Krimmel Piano tuner of Fort Wayne is in the city this week. Parties wishing their piano tuned may leave word at the Swineford House.

—A small package containing about two yards of black cambric, bought of The Bishop & Lackey Co., has been found and is at this office.

—Wm. M. Fulton and Altha McNabb, Geo. W. Smirr and Stella Zerkle John Miller and Ella Apple, Henry Davis and Della Kline, John Hoffelder and Mary Gfeller, Nelson Bolt and Mary Witt have been licensed to marry.

—The Kline building which was damaged by fire Sunday night was insured. T. J. Saxton had the insurance on the house, and adjusted the damage at $25. W. C. Hartman had the insurance on the contents and will pay Mr. Sebring $45.

—Do not fail to be at the opera house on Saturday evening, Jan. 23, to hear Hoyt L. Conary, the great entertainer subject, "Around the Stove in Country store." It is for the benefit of the Young Peoples Christian Endeavor. Seats on sale at Davenport's Thursday. Price 15, 25 and 35.

—The Auburn Rifles yesterday placed in the Armory a new mess chest which was built at the Body factory under the supervison of Capt. Kuhlman. This no doubt will be the most convenient and practical mess chest in the next camp of instruction, and the boys of Co. K. can rest assured that their provisions will be kept clean and fresh —Rev. W. L. Meese preached a most excellent discourse last evening, at the M. E. church. He made a powerful argument in favor of taking an honest manly course in all our dealings under all conditions and called up approvingly the little note of advice in Kessler Bros cigar ad, "Be good and you will be happy" found in the DAILY COURIER. There is always a moral to be drawn from these "Old Saws," if one will stop to study a little.

Edgerton, Ohio was visited by a $25,000 conflagration last night. Further particulars we are unable to get.

—The article on the first page as to Mr. Coffinberry's death, was in Monday's DAILY. So it will be seen he died Monday morning.

—Miss Flora Jones, of Butler came over on the early train this morning to spend the day with the little new cousin at W. C. Hartman's.

—Banks keep failing every day, nearly. But there is no reason for any panic. It should be noticed that nearly every bank that has gone under for some time, had its troubles caused by bad management. Several of them had loaned out their funds on poor security and could not get them back.

—Among the friends who called on us yesterday and squared up accounts more or less, were P. P. Hosler, James Lewis, Perry Link, and Garrett Link, who settled the subscription of his mother, Mrs. Lucy Link. All have thanks.

—Benjaman Hamilton and Martie Engle, of St. Soe, were callers yesterday and we had a pleasant visit with them. We are also glad to see on our list again, Mr. Hamilton's familiar name.

—The boundary line between Iowa and Missouri, so long in dispute has been settled according to the decision of a commission that has been re-surveying it.

Family Reunion.

January 16th will be a day long to be remembered by the children and granchildren of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Stomm, of Fairfield township. The children had not thus been together for a number of years. The number present including little folks were thirty-four Among them were: Mr. and Mrs. Moses Stomm and family, Mr. and Mrs. Ab Goodrich, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Urey and family, Mr. and Wm. Stomm, Mr. and Mrs. J. Bickle, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Bickle, Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Gettz and family, Mr. and Mrs. Aaron Gettz and family, Mrs. Ida Rohm and daughter, Geo. Switzer and Misses Cora, Nora and Clara Stomm.

CHEAP OPERA IN BOSTON.

An Experiment in Reduced Theatrical Rates That Proved Successful.

An experiment has been made in Boston for a year which thoughtful people have watched with interest, says the New York Tribune. There has long been a demand for a reduction in the prices of the average theater tickets, or, rather, a reduction of the prices when poor or common-place attractions were offered, as is sure to be the case at every theater in Boston at times in every season. The public believes that $1.50 is too much to pay for a good seat to see a second-rate lot of players perform in a second or third- rate sort of play, but the prices at the majority of the theaters have remained the same, although occasionally they increase them 50 per cent when some extra attraction arrives. One of the cheaper grade of theaters, under a new manager, tried the low rates at the beginning of the season, and the house is always full. The grade of performances is quite as good as at houses where the high prices prevail, and sometimes better. Just what the exchequer will show at the end of the season, of course, only the managers know, but the fact that prices remain low and the houses continue to be full is a pretty good indication that the public appreciates the opportunity. A new theater was opened at the beginning of last season, with a new melodrama, at the usual prices charged at most other theaters, and the result was bad business. After an ineffectual struggle against the tide, the manager decided to try comic opera early last summer, at popular prices, and with a new opera every week. The prices were 50 cents for all seats on the first floor and 25 cents for those in the two balconies. The business was good from the start. With the increase of business came improved casts for the operas. The summer season was so satisfactory that the owners decided to continue the same policy for the regular season, and the result is that the house is literally sold out every week many days in advance for the evening performances, while for the matinees, when the price is uniformly 25 cents for every seat reserved in the house, it is possible to get two tickets only by applying at least two weeks in advance. The class of people which goes there is sometimes as good as that which goes to the symphony concerts and is always excellent. The wealthy middle class goes there and good musicians sit through a performance of "Faust" (for they are now giving grandopera occasionally with good results) with evident enjoyment. The boxes are sold by the season, for the most part, and it is rare to see a vacant seat in the entire house on any night, and never at a matinee. This is regarded by Bostonians as important, especially in view of its possible effect on the theatrical business of the future.

Little Japanese Lady.

Another daughter has been born to the Emperor of Japan, and he names her Yuki-Ko, which means "Beautiful Leaf." The Emperor already has a number of daughters and is anxious to have a son. Only two sons have been born to him, although he is blessed with nine wives. The first son died in infancy and the present Prince Imperial is in such poor health that he is not expected to live long enough to reach the throne.

Couldn't Be Particular.

"Look here, waiter! These eggs are not cooked properly."

"I know it, sir; but you said they were for your wife, and I knew if the lady was your wife she couldn't be very particular."

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

PURELY VEGETABLE.

The cheapest, purest and best family medicine in the world! An effectual specific for all diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Spleen. Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common, as a bad breath; and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your appetite, complexion and general health.

CONSTIPATION

should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact, nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache, for the relief of which take Simmons Liver Regulator.

A Royal Good Meeting Last Night. Visitors Present.

The I. O. O. F. lodge room was crowded last night with a jolly lot of visitors from St. Joe, including a good turnout of the members of the local lodge. The occasion was the installation of officers and on invitation of the Auburn lodge the state District Deputy Sol. Barney of St. Joe was present as installing officer. Besides the work of installation the inititory degree work was given Geo. Muhn, which, as usual always furnishes plenty of amusement. After these exercises were over the ladies served some excellent refreshments which were highly enjoyed by all.

Among those who were present from St. Joe, in company with Sol. Barney were: C. A. Jenkins, Fred Jenks, John Hull, Dan Herrick, Frank White Wm. Curie, Geo. Culbertson, Alex Philley, Harry Meek, Mart Engle, Ed. Berry, Rich Culbertson and one gentleman whose name we could not learn.

Big Canal.

The Nicaragua Canal Bill is up in Congress now. Senator Turpie will speak against it, not because he would not like to see the canal built, but because he does not think the government should guarantee the bonds. The plan is for the canal company to issue and sell 100 millions of bonds, of which the United States is to take 70 millions, and to guarantee the whole lot. There is danger, so Turpie thinks that the government may get stuck as it did in the matter of the Pacific Railway.

Telephone Men

They Met At Fort Wayne Yesterday to Form An Organization of Independent Lines.

Representatives of thirty five Independent Telephone Companies met at Fort Wayne yesterday and formed an organization. There are fourty-five companies in the state and representatives of thirty-five were in attendance.

The plans for this meeting originated with G. W. Beers, president of the Western Telephone Company, who associated with himself six of the presidents of other important independent companies and issued a call for the meeting. The chief object of the meeting was the extension of toll lines to cover as much of the state as possible. There is a state organization of independent companies in Ohio which has a splendid toll line service extended over the state. The Indiana organization, if successful, will form a connection with its neighbor in the Buckeye state and so extend the service on the east. A similar alliance will probably be made with the Illinois state organization and the independent companies will be greatly strengthened by the extension.

As to U. S. Senators

The democrats in the New York legislature will cast their votes for Senator Hill, although Platt, republican will get it. In this state the democratic was given to Senator Voorhees yesterday, but C. W. Fairbanks was elected.

In Illinois, the democratic vote goes to Governor Altgeld, but Mason republican got it.

POLITICS OF THE DAY

PROTECTION AND BOUNTIES.

The logical result of a policy of direct tariff protection, instead of one which frames a tariff for revenue purposes, while not discriminating against home products protected incidentally by the tariff levied for revenue, was seen in the demands made upon the ways and means committee at yesterday's hearings.

Hitherto the manufacturers had their innings, and with hardly an exception they wanted higher duties upon articles coming into competition with them, while looking with disfavor upon any increase of duties on the raw materials of their manufactures. The producers of raw materials, however, made it plain that they are not to be ignored. What is the raw material of the one industry is the finished product of another, and the one is as much entitled to protection as the other. About the great agricultural staples no class of manufacturers had anything to say. Presumably they wanted these to be as cheap as possible, so that they might not have to raise the wages of their workmen on account of dearer living.

But yesterday the agriculturists had their turn and were not backward in their demands. One of the speakers admitted that he "would have a duty absolutely prohibitory on every agricultural product that can be raised in this country." Another was not satisfied with that sort of protection. Prohibitory duties on hay, oats and flaxseed might help some farmers, but similar duties on wheat, corn, cotton and some other products would not be of much help, because these are not imported to any extent, if at all. Our products of this class have to go abroad and meet the competition of other countries in the markets of the world. Protection in our own market would be practically useless. What is asked for is an export bounty on these staple products, so that the farmer could get full price at home for the exported cereals and yet the exporter might undersell cheap labor product of foreign farms.

The sugar bounty of the McKinley law of 1890 furnished an excuse for the demand. If that was a good thing for the beet growing farmer and for the country, it is argued, why confine the bounty cure for agricultural ills to beet growers? Why should not the wheat grower, the corn raiser and the cotton planter have like encouragement? Besides, if protective tariff duties benefit the manufacturer and not the farmer, why should not part of the revenue obtained from these protective duties be turned over to the farmer in the shape of bounties on his products, that he may be on an equal footing before the treasury with the protected manufacturer?

Here we have the logical outcome of a policy for tariff for protection, with revenue incidental. It is a demand for prohibitory duties on foreign products seeking entrance, and for bounties on domestic products exported. Where the revenue is to come from with which to pay the bounties is a conundrum with which the proposers of the plan do not concern themselves.—Cleveland Plaindealer.

A Grand Old Fraud.

The defeat of John Wanamaker for United States Senator in Pennsylvania is one of the righteous results of the present Senatorial campaign season. It is a fit rebuke to a preposterous hypocrite and humbug. Wanamaker mixes piety, pelf and politics in equal average proportions. Sometimes at his Sunday schools he is mostly for piety. The main portion of his time he is for pelf. His experiences for eight or ten years have included a large amount of politics.

He occasionally combines two or more of his main projects. Notwithstanding his piety, at times he joins pelf and politics in the same pursuit. He did so when he raised $100,000 for the Harrison campaign fund in 1888 and was appointed postmaster general as a reward for his enterprise and success in furnishing the boodle. It was well understood at the time that Wanamaker engaged in this vast boodle effort at the suggestion of Quay, who was the Republican National Chairman in 1888. That the plump old fraud should have turned against Quay this year and made a Senatorial campaign on the platform of honest politics is an amazing and grotesque spectacle.

The righteous indignation of the campaign boodler of 1888 at his defeat by Quay for Senator in 1897 is a matter for ridicule. Lack of success in politics, however, will not cause an abatement in Wanamaker's zeal for piety and pelf. His "bargain counter" in politics is bankrupt. But he will follow up his Sunday schools and the "notion" business.—Chicago Chronicle.

Give the Farmer a Slice.

Congress should give the cotton growers, the corn, wheat, oats and barley growers, the pumpkin and persimmon producers, the live stock and all other agricultural interests protection while it is at it. The manufacturers are the salt of the earth, but they are not all of it. The farmers, laborers, tradesmen and professional men supply a few grains of it. All of them are entitled to a slice of the Republican pumpkin pie while it is being passed around.—Kansas City Times.

Telling the Plain Truth.

There was a frank witness before the Tariff Committee on Tuesday. He represented the American Hosiery Company and said the 50 per cent. duty now imposed did not afford his corporation the margin of profits it would like to have. "What is wanted by the people I represent," he frankly said, "is not revenue, but prohibition. They wanted to keep foreign goods which came in competition with theirs out of the United States altogether." Not revenue, but prohibition and trusts, is what these tariff sharks are after.—Pittsburg Post.

Pointed Paragraphs.

Georgia has sounded the political slogan, "Bryan for 1900." We advise Hon. Thomas E. Watson to sue for divorce on the ground of non-support.

An Ohio man has laid claim to the city of Minneapolis and part of St. Paul. This is going too far; the Ohio man ought to be content with the city of Washington.

Senator Stewart, after sinking $29,000 in a free silver paper, has asked that a receiver be named for it. It took only six months to demonstrate to the Senator's entire satisfaction that a free silver paper is not a gold mine.

The export bicycle trade last year amounted to $3,000,000. Of this over one-third went to the United Kingdom, $220,000 to Germany, $120,000 to France, $515,000 to British North America, $35,000 to Africa and even $5,000 to Cuba. According to the logic of current conditions there should be a large and powerful bicycle lobby at Washington just now.

The present duty on oatmeal is 15 per cent. ad valorem. The result was that not to exceed $20,000 worth of oatmeal was imported last year. The Canadian meal, which is superior to that made from American oats, has been kept out. With more protection the oat meal trust could force prices still higher, and yet defy the competition of Canadian, Scotch or Irish meal.

"Protect us from foreign lumber! Save us from the wicked Canadian mills!" cry the dealers to the Ways and Means Committee. Yet, in 1896, we shipped to the United Kingdom $2,500,000 worth; Germany, $380,000; British North America, $600,000; the West Indies, $600,000; Argentina, nearly $1,000,000; Brazil, about $800,000; Africa, $500,000; British Australasia, $500,000.

In his inaugural address Gov. Black, of New York, said: "No intolerant clamor or irresponsible assault will force or prevent a single executive act. For I trust that no man believes the attribute of fear is worthy to play a part in the discharge of any public duty." Which probably means that he will appoint Platt's man, no matter how much opposition there is.

A reduction of from 20 to 30 per cent. has been made in the wages of certain Carnegie employes. Yet those who supply the lumber with which those men build their houses, and those who make the glass for the windows, the woolens and cottons the families wear and the sugar used upon the table, and Mr. Carnegie himself are all at Washington demanding protection through higher rates of duty. But this is the logical outcome of voting for McKinley.

EDUCATIONAL COLUMN

NOTES ABOUT SCHOOLS AND THEIR MANAGEMENT.

Problem to Come Before the Southern Educational Association—Need of Reform in the System of School Punishments.

Race Problems.

The education of the negro race will no doubt be one of the leading questions before the Southern Educational Association again this year. President Phillips, in his last year's address, struck the key-note when he said: "It is a fact that cannot well be called in question, that white teachers in negro schools can never realize, even approximately, the ideal relation that should exist between the teacher and pupil. This is forcibly true in elementary schools. That relation requires love, not philanthropy; affection, not charity; sympathy, not pity. Occupying planes so widely separated, spheres of activity so diverse; without common blood or social ties, common history or common interests, common origin or common destiny, a white teacher and a negro class will never realize the ideal school. In such a case the teacher cannot appeal to the inner life of the pupil, and the craving consciousness of the child finds no responsive chord in the teacher. They must meet, if they meet at all, upon the cold abstract plane of reason. The instinct of race identity, as strong in the one race as in the other, as strong in the pupil as in the teacher, intervenes as an insuperable barrier. Between teacher and pupil must ever remain this chasm of race difference, as deep as human consciousness itself. Call it prejudice if you will, but it exists as a God-implanted instinct, of which the teacher can never divest himself—but of which the pupil can never be educated. Although it be tempered by philanthropy, sweetened by religion, or even smothered by fanaticism, it still exists, and will continue to exist as long as humanity."

Many educators of the North do not yet understand the conditions confronting the people of the South. We hope many of them will make the trip to Mobile, meet with the teachers there, and after mingling with the people and seeing things as they are, they will return better prepared to understand the educational problems of our whole country.—American Journal of Education.

School Whippings.

The brutal beating administered to a 12-year-old pupil by a teacher in a public school the other day suggests the need of reform in the system of school punishments.

In some States corporal punishment of public school children is prohibited by law. It is noteworthy that this prohibition has not weakened the discipline or in any other way reduced the efficiency of the system. On the contrary, reports from two or three States where teachers are not allowed to whip pupils indicate a higher standard of the schools and more encouraging results.

The aphorism, "Spare the rod and spoil the child," is about as inapplicable to conditions to-day as are so many others of its kind that were quoted with "unctuous rectitude" by the graybeards of the past mainly for lack of a sound reason for their conduct. The child of to-day differs from the child of fifty years ago as the man and woman differ from their prototypes of a past epoch. The home training of children is now superior, because parents are better civilized and have a clearer insight into child-nature. Possibly the public school is largely responsible for this progress, in that it has placed the advantages of education within the reach of all.

Probably there was a time when to curb the barbarian that is latent in all juvenile natures a vigorous application of the birch was necessary. But it can be asserted as a fact, borne out by the records of public school management, that very few school children now need whipping in order to be brought under discipline. Of course, there are still some incorrigibly bad children who are utterly impervious to moral suasion, but these are too few to justify the toleration of corporal punishment in the public schools. Such pupils should be set apart where they will not demoralize the rest of the school. The exceptions will not then be an excuse for the maintenance of a system which is sure to prove baneful rather than beneficial in its operations.—St. Louis Republic.

Schools on Indian Reservations.

Schools are maintained in New York State on six Indian reservations. These are at Salamanca, South Onondaga, Hogansburgh, East Moriches, Akron and Suspension Bridge. The schools on the reservations have been supported at the expense of the State for many years, and since 1856 have been under the charge of the State Superintendent of Public Instruction. The populations of the several reservations in 1892 was 4,923. The number of children of school age on these reservations in 1894 was 1,478. The number of children attending school some portions of the year was 973, with an average daily attendance of 394. The Indian schools were in session thirty-five weeks during the year, at a total expense of $12,301.29. There are twenty-nine school districts on these reservations.

Docked a Cent a Minute.

Milwaukee is the only city in the country which runs its school on a penny basis. Probably no school commissioners in the land of the starry banner are more ingenious in inventing ways by which the salaries of the teachers of the public schools can be pared down. The latest exploit in this direction is a rule whereby any teacher who is tardy a single minute loses a cent of her salary and another cent for each minute lost.

The teacher herself is made to report the tardiness to the principal of the school, who in turn reports it to the school board, and the secretary docks the unfortunate victim of an open bridge or a broken trolley wire a cent for each minute she has been delayed.

There is no excuse accepted. It is a cent a minute without mercy. The time is taken by the school clock, with which the teacher's watch must agree. There is no allowance for difference of watches, as on the railroads. If a teacher is a minute late at the first opportunity she must walk up to the principal's office and request that he see that she has a cent's worth of absence placed against her name. In case the unfortunate has been a minute and a half late there is a great how d'ye do. The committee has to meet and debate solemnly whether the teacher shall suffer a 2 or a 1 cent deduction, and there are few recomendations for mercy.

It is to the credit of the teachers that in spite of the ridiculousness of the matter and the implied insult every time they have to play the spy on themselves every one has promptly reported any absence. Most of the commissioners are ashamed of the rule; but through some occult influence it is allowed to remain.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A State Flower.

The public schools of some States have adopted a State flower. The golden rod is claimed by Nebraska, Oregon and Alabama; Colorado has selected the wild columbine; Delaware, the peach blossom; Idaho, the white syringa, sometimes called the "bride's flower;" New York and Iowa, the rose; Vermont, the clover; North Dakota, the wild rose; Maine, the pine cone and tassel; Minnesota, the moccasin flower; Montana, the bitter root; Utah, the lily; Oklahoma, the mistletoe; and Rhode Island and Wisconsin in lieu of flowers have chosen the maple tree.

The Class in Physiology.

The following remarkable physiological statement ocurred in the examination papers of a student in a Western school not long since: "The human body is divided into three parts—the head, the chist, and the stummick. The head contains the eyes and brains, if any. The chist contains the lungs and a piece of the liver. The stummick is devoted to the bowels, of which there is five, a, e, i, o, u, and sometimes w and y."

Must Not Accept Presents.

The Pottstown, Pa., School Board has adopted a resolution forbidding the acceptance of presents by teachers from their schools. The directors took this action because they believed that many poor children are embarrassed at their inability to contribute along with the other children to the gifts. They also regard the practice as tending to influence the teachers' relations with the pupils.

A Tiger's Spring.

The strength of a tiger in its dying struggle is said to be almost fabulous, writes Miss Marryatt in a letter from India, and she goes on to describe a very distressing occurrence which took place in the Bandypoor jungle, by which Captain H——, aide-de-camp to the Governor of Madras, lost his life.

Captain H——, while staying at the bungalow on a journey to or from the hills, heard that a large tiger which had done great mischief in the neighborhood was still lurking in the surrounding jungle. This was grand news for a sportsman, and he lost no time for sallying forth in search of the beast. According to the statements of the natives who accompanied him, the captain soon found himself face to face with this monarch of the Indian forests.

The tiger was on one side of a small stream, and Captain H—— on the other, and it was afterward ascertained that he had actually fired at the brute thirteen times before it sprang with amazing strength across the stream—amazing, when it is taken into consideration that Captain H—— was in general a most successful shot.

Seizing the unfortunate man before he had time to elude the attack, the brute crushed him so frightfully that he was only carried back to the bungalow to die. A doctor was procured as soon as possible, but nothing could save his life. The tiger must have fallen back almost instantly and died, as he was found on the spot with the thirteen shots in his carcass.

Broke Up the Band.

The success of a boy in silencing a street band is recorded by the Philadelphia Record.

A German band of four pieces started to play "Annie Rooney." A crowd of urchins, attracted by the music, soon gathered around. Then a mischievous-looking boy appeared on the scene sucking a lemon. He waited until the band was in the midst of the tune and then squeezed through the crowd, and, standing in the midst of the musicians, began sucking the lemon with all his might.

The effect was instantaneous, the sounds issuing from the brass instruments became feeble, and at last they ceased altogether, and the four Germans, whose mouths were dripping moisture and all puckered up, made a break for the little fellow, threatening him with a terrible punishment. The boy made his way through the crowd, however, and soon showed a clean pair of heels.

How He Got His Start in Life.

A refreshing variation of an old story came from New South Wales during the recent banking crisis, and may have a special interest still.

A prominent banker in Sydney was holding forth on his early life.

"How did I get my first start in life?" he exclaimed. "Why, one day I picked up a pin."

"Oh, that game's played out," was the general cry.

"I picked up a pin," the banker continued—"a diamond pin, which I pawned for £50; and, after giving 10 shillings to charity to change my luck, I began my career as a money lender with the other £49 10s. To-day, after thirty years of hard labor, I'm a millionaire, and, to celebrate the event, I have just given 10 shillings more to charity."

Motors for Hauling Produce.

Motor cars capable of drawing three wagons carrying ten tons of produce are about to be introduced into Liverpool. The wagons are to be loaded at the ship's side and the ordinary highways are to be utilized without laying rails or using any other mechanical aids.

Like a Bird.

Smith—You told me your friend sang like a bird. I think he has a horribly hoarse voice. How can you say it is like a bird's?

Jones—Well, the bird I meant was a crow.—Judy.

It is an indication of a "disappointment" for a woman to class all men under one head.

INAUGURAL ADDRESS.

JAMES A. MOUNT,

GOVERNOR OF INDIANA.

Gov. Mount's inaugural address, as delivered before the General Assembly, is as follows:

Gentlemen of the Senate and House of Representatives:

In taking the oath of office prescribed by the constitution of the State and entering upon the discharge of its obligations, I am not unmindful of the grave responsibilities and arduous duties thereby entailed. With a profound sense of gratitude to the people of our great commonwealth who, by their suffrages, have called me to this high station of honor and trust, it shall be my constant endeavor to so administer the affairs of state as to promote the best interests of all our people. It is made my duty, in obedience to the constitution, to enforce the laws. Gentlemen of the Legislature, into your hands is committed the high responsibility of making laws.

Conflicting interests will arise, urgent claims will be presented, the disposition of which will require mature thought, careful consideration and unbiased action. Some of these interests will be represented by men who are skilled in all the details of legislation. Corporations, trusts and combinations, through lobbyists, are able to look after their interests, while the mechanic, the farmer, the miner, the business man and the day laborer have no one outside the members of the legislative body to exert influence in their behalf. To your wisdom and to your sense of justice is committed the right and power to enact laws that shall advance the best interests of all the people.

Laws should be founded upon principles of interdependence of all our industries, business interests, pursuits, callings and relations of capital and labor—of employer and employe. He who engenders strife, arouses hatred, or creates discord is planting the seeds of revolution. Laws that tend to conciliate, that seek amicable adjustment of differences, that facilitate harmony and concord, will strengthen the bonds of union. The interdependence of capital and labor, of employer and employe, should be the foundation of law and the underlying principle of action governing these interests. Actuated by such principles as will lead to peaceful arbitration, we may hope for the time when the rights of labor shall be accorded without strikes and the protection of property secured without soldiers.

Building and Loan Associations.

These organizations should be held to such strict accountability by law as will insure a better guarantee of safety to the money entrusted to their care. At the same time you must not be unmindful of the fact that these associations have, in many instances, been helpful to the common people in enabling them to purchase and build homes. Therefore, in correcting defects, your acts should not prove destructive to what, under proper safeguards, may be a beneficent institution.

Education.

Article 8, Section 1, of the Constitution, says: "Knowledge and learning, generally diffused throughout a community, being essential to free government, it shall be the duty of the General Assembly to encourage, by all suitable means, moral, intellectual, scientific and agricultural improvement, and to provide, by law, for a general and uniform system of common schools, wherein tuition shall be without charge and equally open to all." The education of the masses is declared essential to free government. In compliance with the wisdom of this provision, we should look to the enactment of a mild compulsory educational law.

The agricultural improvement contemplated in the constitution is of much importance at this time. The questions of soil fertility, combatting infectious diseases and insect pests, fungus growth, the science of breeding, of feeding, of marketing, the law of supply and demand, with many kindred questions, upon a better understanding of which, in large measure, depends the future success of the farmer and fruit-grower. The farm institutes are the most direct and practical means of imparting to the farmer this needed information, and it is generally conceded that Indiana, for the amount expended, is conducting the best institutes and holding more of them than any other State in the Union.

Live Stock Sanitary Laws.

The total value of live stock in Indiana April 1, 1896, was more than $75,000,000. The loss entailed from disease during the year exceeded $5,000,000. The swine breeders lost in numbers over 580,000 head of hogs, the value of which exceeded $3,000,000. For stamping out contagious diseases Massachusetts appropriates $150,000; Pennsylvania, $90,000; Illinois, $40,000; and New York is now asking for $300,000. The allowance in our State is but $4,000. The present law is not wise in its provisions for the expenditure of this amount. The law should give the State the power to select the most competent veterinarian available. Upon his judgment should depend the killing of animals. He could call and qualify competent men to assess values at less cost for such service than the law now provides.

Highway Improvement.

Good roads are essential to our highest development socially, intellectually and financially. Many counties in our State, actuated by a commendable spirit of progress, are rapidly improving the highways. In the near future some of our counties will have a complete system of free gravel roads. The economy in road improvement will soon be demonstrated by the fact that the counties having the best roads will maintain them at less cost than the mud roads, with all their inconveniences, are maintained in their wretched condition. The work required by law of able-bodied men, together with the road tax, gives to the road supervisors of our State the expenditure, in money and labor, of a vast sum, much of which is wasted by reason of incompetent management. In some instances in our State a brokerage business is carried on and money is made out of trafficking in this road tax. While some of our road laws need reforming, the manner of their execution needs revolution.

Commissioners and Trustees.

County commissioners and township trustees have large discretionary powers under the law. They should be held to rigid account through printed reports of allowances and expenditures of public money, and the publication of these reports, as prescribed by law, should be made mandatory.

State Tax.

The constitution provides that "taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the State." This clearly implies that all property shall bear its just proportion of the burden. It is no uncommon thing in the settlement of decedents' estates to find thousands of dollars in deposits, notes, shares of stock and policies that were not listed for taxation. Real estate cannot be secreted, and, with no exemption on account of mortgage or other debt, he who owns real estate is subjected to the payment of an undue proportion of the taxes. The tax law should be as searching as possible, and the Township and County Assessors and the State Tax Commissioners should see that the law is enforced.

Trusts and Combines.

Trusts or combinations of capital formed for the purpose of counteracting the law of supply and demand and with a view to arbitrarily controlling, manipulating or increasing the prices of any product, commodity or article of merchandise, should be declared a barrier to trade, and should be prohibited by law.

Apportionment Law.

The spirit of the Constitution recognizes the equality of all men before the law; that they are entitled to equal representation and an equal voice in selecting their representatives. It is to be hoped and confidently expected of this General Assembly that it will enact a law apportioning the Congressional, Senatorial and Representative districts that will reflect honor and credit upon those enacting it, and in a manner that will give the electors their constitutional rights.

Centennial Celebration.

The committee provided for by the last General Assembly, with instructions to report to this honorable body, are entitled to much credit for their faithful service. They have manifested a laudable State pride, which is reciprocated by the progressive people of our State. If this centennial is to be observed, their plans possess much merit. The prevailing opinion, however, is that any exposition that would be creditable to our State will necessitate a vast expenditure of money. The advisability of the observance hinges upon the wisdom of expending a sufficient sum of money to insure success, and the ability of the State to bear such expenditure. Any great outlay of money at this time must augment our already heavy State debt and add to the burden of taxation. The best service that can be rendered our State, both as to its credit and honor and the welfare of our people, is the adoption of a system of economy that will reduce our debt and lower the rate of taxation.

Insurance Laws.

The present rate of insurance is burdensome. Too great a sum of money is leaving our State in premiums for the amount returned in loss on policies. Recent examination of the State Auditor's books shows that since 1873 there has been paid out over $53,000,000 while there has been paid back to policy holders but a little over $28,000,000. These reports indicate a loss to policy holders of $25,000,000. It matters but little whether this immense sum of twenty-five millions of dollars was in profits or in extravagant salaries, the loss to our people and State is too excessive. All unnecessary barriers to home companies should be removed and the organization of home companies encouraged. The present excessive rates of insurance are driving the farmers into the organization of home mutual companies, as provided by the acts of 1881. Millions of dollars of farm property is thus being insured at low cost, with the money kept at home.

Public Health.

Pure food and strict sanitary regulations are needful to life and health. Therefore, laws to this end should receive your vigilant care.

Election Laws.

The purity of the ballot will determine the existence of any free government. To every voter should be granted his untrammeled rights, both in convention and at the polls. The choice of nominating conventions should not be subjected to traffic, barter and change at the behest of a committee of party tricksters.

Soldiers' Homes.

The Soldiers and Sailors' Orphans' Home and the State Soldiers' Home still appeal to our sympathy and patriotism. Indiana is justly proud of her soldiers and sailors. The most imposing monument ever erected to the memory and patriotism of brave men stands in Monument Place, in our beautiful capital city. It is a lasting testimonial of the veneration of the people of our great commonwealth for her soldiers, living or dead. "To care for him who has borne the battle, and to provide for his widow and orphans," is a part of the unfinished work committed to a patriotic people by the immortal Lincoln.

Penal Institutions.

The Constitution provides that "the Penal Code shall be founded on the principles of reform, and not vindictive justice." For the carrying out of this provision a merit system should be established in our prisons, and the inmates put upon their honor and manhood and graded accordingly. At the earliest convenient period the Girls' Reformatory should be disconnected from the Woman's Prison. The close proximity of the two brings the Reformatory in touch with environments that tend to undermine reform influences.

Benevolent Institutions.

These great institutions stand as monuments to the principles of love and benevolence. The unfortunate wards of our great State within their walls are entitled to our fostering care. While the State expects such laws, rules and regulations as tend to strict economy, yet our people desire such liberality as will provide for the comfort and care of her unfortunate wards.

In Conclusion.

Gentlemen, I trust you will meet the pressing duties before you bravely, fearlessly, and yet with wisdom and patriotism. May your deliberations be mutually pleasant and harmonious and your speech and acts be tempered with moderation. Humbly do I pray that God's gracious presence may abide with us as a people, and that the light of His unerring counsel may guide you in your work so that the results of your legislation shall contribute to the development and prosperity of our great State. May your deeds be such that the smiles of an approving conscience shall abide with you, and the benedictions of a grateful people be showered upon you in thankful acknowledgment of duties faithfully performed.

Not to Be Bluffed.

During the courtship of Mr. Disraeli, afterward Lord Beaconsfield, and Mrs. Wyndham Lewis, Mrs. Lewis was living near Cardiff, when through the window she saw Mr. Disraeli approaching, and ordered the servant to say she was not at home. When the servant descended to the hall, Mr. Disraeli was hanging his overcoat on a peg. "Mrs. Lewis, sir, is not at home," said the flurried maid. "I did not ask for Mrs. Lewis," was the calm, statesman-like reply. "But I don't know when she will be back," urged the maid. "Neither do I," philosophically replied he; "but I am going to wait till she does come back; so make me some tea." He did wait, he got his tea, and he married the widow.

of candy. According to the French law, the materials that may be employed are as follows: For blue, indigo, Prussian blue, and ultramarine; for red, cochineal, carmine and carmine lake; for yellow, saffron, French berries, Persian turmeric and fustic; for green, a mixture of one of the yellows and one of the blues.

USE OF A PETRIFIED FOOT.

Bill Merkle Sharpens Bowie Knives on His Stony Pedal.

Here is a man with a petrified foot. His name is Bill Merkle, and he lives in the mountains of Texas. A party of hunters from El Paso discovered him. When they got back to town they told the story.

Merkle was a cowboy in the days when the cowboy was in the height of his glory. He had lived in the hills for twenty-five years. It was about 1876 that the accident befel him which caused him to be the ultimate possessor of the only stone foot in the world, which is attached to a live leg.

He was rounding up a big lot of cattle, when they stampeded. In trying to get out of the way, his horse slipped and he was thrown to the ground, directly in the track of the maddened cattle. How he escaped being trampled into a shapeless mass is a mystery. After the herd had passed, his companions hastened to him, expecting to find his mangled corpse. They were surprised to find him unhurt, except for a compound fracture of the left leg, below the knee, both bones being broken.

Apparently both bones knit very rapidly, but below the fracture the flesh seemed to be undergoing a remarkable change in color and texture. In a few weeks the bandages were removed. The bones had knit firmly, but the lower part of the leg shows unmistakable symptoms of having undergone a hardening process, which could not be explained. As time went on the foot continued to harden, until the entire foot and leg below the fracture became completely petrified, although remaining joined to the live flesh.

Merkle declares there is no pain anywhere in the region of the old fracture, and while the weight of the petrified limb necessarily retards his progress he can stand upon it, and even take a few steps, and his general health is excellent. Of course there is no sensation in the petrified member; it may be struck, scratched, or pricked with impunity, and lifting the foot cross the right knee Merkle uses it as a whetstone, sharpening knives against the hardened sole.

AUTOMATIC BASEBALL PITCHER

Prof. Hinton's Invention Declared by Ball Players to Be a Success.

Prof. Hinton gave the first public exhibition of his base-ball pitching machine in the gymnasium at Princeton, N. J., the other night. The gun, which is a short, breech-loading affair, twenty-four inches in length, was held at one end of the gymnasium. At the other was a net at which the professor pitched several balls from his gun. All were successful, and the curves could be seen as distinctly as if sent from the hand of one of the best 'varsity twirlers. In the lecture Prof. Hinton told of his early experiments with the machine, and how he expected that the national game would receive a great change through the agency of the mechanical pitcher.

As shown in the accompanying illustration, A is the powder tube; B, screw rod governing false breech; CC, wind sights. The method of shooting this gun is to hold the stock of the rifle firmly under the right arm. This will bring the sights on a level with the eye. The "fingers" of this gun are concealed within the muzzle.

A New Version.

The boy stood on the burning deck,
As straight as noble Festus;
He said "I'm not a bit afraid,
My suit's made of asbestos."

Rule of Paganini's Violin.

A leader of the social world of her day and generation invited Paganini to a dinner at which other men and women, distinguished in art, were to be present. She had expected that he would play before them during the evening, and when the great musician arrived, to her chagrin she discovered that he had not brought his instrument.

"Oh, Signor!" she exclaimed, reproachfully, "you have not brought your violin."

"No, madame," Paganini answered, "my violin never dines out."

Stand Against Tipping.

At one of the up-town hotels in New York the landlord has taken a decided stand against the obnoxious "tipping" system. On the first of the month the wages of the waiters were advanced 40 per cent., the object being to abolish, if possible, the system of tipping waiters, so detrimental alike to patrons and management.

WOMAN'S POWER.

IT SHAPES THE DESTINIES OF MEN AND NATIONS.

Where Men Are at a Disadvantage, and "Only a Woman Can Understand a Woman's Ills."

Woman's beauty, love and devotion, rule the world. Grand women; strong mentally, morally and physically, whose ambition and magnetic influence urge men to deeds of grandeur and heroism. Such women are all-powerful. Weakly, sickly, ailing women have little ambition, their own troubles occupy their thoughts, and their one object is to get well.

They have no confidence in themselves, and only too often lose faith in their physicians.

All irregularities, whites, bearing-down pains, nervousness, headache, backache, "blues," distaste for society, sounds in ears, palpitation, emaciation, heavy eyes, "all gone" feeling, dread of impending evil, sleeplessness, etc., should at once be removed and vigorous health assured.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has for twenty years saved women from all this. Hear this woman speak:—

"I wish to publish what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Sanative Wash have done for me. I had falling of the womb and leucorrhœa, and they have cured me of both. I am a well woman. I suffered dreadfully with such dragging pains in the lower part of the back and extending around the body, irritation of the bladder, pain when walking and painful menstruation; I weakened terribly. I had been treated by three doctors without much help, and it only took five bottles of your Compound and three packages of Sanative Wash to cure me. I can recommend them to all women suffering with complaints like these."—MRS. VANNATTA, 3827 N. Broad St., Philadelphia, Pa.

A STORY AND ITS SEQUEL.

Pathetic Death of the Grand Niece of a Revolutionary Hero.

The pathetic death in Brooklyn a few days ago of Mrs. Josephine S. Gerocka, who claimed to be a grand niece of Count Pulaski, adds a tragic sequel to one of the most thrilling chapters of the American revolution.

A member of one of the oldest and most aristocratic families of Poland, Count Pulaski was forced to leave home on account of the conspicuous part which his father had taken in the Polish revolution. Although a mere youth he joined the Turkish army and figured in several engagements between the Turks and Russians. Later on he went to Paris, where he made the acquaintance of Benjamin Franklin, who was there in the interest of the American cause. Becoming deeply interested in the struggle of the revolutionary patriots he offered his services, through Mr. Franklin, to the commander-in-chief of the American forces. His offer was promptly accepted, and shortly after his arrival in Philadelphia he participated in the unfortunate battles of Brandywine and Germantown. In spite of his first disastrous experience, however, he organized an independent corps of troops and took part in the famous engagement at Valley Forge. Although he sustained a frightful loss of men, he reorganized his corps and started south, where a still more grievous chapter of misfortune awaited him. At Charlestown, he made a stubborn assault upon the British lines, only to be repulsed with great slaughter, and again at Savannah his troops shared a similar fate. In the latter engagement, however, the brave officer fell mortally wounded, and his long career of reverses ended on Georgia soil.

With gratitude to the noble count for his heroic defense of her borders Georgia has named one of her counties in his honor, while a towering shaft of marble in the city of Savannah preserves the record of his courageous martyrdom.

Similar, in point of misfortunes at least, to the checkered career of this illustrious prince has been the experience of his hapless niece, Mrs. Gerocka. Several years ago she filed a suit against the government in which she sought to recover the sum of $2,000,000, which she claimed that her grand uncle had advanced to the American cause. Unable to substantiate her claim, however, the suit failed. Sometime after this she was given a clerkship in Washington, but on account of indifference to her duties it was necessary to dismiss her. Unable to return to Europe for lack of means she took up her residence in Brooklyn, where she gradually sank to the very lowest condition of poverty. For quite awhile she sold papers on the streets, but growing tired of this occupation, which little harmonized with the gentle blood in her veins, she finally resorted to the desperate extreme of self-destruction.

Our American annals contain no sadder tales of misfortune than the ones which group themselves about the names of Count Pulaski and his grand niece.—Atlanta Constitution.

Thistles.

When thistles get full possession of the ground it is difficult to eradicate them. They should be plowed under before they bloom. If the land is seeded to Hungarian grass the thistles will be cut off with every mowing of the grass, and as Hungarian grass crowds every other kind out of existence, the thistles will not have much chance. Plow the land in the fall, turning under the Hungarian grass sod; plow again in the spring, and then cultivate the land to early potatoes, keeping them clean with both hoe and cultivator. This requires two years' work, but gives the thistles no opportunity to recuperate.

Remenyi's Joke.

"I made one good joke the other day," exclaimed Remenyi, the violinist. I have suffer for a long time wiz my stomach, and my doctor tell me I must eat only baked apples, rye bread and milk. For six months I eat nussing but rye bread, baked apples and milk till I hunger, I starve almost for somesing good. Zen I write to the doctor and say: 'Dear Doctor: For six mont's I eat only rye bread, milk and baked apple, and milk, baked apples and rye bread and baked apples, rye bread and milk till I sink my stomach is in apple pie order. Wasn't zat a good joke.

Tit for Tat.

The late Bishop of Rochester was batting in a local cricket match, when the bowler sent a ball very wide of the wicket. "Keep the ball in the parish!" cried the irascible bishop. The next ball knocked his lordship's middle stump out, and the yokel shouted: "I think that's somewhere about the diocese my lud!"

It is estimated by competent authorities that 620,000 tons of water tumble over Niagara every minute, night and day.

COVERED WITH SORES

FACE AND THROAT WERE AFFECTED.

Hood's Sarsaparilla Cures—Disease Completely Eradicated by This Great Medicine.

The fact that Hood's Sarsaparilla has power to cure a great variety of diseases is due to its peculiar combination, proportion and process, which enables it thoroughly to purify the blood. A great variety of diseases are caused by impurities in the blood and it is by removing these impurities that Hood's Sarsaparilla strikes at the root of the disease and effects a positive cure where other medicines only relieve the symptoms.

"Hood's Sarsaparilla has done a great good in my family. My wife's throat was in a terrible condition, being covered all over with sores. The roof of her mouth was also affected, and there was a hole in the right side of her tongue. Her lower lip was in a bad condition and her with red blotches. Some of the leading doctors prescribed for her, and she was under their treatment for some time without benefit. I did not know what to do next, but finally resolved to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, and I believe if she had not begun the use of this medicine, she would now be beyond the reach of any remedy. The first bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla did not seem to do much good, but before the second was gone she was cured. She has taken three bottles in order completely to eradicate the disease, and she never felt better in her life than she does at the present time. I will never be without Hood's Sarsaparilla in my house. I believe it has no superior as a medicine." James H. O'Neil, 4433 Halsted street, Chicago, Ill.

Whole Body Was Covered

Knitting a Fad.

Knitting is the society girl's latest fad. No longer does she embroider dainty little doylies, but devotes her time to making golf stockings, bags and umbrella cases instead. Newport set this fashion last summer. Every young woman when she desired to do fancy work of any kind devoted herself to the old-fashioned employment. Instead of making tobacco bags for her men friends she knitted him bibycie stockings. A year ago a man would not have carried a traveling bag made of knitted yarn on any account, but now all the dudes think they are lucky if some of their fair friends will make them one. The umbrella cases made of knitted silk are also very swell. They are especially neat looking and make very desirable little gifts for Christmas.

"Walter Baker & Co., of Dorchester, Mass., U. S. A., have given years of study to the skillful preparation of cocoa and chocolate, and have devised machinery and systems peculiar to their methods of treatment, whereby the purity, palatability and highest nutrient characteristics are retained. Their preparations are known the world over and have received the highest indorsements from the medical practitioner, the nurse and the intelligent housekeeper and caterer. There is hardly any food product which may be so extensively used in the household in combination with other foods as cocoa and chocolate; but here again we urge the importance of purity and nutrient value, and these important points, we feel sure, may be relied upon in Baker's Cocoa and Chocolate."—Dietetic and Hygienic Gazette.

The Black Cat.

The wives of many of the fishermen in Yorkshire keep a black cat in the house, in the belief that doing so assures their husbands' safety at sea. On the vessel herself, however, it would be deemed disastrous for a black cat to be carried, as it is popularly supposed to carry gales in its tail. Also, if one of these animals become unusually playful, a tempest is always considered certain to follow.

Law Reforms

We publish to-day, a proposed law, framed by the "Local Government Reform Society of Indiana," a body of business men and others interested in improving the laws of the state and their application to the people's needs. It will be seen that this is the first step toward making many changes in the administration of the business of the several offices, county, municipal and state. If this work is properly done and then executed in the right spirit, much good may be accomplished. If not properly done, it will be worse than the present conditions.

BEAUTIFUL.

Ladies.—If you want a rare and beautiful addition to your attractive collection of house plants, now is the time to improve the opportunity by sending for one or more of our pretty Globe or Bird Nest cactus. This species has very beautiful flowers of dark and pale red, pink and yellow. Every lover of flowers and plants should have at least one of these in their collection. We have them singly and in clusters of from two to six. By mail, prepaid, single, 15 cents; double 25 cents; triple, 50 cents; cluster of from four to six 75 cents. Also seeds of the rare soap plant at 25 cents per dozen; plant $2.00. Stamps or postal order. C. D. KROW,
St. Francis, Kas.

Proposed Law.

An Act to Provide for a Revision of the Laws of the State of Indiana, in Relation to Municipal Corporations, Including Counties, Civil and school, Townships, Cities and Towns and all Others, and Declaring an Emergency.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, That there shall be appointed by the governor of this state three competent persons, not more than two of whom are of the same political party, who are hereby made a Board of Revision. Such Board is authorized and directed to prepare a compilation and revision of the general laws of this state governing municipal corporation, including counties, civil and school townships, cities and towns and other municipal corporations which may exist in this state. Said Board shall suggest such amendments and alterations in any of said laws and prepare bills for such additional ones as they may deem proper, with a view to the adoption and enactment by the general assembly of a full and complete code governing such subjects. The bills to be prepared by such commission shall be presented to the general assembly by the governor at the opening of its next regular session.

SECTION 2. The governor of the state may make an allowance for expenses incurred by said board from time to time, payable out of the state treasury on warrant by the auditor of state, to be issued on such order, and not exceeding fifteen hundred dollars per year for two years. The auditor shall also furnish such Board with necessary stationery. Said Board shall receive no compensation except such as may hereafter be allowed by the General Assembly.

SECTION 3 Whereas, It is declared than an emergency exists for the taking effect of this act, therefore the same shall be in force from and after its passage.

Your Vitality?

The essence of life is force. Every breath you breathe, every heart beat, every motion of your hand, takes force. The measure of force we call vitality. If this is lacking, there is loss of flesh, lack of resistive power, a tendency to catch disease easily, especially a tendency to Consumption. For low vitality nothing is better than Scott's Emulsion. It supplies force by furnishing the nourishing, strengthening elements of food in an easily digested form; enriches the blood, and builds up the system. When ordinary food is of no avail, Scott's Emulsion will supply the body with all the vital elements of life.

Two sizes, 50 cts. and $1.00. All druggists.

If you will ask for it we will send you a book telling you all about Scott's Emulsion. Free.

Sarsaparilla Sense.

Any sarsaparilla is sarsaparilla. True. So any tea is tea. So any flour is flour. But grades differ. You want the best. It's so with sarsaparilla. There are grades. You want the best. If you understood sarsaparilla as well as you do tea and flour it would be easy to determine. But you don't. How should you? When you are going to buy a commodity whose value you don't know, you pick out an old established house to trade with, and trust their experience and reputation. Do so when buying sarsaparilla.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla has been on the market 50 years. Your grandfather used Ayer's. It is a reputable medicine. There are many Sarsaparillas—but only one Ayer's. It cures.

No Wedding in 20 Years.

—New York Times.

In Windsor county, Vermont, is about as queer a town as there is in the United States. Its name is Baltimore, and it possesses extremely little else except a history in which none of its inhabitants express the slightest pride. Baltimore is fairly old, as American towns go, having been set off from Cavendish and organized in 1793. It then had 275 presumably ambitious and hopeful inhabitants, but every census taken since then has revealed a steady growth—downward. In 1800 the place lost one citizen, and the subsequent record stands as follows: In 1810, 207 inhabitants; 1820, 204; 1830, 179; 1840, 155; 1850, 124; 1860, 116; 1870, 83; 1881, 71, and 1890, 64. To-day the number is 59, and one of the 59 spends his winters in the Soldiers' home at Battleboro. Nothing ever happened in the town, not even a crime, and it has no distinguished sons or daughters. The houses are scattered over a territory included within Baltimore's limits, nowhere forming anything like a village, and there is no store, no church, no postoffice, not even a cider mill. The people are prosperous enough, as Vermont farmers define prosperity, but they keep moving away whenever opportunity offers, and nobody ever moves in. It is 20 years since a wedding took place in the town.

Good Business.

We clip from a exchange of Jan. 14. "The United States last week shipped to foreign countries almost ten million bushels of grain—a record beyond all precedent. There were 3,100,000 of bushels of wheat, 4,800,000 bushels of corn, 1,000,000 bushels of oats, 600,000 bushels of barley, 45,000 bushels of flaxseed and 40,000 bushels of rye. The aggregate value of this grain was about four and a quarter million dollars. The wheat brought a good price—about 30 per cent. over its value at this time last year. The other kinds of grain were sold at about the lowest prices on record."

New Game.

Columbus, Neb., Telegram

A new game for church socials has been evolved by a young lady who believes in 16 to 1. Each girl at the party takes a basket well filled with the delicacies of the season and covers it with white or yellow cloth, to suit her political preference. The young man selects his basket according to his views on the financial question, as argued during the recent campaign and then pays at the rate 1 cent per pound for the owner. The baskets are placed in an adjoining room, and the purchaser does not know whether he is getting a fat or a lean girl. Each purchaser has the chance of weighing his prize on the scales, and the free silver man is allowed to kiss his girl sixteen times to the gold standard man's one.

Silver Dollars.

Silver dollars were coined rapidly during December. In that month $1,700,000 dollar were coined and enough small silver to make two and a half millions. Your Uncle Grover may not like silver money, but in spite of his bull dog ways, he sees what the people want, and quietly goes to work to do as they wish. But he would hate awfully to come out and say he had this done because the people asked for it. If he could be in about four years more, we would have him converted.

A Change.

Harry Culbertson to-day turned over the books of the Wabash station at the Junction, to his successor, and retires from the railroad business. He had been Wabash agent at the Junction just four years yesterday. He expects now to give his time to other business. We spoke recently of him and C. A. Rafter and said they would locate another hoop factory at Morenci, Mich. We now learn they have found a better location for timber, at Jasper, a station on the Main line of the Lake Shore fourteen miles east of Auburn. Here he and Mr. Rafter will locate the new plant. We have not learned whether Mr. Rafter will leave here or not, but he will have an interest in it. The Linigers will remain at the Junction to manage the plant here. They seem to have been successful in their business in spite of the hard times that has stopped so many other factries. They are evidently prudent business men, and we look to see them succeed in their new location. Our people will regret to lose either of the families.

A Truthful Statement.

An excellent and invaluable remedy, for the cure of cough, cold and hoarseness, is Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, and Mr. Jas. Hadfield, 350 West St., New York City, verifies this statement. He writes: "Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup is a most excellent remedy for cough, cold and hoarseness, and I take great pleasure in recommending it to all, who require such a valuable household medicine." Dr. Bull's Gough Syrup is sold everywhere for 25 cents.

Little Delaware.

Deleware has only three counties but she can have as much trouble electing a U. S. Senator as Texas could. Here is the situation there now:

"The Delaware legislature it in a tangle worse than that of last year. The democrats have four undisputed senators and the republicans the same number, while the senatorship from Kent county is in dispute. In the house, omitting Kent, the democrats have thirteen and the Republicans one. It will thus be seen that the democrats have a majority of at least four on joint ballot, for with Kent conceded to the republicans the senate would stand five to four democrats, and the house thirteen democrats to eight republicans. The tie in the senate, not counting the senator from Kent, has caused disgraceful scenes of violence, and two senates have been organized, one by the four democrats with the democrat from Kent, and the other by the four republicans with the republican from Kent. Two United States senators willp robably be "elected" and the contest will have to be decided at Washington".

Obituary

William Grube, deceased, was born in Stark county Ohio, Nov. 22, 1826 departed this life Jan. 10, 1897, aged 70 years, 1 month and 19 days. He moved to DeKalb county in the year 1851 and Oct. 29, 1854, was united in marriage to Elizabeth Long. To this union were born seven children, one son and six daughters, all of whom are left to mourn the loss of a kind and affectionate father, the mother having preceded him to that realm of eternal bliss.

Seldom do we realize that those who sit around us at table and hearth are to be angels, and often sooner than we dream. Although father Grube had been an invalid for six long years his death came suddenly.

At six o'clock Sabbath morning while sitting in his chair became nervous and tired, upon being assisted to his bed continued to grow weaker until 10:15 o'clock, when death relieved him of his suffering. During his illness he bore his afflictions with a resolute will, and at all times greeted his friends and neighbors with a cordial welcome and a word of good cheer.

Relieved at Once.

Not a few who read what Mr. Robert Rowls, of Hollands, Va. has to say below, will remember their own experience under like circumstances: "Last winter I had lagrippe which left me in a low state of health. I tried numerous remedies, none of which did me any good, until I was induced to try a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The first bottle of it so far relieved me that I was enabled to attend to my work, and the second bottle effected a cure." For sale at 25 and 50 cents a bottle by F. E. Davenport the Druggist.

Cigarette Law.

We have received the following brief letter from Hon. C. M. Brown, our member of the House, at Indianapolis and publish it for the benefit of his constituents.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Jan 12th 1897.

ED. COURIER,

Dear Sir:—I have this day received very large petition from the people of Auburn, and vicinity, asking that a law be enacted against the manufacture and sale of cigarettes within the State of Indiana. I desire to say through your paper that all will be done within my power both by influence and vote to accomplish this end. Several bills have already been introduced in the House on this line, some to license the sale, others to prohibit. I am for the latter.

Very Respectfully yours,
CHAS. M. BROWN.

Something to Know.

It may be worth something to know that the very best medicine for restoring the tired out nervous system to a healthy vigor is Electric Bitters. This medicine is purely vegetable, acts by giving tone to the nerve centers in the stomach, gently stimulates the Liver and Kidneys and aids these organs in throwing off impurities in the blood. Electric Bitters improves the appetite, aids digestion, and is pronounced by those who have tried it as the very best blood purifier and nerve tonic. Try it. Sold for 50c and $1.00 per bottle at Robbins & McCord's drug store. 2

Smurr-Zerkle

Ladies Who Suffer

From any complaint peculiar to their sex—such as Profuse, Painful, Suppressed or Irregular Menstruation, are soon restored to health by Bradfield's Female Regulator.

It is a combination of remedial agents which have been used with the greatest success for more than 25 years, and known to act specifically with and on the organs of Menstruation, and recommended for such complaints only. It never fails to give relief and restore the health of the suffering woman. It should be taken by the girl just budding into womanhood when Menstruation is Scant, Suppressed, Irregular or Painful, and all delicate women should use it, as its tonic properties have a wonderful influence in toning up and strengthening the system by driving through the proper channels all impurities.

"A daughter of one of my customers missed menstruation from exposure and cold, and on arriving at puberty her health was completely wrecked, until she was twenty-four years of age, when upon my recommendation, she used one bottle of Bradfield's Female Regulator, completely restoring her to health."

CASH! WHY? CASH!

We have discovered that we can save our customers money by doing away with our books entirely. Everybody Aants to buy CHEAP and we know we can sell you enough CHEAPER to more than offset the inconvenience (if it is an inconvenience.) We desire to state briefly why we are changing to a STRICTLY CASH BASIS on HARDWARE and cash or notes for farm machinery, wagons and buggies.

1st. Nearly all the other stores in Auburn are doing a cash business and we have to carry more accounts than we can offord to do, at the prices we have been getting.

2d. It takes an extra man to keep books and we proposeto do with one less man and cut the profit that much, thereby SAVING YOU MONEY.

3d. In a busy day we quite frequently forget to charge as afterwards we find out when men come to pay for goods and we have nothing charged to them.

4th. Some few people when they owe an account and have not enough money to pay it and buy the articles they need in our line will go some place else and buy and pay them the cash and still owe us on account.

5th. A few accounts get mixed as for instance J. Jones buys something and it is charged, and when we start out make our colleftions, we wonder whether it is John, Joseph Jacob or Jonathan Jones. We try all of them, get CURSED by most of them, and paid by none of them, sometimes.

6th. We meet all competition in price and now we propose to beat all competition by buying for cash and selling for cash.

7th. We are going to sell at such close margins that we will get the hardware trade because prices will tell.

Come and see us when you want anything in our line and we will explain our system more fully to you.

COURT

Wednesday's Daily.

The first Smithfield township case came up this, Wednesday afternoon. It was brought by John Tayler, of Franklin, against Smithfield township, to recover the value of some orders he had bought, and which had been issued by trustee Blake to build a school house in District 7. Blake bought a piece of land of Elias Kepler for $100. Taylor paid him $100 for it. It was already endorsed by Kepler. Old house had burned, Kepler had not yet given a deed. Then to build a school house, Blake said he needed $1000 to build the house, Taylor would not lend money directly, but put in about $1100 into Citizens Bank at Waterloo to pay for orders as they might be deposited there. This was done to the extent of $850, but he then refused to take more, as thought there was some doubt as to way business was being done.

James O. Blake sworn. Was trustee referred to. Dole was to get $1200 for building the house. Dole also put up an outhouse, and did some extra work; the total was about $1310. Paid him as he wanted. Made arrangements with Taylor to get orders cashed at the bank. Do not remember giving any to Mr. Dole. Do not know whether money was used in building schoolhouse or not, as it was too long ago to remember. (Dole says he received some of these orders from Blake.) Blake did not remember giving Dole orders. There were two orders for this school house issued to his half brother Mr. Anthony He paid Kepler in cash, then took first order to Kepler who endorsed it, and then Blake took the order to Taylor and got his money back in that way. Mr. Blake was kept on the stand some time explaining how the business was done. The case is going on as the DAILY is made ready for the press.

Thursday's Daily.

As we went to press last evening, the case of Taylor vs Smithfield township was going on before Judge Perfield, Judge McClellan was for Taylor and Rose & Roby for the township. It was decided that the transaction between Trustee Blake and Mr. Taylor was all correct, and the township would have to pay the orders he had bought.

But the trial brought out a point we do not understand. It seems that Blake had been guardian for a half sister, Miss Anthony, and when she came of age settled with her by giving her his note, which note was also signed by his half-brother Isaac Anthony, then in order to make Isaac Anthony secure, it appears that Blake gave him a township order, as collateral. Anthony testified to this on the stand and showed the order. Of course this transaction may be all right, but it occasioned a great deal of comment. We know nothing further about it. But it appears that the order would not be good.

Speaking of township orders reminds us of the coming trouble over some Newville township orders. It appears that John Stahl acting as agent for some school supply house, sold the trustee, A. E. Chapman, recently, some supplies, the nature of which we did not learn. The trustees issued township orders in payment, and recently, one order for $200 was offered to A. G. Jones at Butler and another of $250 to W. H. McIntosh of this place, each at a heavy discount. We believe they were offered at $25 off each order, although the rate of interest was 8 per cent. This looks as though the trustee had paid at least that much too high a price for the supplies. And it might be added right here, that many of the troubles that trustees have got into, were caused by buying things that were not needed, or which at best, the township could have got along without. No trustee should buy a thing he can get along without, in these hard times. Public officers, should economize just as the people are doing.

Attorney Lee Welker is in the city to-day. He is attorney in a case brought by Kate Adams against Carnahan and others for note and mortgage. Rose & Rose are attorneys for Carnahan.

The next case was that of Mildred Penland vs Newton Penland, which came up this forenoon. Judge McClellan, John Baxter and the Prosecutor, by Mr. Welsheimer his deputy, represent Mrs. Penland, Rose & Rose are for Penland. It appears to arise from the bastardy case of last year. The young woman first had Al Irvin arrested for bastardy, but this case was dismissed and she then sued Penland. The case was before Squire Walter, and Penland was bound over to court in $400 bonds. Later on he married her and the suit was stopped. Now she claimes he deserted her soon after this, giving it the appearance of a fraudulent marriage. There is a law that punishes a man for marrying a woman with no intent to live with her, but merely to avoid a punishment under the circumstances in such a case as this. Both sides have many witnesses.

Friday's Daily.

The case between Mrs. Penland and her husband has been going on, as stated yesterday, but another case was sandwitched in between its beginning and end. This was the case of Mrs. Kate Adams against Carnahan et al. Milton Carnahan owed Mrs. Adams on a mortgage, and found he could not keep up the interest. He gave her his note for the interest due, so she would be getting interest on that also, the same as she could had he paid her the money. Then she, at his suggestion had him endorse on the notes, the amount of interest, showing it paid up to that date. But now she feared that this new note would not be properly secured by the property holden by the mortgage, and asks judgment on the mortgage and its interest up to this time. It was also shown that Charles Simon was a partner of Milton Carnahan at the time, and his name is on the new note, with that of M. Carnahan. The latter said Simon signed the note beforehand, and he only had to fill it out. But Mrs. Adams says Carnahan signed Simons' name to the note, saying he was authorized to do so as they were partners. After studying the matter over, the judge, Hon. W. M. Brown, of Angola, decided that the note for interest, would be of no value under the circumstances but he gave judgment to Mrs. Adams on the mortgage for full amount $1044.

Then the Penland case proceeded. She brings suit for $1000 damages, and there is besides a criminal string that can be pulled on a man who is proved to have married a woman with no intention to live with her, but merely to avoid the pulshment for an offense against the laws. She was put on the stand and was kept there nearly all the afternoon. She said he had staid with her but a few nights, now and then since the marriage, and had given nothing whatever to her support. She admitted she had kept company with several young men at different times, but claimed she had no improper relations with any but Penland.

A suit like this always draws out a crowd of idle men, who enjoy a case full of salacious points with sparring and brilliant repartee between attorneys. And there were two well dressed young ladies in the audience, evidently for the same purpose. We do not know their names, and so they need not be afraid we will give them away. They soon got discouraged and left.

It is proposed to put more chairs inside the rail, to accommodate several of Auburn's bald headed men with front seats. We noticed several, who are in the habit of looking under the bed every night, for fear some wicked woman is hiding there, with fell design against their innocence. A few were there to-day.

It was noticed that three of Steuben county's ex-representatives in the legislature were present yesterday. They were, the Judge, Hon. W. M. Brown; the prosecutor, Hon. A. Eugene Davis; and Hon. D. R. Best, all of whom have good records as members of the Indiana Assembly. All are attorneys, and the last named is also a newspaper man, being one of the publishers of the Steuben Republican.

During a lull in one of the cases, the prosecuter called in the bondsmen of Mr. Moody and Judge Penfield came in and they examined into the sufficiency of his bond. Mr. McNamara was not called in, as it was found he was not desirable. It was decided that John Grube and C. H. G. Jones were ample for the $6.000, and so they remain the bondsmen.

The grand jury is still busy to-day, Friday, but we suppose it is mainly with cases of gambling or violating the liquor laws. It is not very entertaining to notice a number of well known young men, being called in. It may be they had not violated the laws themselves, but they must have been where they knew something about it.

The Penland case has been going on, except a brief interval just before noon when it took a short rest and another case was taken up to have some point passed.

Saturday's Daily.

The Penland case was finished about the time we went to press yesterday all except the pleas of the attorneys. Judge Brown will be here on Friday of next week to listen to the argument, and that, we suppose will close the case.

Thursday evening the sheriff at Port Clinton, Mich., came down and got the two prisoners that Sheriff Stroh had brought over from Butler the day before. They were the ones who had been seen at St. Joe but not captured as our correspondent stated in a recent letter.

The same day, two others were put in jail. One is the young man who stole the brass over at Garrett. The other is a young man named Marsh from Waterloo. He is up for burglary being accused of breaking into J. A. Denison's restaurant there and stealing a lot of oysters.

The grand jury were excused last evening to meet again on Tuesday, the 26th. Some odds and ends of work came up to-day, but it was mostly the smaller cases.

Gen. Blair and W. H. Leas, Waterloo were in court doing some business in which they were interested.

Monday's Daily.

We pick up a few odd cases that came off at times when we were not in the room covering a period of about a week.

August Kuckuck was naturalized and swore allegiance to the United States, and "for-swearing alligeance to all foreign powers and potentates and especially to William II Emperor of Germany." And now he is one of us. His name indicates that he will be a "cuckoo." We hope not, though.

Lillie Metze was divorced from Emil Metze. Florence Rohrabaugh was divorced from Edward and her name changed to Smith In the same way, Elizabeth Raub, wife of Jacob Raub got her name changed to Olinger. Ann Russell was divorced from Alfred.

There were quite a number of cases brought over from Whitley County, in which various judgments were taken against J. F. and Burdett McNear.

Daniel Edgeman, on a charge of Larceny got 60 days in jail.

The attorneys in the Penland case will prepare special findings.

J. M. Hook gets judgment against Lewis Cullers, $278.81; of which $158.83 is without relief and $119.99 is "slow," whatever that may mean.

The case of Chas. F. Brown, vs John and Ida Lumm, damages, verdict for defendant and costs retaxed.

Kirkland vs Grate on note, plaintiff got $193.

Mary Yarde vs Gump, on mortgage. Finding $31 due when action began, but there had been a tender of the money, and so plaintiffs had to pay costs.

P. J. Lockwood got a foreclosure of mortgage against Knepper et al.

MONDAY.

There was a little delay this morning in getting business started, owing to delayed trains and extreme cold C. J. Coats was over from Butler and got in some work in probate matters, and local attorneys fixed up some preliminary points.

Afternoon it was still found difficult to do business as so many witnesses failed to get there. The jury was made up partly of "specials" to try the case of the Ashley Furniture Co. vs Frederick, but they were finally called in and told it had been dismissed, and they were excused till to-morrow, Tuesday morning. The case against Joe Pfefferl was called up, and the witnesses told to be on hand at 7 this evening, when they would be used.

There is a divorce case to come off this afternoon, that will interest many DeKalb folks, on account of the prominence of the lady's family. Dora Ray applies through her attorney, D. A. Garwood, for a divorce from her husband Wm A. Ray. Mrs. Ray is a daughter of Squire Shipe, of Fairfield township, a well known and respected citizen Mr. Ray is an engineer on the B. & O. and their home has been at Garrett. Mrs. Ray says he has been abusive and cruel, at one time, throwing her out of the house. He now files a cross bill accusing her of infidelity. She is now making her home with a married sister in Toledo, and is to be here on the 3 o'clock train to-day, but not in time to be reported.

AN EARTHQUAKE.

Over 2,500 People Killed Near Teheran, Persia.

A special from Teheran, capital of Persia, received in London, states that 2,500 persons perished as a result of the earthquake which occurred on Kisham Island, January 11. Kisham Island is the largest in the Persian Gulf, and is situated about fifteen miles from its entrance. Its population is estimated at 5,000, mostly Arabs.

Killed by a Thief.

About 8 o'clock Saturday evening Frank Redman, a fireman, was killed by a thief at Indianapolis. A few minutes before two unknown thieves entered the store of Joseph Eldridge, across the street, hit the old man over the head with a butt end of a revolver, and endeavored to rob the store. Redman had heard the cries from the engine house and started in pursuit of the thief, who ran north, and was about to head him off at the entrance of an alley, when the robber turned and shot him in the head and fled. Redman lived but a short time. His assassin made good his escape.

Bubonic Plague.

St Petersburg special: Two cases of the bubonic plague, which is raging in Bombay, are reported from Kamaran. Kamaran is an island off the west coast of Aralsia, in the Red Sea. It is a British possession and one of the landing stations near the city of Mecca. A severe quarantine has been established by the Russian authorities. Committees in aid of the Indian famine have been instituted by the Governors of St. Petersburg, Moscow and Odessa.

Six-Club League.

The Central Base Ball League was organized in Evansville, Ind., Saturday. Five cities were represented at the meeting, namely: Nashville, by W. L. Work; Terre Haute, by H. F. Schmidt; Cairo, by A. S. Steffel; Washington, Ind., by proxy, and Evansville, by Marx Gumbert. Representatives from Memphis and Little Rock were expected, but for some reason failed to put in an appearance. The league is to have six clubs only.

A New Name for the Cabinet.

Lyman Gage of Chicago, is the latest addition to the President's official family, and it is said he will probably be Secretary of the Treasury. Gen. Lyman, in Cleveland, who is as conversant with the situation as any one can be outside of McKinley himself or his confidential advisers, said Gage is being considered for the position, and that friends are urging his appointment. It is further stated that McKinley sent an emissary to see Gage at his home in Chicago, to ascertain whether or not the latter would accept a portfolio if tendered him.

Sherman Denies It.

Senator Sherman says that there was no truth in the published statement that he and Secretary Olney had entered into an agreement that the Cuban question should remain in statu quo during the remainder of the present administration. "The newspapers should invent something more logical," said the Senator. "There is," he added, "not only no agreement between the present Secretary and myself, but we have never discussed the question."

Burned to Death.

Mr. Alfred Goin, living in the country near Noblesville, Ind., went out about his daily business, leaving his wife alone with an infant child. When he returned some hours later, he found Mrs. Goin lying on the floor, horribly burned from head to waist and in convulsions. She is dead.

Another Lynching.

Insurgents Sink a Gunboat.

The Cubans have destroyed and sunk the Spanish warship Relampago by torpedoes. The explosion killed the commander, assistant engineer, gunner, and three marines, and wounded the chief officer, paymaster, and engineer seriously. Spanish officers confirm the news.

Flames in an Orphans' Home.

A portion of the Buckners Orphan Home, in the suburbs of Dallas, Tex., burned at midnight Friday. Five boys perished and a number of others were injured. The building, with all of its furniture, was entirely destroyed. The loss is not yet known.

HISSED THE HIGH HAT.

Indignant Audience at a Chicago Theater Exorcise the Nuisance.

Hundreds of excited and indignant theater-goers took the high hat question into their own hands Sunday night at the Columbia Theater, in Chicago, by hisses and yells that amounted to a tumult. They compelled every woman who was present at the first night of Sousa's "El Capitan" to sit bareheaded through the performance—all but those in the boxes and one woman in the parquet, who, in spite of the yells and catcalls that came down at her from the balcony and gallery, kept her wide-brimmed headgear on all through the opera. The noisy demonstration began before the curtain went up for the first act, and continued till after the opera had begun, drowning out the music and for a few minutes threatening to break up the performance altogether. Nobody knows who started the demonstration. From the suddenness of the outburst it might have suggested itself to a hundred persons at the same instant. It began with yells of "Hats off," that were interspersed with hisses and groans as some of the women showed a disposition not to obey. When the hisses came the hats in the parquet and dress circle went off as if they had been caught by a gale from behind. Every woman who entered the theater with her hat on made a nervous grab at the hat pins as soon as she divined the import of the demonstration. Never did hats come off so quickly from feminine heads as they did for the five minutes before the performance began. Women came down the aisle with hair disordered from the quick withdrawal of hat pins, and with faces more red than the plush upholstery of the seats.

TO END LEADVILLE STRIKE.

Mineowners Summoned to Consider Proposal of Miners.

D. H. Moffat, of Denver, the heaviest mineowner of the Leadville district, has gone to the camp in response to a telegram from Gov. Alva Adams, who has established headquarters there until he can reach a conclusion as to the continuance or early termination of the strike. Mr. Moffat was accompanied by several leading mineowners of Leadville. Gov. Adams has desired that the miners' union make some definite proposal of settlement, and this he intends to submit to the mineowners. It has been suggested, it is understood, that such a proposal should have in it certain concessions and that the original demand should be modified. The miners' union has appointed a committee of three with large powers for the settlement of the trouble. The water in the Maid of Erin mine, where the great pumps were stopped Saturday, has risen over sixty feet, and the working drifts of the Wolf Tone are flooded, causing a stoppage of work. The lessees of the Wolf Tone had just broken into a body of rich ore from which they would have been able to hoist fully $1,000 worth per day, but they had refused to pay $1,500 per month for pumping and are now drowned out. The Mahala and several others now producing heavily will soon be flooded.

STEADY GAIN IN TRADE.

Gradual but Certain Improvement Noted in Business Circles.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says: "The greatest growth and prosperity the country had ever seen came suddenly in 1879, after several months of disappointment because specie resumption had not yet brought the benefits expected. It takes time for new confidence to reach through easier money markets, large orders, resuming mills, expanding employment and large distribution, to the results which make still greater and lasting gain possible. Such gradual and steady improvement has been in progress for more than two months. Money markets feel a steady increase in demand for commercial and manufacturing loans. Additional works went into operation each week in January and the working force is larger than at any other time for six months. Best of all, there is so little crazy excitement that the gain may be ascribed to the deliberate judgment of the ablest and most prudent men in business. It is not a time of high prices. Many who are anxious to get early hold on the market are making for the moment lower prices than they could afford to maintain. Some have secured orders enough for months to come, and begin to be less keen in competition."

POSSES AFTER DESPERADOES.

Outlaws Fatally Wounded a Deputy and Shot the Sheriff.

Sheriff Willian J. Fransham went Saturday to arrest Frank Morgan for assaulting a ranchman near Bozeman, Mont. Morgan drew a gun and escaped. The Sheriff, with Deputy Jack Allen, took the trail, overtaking Morgan and his partner at Carpenter's cabin in the Cherry Creek Basin. When within fifty feet of the cabin door, without warning, the two refugees opened fire with shotguns, hitting Deputy Allen, who is probably mortally wounded, and wounding Sheriff Fransham. A messenger sent for help organized a posse at Salesville, which took the trail, and another posse left Saturday night armed with Winchester rifles to head off the escaping ruffians.

Thousands Want Employment.

Nearly 1,200 of Dayton, Ohio, unemployed workingmen, mechanics and laborers held a mass meeting, to which all city boards and public officials were invited. The object was to discuss the serious situation confronting the masses and to devise ways and means to relieve the distress of several thousand families. No definite plans were adopted, though it is confidently hoped that the situation will be adequately met and that none will suffer. It is known that at least 3,000 mechanics and workingmen are out of employment and that possibly more than 10,000 people are dependent upon them. Most of them have been out of work for three or four months, and as the winter shows no improvement it is found necessary to appeal to public boards and charities. More than 1,000 of the unemployed signed a paper expressing their willingness to work at any honest labor, and all public boards will be petitioned to hasten the prosecution of city improvement. The water works department began work on several miles of street mains, having appropriated a considerable sum for the purpose.

Sherman to Be Premier.

At a conference Friday at Canton between President-elect McKinley and Senator John Sherman there was consummated that which has been foreshadowed by the political incidents of several days past. Senator Sherman was formally tendered and accepted the premiership of the incoming administration. The conference was held at the Major's home in Canton and at its conclusion Senator Sherman said: "I have been offered and have accepted the State portfolio."

Deaths Number 2,592.

Bombay dispatch: The situation is growing rapidly worse and the exodus from the city on account of the plague continues. The official returns issued Monday show that there have been 3,633 cases of the plague recorded and 2,592 deaths from the pestilence.

Women and Babes Slain.

It is reported by way of Jacksonville that 500 insurgents, under command of Col. Francisco de Paulo, dashed into San Miguel de Padrane, Havana province, Saturday night. The Spanish garrison, consisting of 600 men, withdrew from the town without firing a shot. The insurgents held possession for three hours, looting the stores, public buildings and many of the residences occupied by Spanish families. They captured the Mayor and forced him to deliver the tax money in his possession, amounting to $3,000. After firing the business portion of the town and several private houses the rebels withdrew. As soon as the insurgents left the inhabitants—men women and children—busied themselves trying to extinguish the flames and saving their effects from the burning buildings. While thus engaged the Spanish forces returned and savagely opened fire on the men, women and children who were fighting the flames. The desperate Spaniards then charged through the streets, using the bayonets on all whom they met, sparing neither women nor children. The report says forty persons were killed outright, eighteen of whom were women and children. Sixty others were wounded, some of them fatally. Several of those wounded fell by the side of the burning buildings and perished. Added to the forty killed outright those who fled into the burning buildings and perished and those who died of their wounds, nearly 100 persons fell victims to the Spaniards.

THREE MEN PUT TO DEATH.

Terrible Vengeance Wreaked on the Murderers of the Cotton Family.

John Johnson and Arch Joiner, who murdered the Cotton family, were taken from jail and lynched by a mob at Amite City, La. The crowd at first decided to burn Johnson at the stake, but finally concluded to hang him. Both negroes were therefore hanged and shots fired into their bodies. The same mob also lynched Gus Williams, who was accused of murdering his wife. All three of the men executed by the mob were colored. Johnson and Joiner, according to the confession of the former, were guilty of the murder of the five members of the Cotton family some time ago. The trio of murderers were taken from the jail at Amite City together by the mob. Shortly afterward a report was received that Williams had been hanged to a big oak tree in front of Little Zion Church, not far from Amite City, and that the mob was on its way to Tickfaw with Johnson and Joiner, who would no doubt meet a horrible fate. Johnson made a confession during the day. His story of the slaughter of the family was peculiarly brutal. He said that he had always liked the Cotton family, and would not have harmed them had it not been for the fact that he was bullied into what he had done. He armed himself with an ax, not with the intention of hurting any of the people in the house, but to prevent their escaping, as he had been told to watch a door. The murder, Johnson said, was planned by Bud McKnight, who was a suitor of the girl, Maude Miller, whose mother, Mrs. Cotton, whipped her for allowing McKnight's attentions. This was the only motive he knew for the crime. He said Arch Joiner shot Cotton, the head of the household, with a gun and then struck Merven Stevens, the son of Mrs. Agnes Stevens, with an ax on the forehead, knocking him back on the bed and killing him. Joiner finished the men and then went into the room which was occupied by Mrs. Stevens, Mrs. Cotton and Lizzie Miller, with Maude and several children, and killed the three women.

OLNEY EXPLAINS THE TREATY.

Senate Foreign Affairs Committee Considers Arbitration.

The Senate Committee on Foreign Relations Wednesday had under consideration the general arbitration convention between the United States and Great Britain. Secretary Olney was before the committee during the session to explain the provisions of the treaty. Secretary Olney remained with the committee until it adjourned. There was a general discussion of the provisions of the treaty, nearly every member questioning its probable effect. Nothing was brought out showing any definite plan of the committee or its intention regarding the treaty, though the questions put to the Secretary indicated that there would be opposition to many of its provisions and that there were differences of opinion between members and the Secretary as to the effect of the treaty.

Wm. E. Mason Wins.

William Ernest Mason, of Chicago, won the Illinois Senatorial battle at Springfield Tuesday night, after a sternly contested effort in which fourteen candidates participated. He was finally nominated by acclamation, Martin B. Madden having withdrawn several days before, and William Lorimer withdrawing when he saw his case was hopeless.

Rich Strike at Ragged Top.

The excitement at Ragged Top, four miles from Lead City, S. D., became more intense Friday morning over the discovery of additional rich ore bodies. A stampede toward the new camp has set in, and many miners are leaving claims generally considered very valuable to rush to the new field, where fortunes are being daily made.

UNITED STATES SENATOR SHERMAN.

Ohio Statesman Chosen for Secretary of State in President McKinley's Cabinet.

DOES AWAY WITH WAR.

The Arbitration Treaty Between Uncle Sam and Queen Vic.

The second week of the new year has gone down as one of the most eventful in the history of the United States, signalizing the greatest stride of the century in the direction of the progress of civilization. By the treaty of arbitration to which Secretary of State Richard Olney and Sir Julian Pauncefote, ambassador of Great Britain and Ireland to the United States, placed their signatures, warfare between this country and the kingdom over which Queen Victoria holds sway is made virtually impossible. An event of so happy a nature should be made the occasion of public rejoicing throughout the land and in Great Britain.

While this treaty has nothing to do with the settlement of the boundary dispute between Great Britain and Venezuela, it is really a result of the conferences which were held by the members of the commission which was appointed by President Cleveland in that connection, with prominent members of the British Government. It is in a measure experimental. It is the first treaty of the kind which has ever been made between this country and any other and in fact is the first of the kind in the history of the world. The manner in which it will work will be watched with the greatest interest by the civilized world. Its importance in the line of progress cannot be overestimated.

The treaty, which is for a term of five years, provides for the arbitration of all questions in difference between the two contracting parties which have failed of solution by diplomatic negotiation. All claims of a pecuniary nature amounting to less than £100,000 ($500,000) and which do not involve the determination of territorial claims are to be submitted to an arbitration commission of three members, one of them appointed by each of the parties to the treaty and the third to be elected by the two thus appointed, or, if they cannot agree, in a manner provided. The award of a majority of such commission shall be final.

All pecuniary claims which shall exceed £100,000 ($500,000) and all other matters in difference in respect to which either of the high contracting parties shall have rights against the other, provided that such matters do not involve territorial claims, shall be dealt with and decided by a commission of five members, two of whom shall be appointed by each of the high contracting parties and the fifth in the same manner as in the commission first mentioned.

A controversy which shall involve the determination of the territorial claims shall be submitted to a tribunal consisting of six members, three of whom shall be judges of the Supreme Court of the United States or judges of the Circuit Courts, to be named by the President of the United States, and three of them judges of the British Supreme Court of Adjudicature, or members of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, to be nominated by the Queen. It is provided in this connection that in case the question involves the territorial rights or boundary of one of the States of the United States or one of the provinces of Great Britain, a judicial official of said State or province may be substituted for one of the judges. The award of such a commission by a vote of not less than five to one shall be final. In case of an award made by less than the prescribed majority, the award shall also be final unless either power, within three months after the award has been reported, protest that the same is erroneous, in which case the award shall be of no validity. In such a case, or when the members shall be equally divided, there shall be no recourse to hostile measures of any description until the mediation of one or more friendly powers has been invited by one or both of the high contracting parties.

Territorial claims include all other claims involving questions of servitude, rights of navigation and access, fisheries, and all rights and interests necessary to the control and enjoyment of the territory claimed by either of the parties of the treaty.

If in any case the nominated bodies designated to decide upon questions which do not involve territorial disputes shall fail to agree upon any umpire as provided in the treaty the umpire shall be appointed by the King of Norway and Sweden. Either of the high contracting parties, however, may give notice to the other that, by reason of material changes in constitutions as existing at the date of the treaty it is of the opinion that a substitute for his majesty shall be chosen.

The high contracting parties shall at once proceed to nominate a substitute for the King of Sweden and Norway; and the same shall hold good in the event that he at any time desires that a substitute shall be appointed. In the case of the death, absence or incapacity to serve of any arbitrator or umpire another arbitrator or umpire shall immediately be appointed in his place in the manner provided for the original appointment.

PRINCIPALS IN THE GREAT TREATY.

THEY CALL IT A MURDER.

Indiana Farmers in a Frenzy Over Brutal Acts of Gamekeepers.

Lake County Indiana, has been greatly stirred by the shooting of four farmers by the gamekeepers of the Tolleston Gun Club. In Hammond, Whiting, Tolleston and Crown Point the farmers gathered, and threats were not only freely made against the men who were concerned in the shooting, but against the property of the gun club as well. Threats of organizing to "clean out" the gamekeepers, sack the property and blow up the dam of the gun club were not infrequent. On one point the farmers were agreed, and that was that if there was to be any more shooting about the gun club's grounds they would not be the only ones who were carried from the battlefield to the hospitals.

The history of the Tolleston Gun Club is streaked with blood. Two hunters have lost their lives and two watchmen were shot and killed by an intended victim. Trespassers have been beaten and driven off the preserves time and again. The members of the club are mostly rich Chicagoans with a taste for sport. Edward F. Daniels is the president, J. W. Brooks the vice-president, George Manierre the secretary and C. D. Peacock the treasurer. The club owns 2,600 acres of marsh land in Indiana, some of which is still being disputed in the Indiana courts.

Poaching on the club grounds had given its caretakers much trouble of late, and seven gamekeepers, well armed with shotguns and pistols, were on duty when the fourteen young men, members of the families of neighboring farmers, invaded a duck swamp and prepared for a day's sport. The watchmen bore down on the boys in a body, and hailing them from a considerable distance, ordered them off the club's grounds. When the poachers did not comply the gamekeepers opened fire at three rods' range and five young men fell to the marsh ice, riddled with shot, two mortally wounded. The sheriff arrested Barney Whitlock, the Blackburn brothers and Alfred Taylor and lodged them in jail. The shooting was done at such short range that every shot went through the bodies of each of the wounded. In the body of Theodore Pratt over 160 shot were counted.

Gov. Mount, in speaking of the shooting, said: "I do not like the idea of people holding a large body of land in our State purely for sporting purposes. It smacks too much of a landed aristocracy for our democratic principles, and is opposed to public policy. If the trespassers were fired upon without any more serious offense than entering upon the lands of the Tolleston Club the guards are murderers."

It is stated that Baroness Hirsch will give another 2,000,000 francs ($400,000) to build a hospital for consumptive children on the Riviera.

You miserable devil, where did you get the notion that you are smart?

SENATE AND HOUSE.

WORK OF OUR NATIONAL LAWMAKERS.

A Week's Proceedings in the Halls of Congress—Important Measures Discussed and Acted Upon—An Impartial Resume of the Business.

The National Solons.

The proceedings in the House Friday were very tame. It was private bill day, but the whole time was consumed in passing House bills favorably acted upon in committee of the whole before the holiday recess. The widow of the late Maj. Gen. John Gibbon was the beneficiary of one of the bills passed, carrying $100 per month, and the widow of Brevet Gen. W. A. Nichols of another, carrying $75 per month. The free homestead bill, which came back to the House with Senate amendments, was referred, under a ruling of the Chair, to the Committee on Public Lands. At the evening session fourteen private pension bills were reported with a favorable recommendation. Among them were bills granting a pension of $50 per month to the widow of Gen. Green Clay Smith and $75 per month to the widow of Gen. Henry A. Morrow. The last mentioned bill was advocated by Representative Mercer, who had the amount increased from $50 to the amount named. A bill has been reported to the House for a subsidy of $100,000 a year to the Pacific Cable Company of New York, in which James Scrymser and J. Pierpont Morgan are interested.

Secretary Francis' nomination was confirmed by the Senate in executive session Monday. The Senate also voted to take up the Nicaragua canal bill. This gives the measure the parliamentary advantage of being the unfinished business of the Senate, so that it will be considered from day to day until final action is secured. The canal bill provides for an issue of $100,000,000 of Maritime Canal Company stock, of which the Secretary of the Treasury, in behalf of the United States, is to subscribe for $70,000,000 worth of shares. The company is to issue bonds up to $100,000,000, these to be guaranteed by the United States. The building and control of the canal are given to American engineers and a board of eleven directors, of whom five are to be appointed by the President. It is substantially the measure passed by the Senate in the last Congress. The House passed three bills of public importance and devoted the remainder of the day to eulogies of ex-Speaker Crisp and to District of Columbia business. One bill passed prohibited the sale of intoxicating liquors to the Indians, one amended the existing patent laws in conformity with the recommendations of the American Bar Association and another provided for the use by the Government of patents secured by naval officers at a compensation to be fixed by a board of three officers.

In the Senate Tuesday Senator Turpie spoke against the Nicarauga Canal bill. Senators Quay, Hale and Blackburn were appointed as conferees on the army appropriation bill, and at 5:45 p. m. the Senate adjourned. There was a pathetic incident in the House in connection with the first bill called up. It proposed to grant a pension of $12 a month to Margaret O'Donnell, a volunteer army nurse who devoted her services from 1862 to 1865 to the wounded of the Twenty-second Regiment of New York light artillery. Her claim has been pending before Congress for several years. When the bill was brought up Mr. Thomas (Rep., Mich.) moved that it be laid on the table. "The relief carried by the bill for this poor woman," said he, "comes too late. Our committee has just received word that the beneficiary is dead." Several bills to grant pensions were passed. At 4 o'clock the regular order on the calendar was abandoned at the request of many members, so that each could, if recognized, call up any bill in which he was interested.

In the Senate Wednesday Mr. Pettigrew of South Dakota opposed ratification of the Venezuela arbitration treaty with Great Britain, and spoke in support of his resolution calling for a report of the work of the commission. The resolution was referred. Mr. Turpie resumed his speech opposing the Nicaragua Canal bill. The Senate then resumed consideration of and passed the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill. The House spent the day debating the Yost-Tucker contested-election case from the Tenth Virginia District, but no action was taken. The conference report on the army appropriation bill was agreed to.

After a two days' debate, in the course of which considerable partisan passion was aroused and an ineffectual attempt made to filibuster for the purpose of gaining time, the House Thursday decided the contested election case of Yost vs. Tucker from the Tenth Virginia district, by denying the seat to Mr. Yost and confirming Mr. Tucker's title thereto. The Republicans were badly divided, fifty-four of them joining with the Democrats and supporting the claims of the Democratic contestee. In the Senate Mr. Morgan, in charge of the Nicaragua canal bill, was determined to secure a time for a final vote. This was resisted by Mr. Turpie and Mr. Vilas. Mr. Morgan announced that he would ask the Senate to "sit out" the bill until a vote was forced. Mr. Vilas finally made a dilatory motion, which, on roll call, disclosed the absence of a quorum. Mr. Turpie concluded his speech against the Nicaragua canal bill. During the day Mr. Chandler presented the credentials of John Edward Addicks, claiming the vacant seat as Senator from Delaware. The claim of Henry A. Dupont for the same seat has already been presented. Mr. Hill of New York spoke against trusts and monopolies in general as a serious menace to the public welfare.

THE UNBROKEN HEART.

He was sitting at the window, and his little nose was flat,
As he pressed his face to kiss me, with his lips against the pane;
Then I bent—but without kissing—in vexation seized my hat;
It had jostled, and I knew that I would barely catch the train,
Came just faintly, "Papa, kiss me!" as I hurried out the gate,
But my time was all to scanty and I really couldn't wait,
For I heard the distant whistle and I knew that I was late,
And my work accumulating in the town.

He was sitting at the window, and as townward rolled the train
I looked back to see the house and into distance watched it pass,
And I knew that he was crying with his little might and main
For the kiss I hadn't time to press against the window glass.
I could see him with his "choo-choos"
quite disowned upon the floor,
And his wooden blocks, forgotten—and my parent heart grew sore,
And I thought: "Dear God—that—what if I should never see him more
At the window when I started for the town!"

He was sitting at the window, and his cry a little moan,
As my mental vision saw him all that long and wretched day,
And my foolish, fearful fancy knew him
dying there alone,
With his kiss that still was waiting for his papa, far away.
He was dying of the grieving—of the awful, awful ache
Of his little baby heart that love had only filled to break,
And I pushed the papers from me and declared that I would take
The returning train and hurry from the town.

He was sitting at the window as I clat-
tered at the gate,
And his tiny nose was flattened as he pressed it to the pane,
And I heard his joyful clamor, as with baby heart elate
He screamed out a royal welcome with his little might and main,
With a brown and sugared doughnut held in either chubby fist,
And his cherry lips a-pucker in the quaint-
est sort of twist,
To my arms he came a-leaping, and he clamored as I kissed:
"Now, ven, papa, what you bling me fom ve town?"

GARRISON IN A ROUND HOUSE.

"Smoky Hill was the end of the track at that time," said the old engineer, shifting his lame foot to an easy position. "We had built a round house—a square one—with two stalls and room at the back for three or four bunks and a work bench. To protect ourselves against the Sioux we had lined, or wainscoated, the house up to about five feet from the ground and filled in behind the lining with sand.

"Indians were thicker than grasshoppers in Kansas in the days of the building of the Kansas Pacific, and scarcely a day—never a week—went by without a fight. At first they appeared to be awed by the locomotives, but in a little while their superstitious fear had vanished and they were constantly setting lures to capture the 'big hoss,' as they called the engine. One day we were out at the front with a train of steel, some eight or ten miles west of the Hill. It had been snowing all day in little fits and spits, and near nightfall the clouds became thicker and darker, and before the sun had gone down the snow was falling fast. By the time the last rail had been unloaded it was pitch dark, and as the engine was headed west, we were obliged to back up all the way to Smoky Hill. The conductor and the captain of the guard, composed of government scouts, took a stand on the rearmost flat-car, and when I got a signal I opened the throttle and began to poke the blunt end of the construction train into the darkness. Ordinarily, I hate running backward at night, but in a case of this kind it is a real relief to know that there are a dozen or more well-armed soldiers between you and whatever the darkness holds. Three or four men with white lights were stationed at intervals along the tops of the ten or twelve cars that made up the train. The house car, or caboose, was next the engine, and upon the top of this car stood the foreman of the gang, and from him I was supposed to take my 'tokens.'

"We had been in motion less than ten minutes when I saw the conductor's light (we were going with the storm) stand out, and following this movement all the lights along the train's top pointed over the plain, and I began to slow down. Instantly a dozen shots were fired from the darkness. Muffled by the storm, the sound came, as if a pack of firecrackers were going off under a dinner pail, and we all knew what we had run into. 'Injuns,' shouted the fireman, leaping across the gangway, 'and they're on my side.' 'Keep your seat,' said I, 'they're on my side, too.'

"Now all the white lights, following another signal from the conductor, began to whirl furiously in a short circle. That was my notion precisely. If they had prepared to ditch us we might as well go into the ditch as to remain on the tops of the cars to be picked off by the Sioux, so I opened the throttle and began to back away again as fast as possible. The Indians had prepared to ditch our train. They had placed a great pile of cross-ties upon the track, expecting that when we struck them our train would come to a dead stop. This small party which had fired upon us was the outer watch, the main band being huddled about the head of ties, where they expected us to halt, and where most of the amusement would occur. The track was newly laid, and as billowy as a rough sea, but this was no time for careful running.

"The old work engine soon had the empty train going at a thirty-mile gait, and then we hit the tie pile. The men on the rear car, which was now the front, had anticipated a wreck, and retired in bad order to the center of the train. The Indians, who had only a faint notion of the power and resistance of a locomotive, stood close together about the pile of ties. The falling snow had made the rails and timbers so wet and slippery that when we hit the stack of wood the ties flew in all directions. Some of them were thrown to the tops of the cars and others flew into the mob of redskins, knocking them into confusion. A fine buck, who must have been standing on the track, was picked up in the collision and landed upon the top of the second car right at the conductor's feet. The fellow was considerably stunned by the fall, and, taking advantage of his condition, the scouts seized and bound him with a piece of bell cord, taking care to remove an ugly knife from his rawhide belt. The band were so surprised to see the train plough through the wreckage that they forgot to fire until we had almost passed them and a great flood of fire from the engine stack was falling among them. They then threw up their guns, those who were still on their feet, and let go at us, but none of the bullets affected our party.

"When we had reached the station the Pawnees who were among the scouts recognized our captive at once as Bear Foot, a noted and very wicked chief. When the Sioux came to himself and realized that he was a captive he became furious. He surged and strained at the bell rope, but it was all in vain, and finally he gave it up.

"When we had eaten our supper we all went into the round house—soldiers and all—for we knew the Sioux would make a desperate effort to secure their chief before the night was out.

"It was long after midnight when one of the men on duty heard a low scraping sound like that made by a hog crawling under a gate. A moment later the noise was repeated, and when the same sound had been heard three or four times the lieutenant in command flashed a bull's-eye lamp in the direction of the door and the light of it revealed three big braves standing close together, while a fourth was just creeping in under the door. With a we-are-discovered expression, the tall Indian, who appeared to be the leader, glanced at his companions. Then, as though the idea had struck all of them at once, they threw their guns up and let go along down the ray of light, and the lieutenant fell to the ground severely wounded.

"Appreciating the importance of our capture, the captain in command had set four powerful Pawnee scouts to guard Bear Foot, the Sioux chief. It was no sure thing that we would be able to stand the Indians off till morning, and as the storm had knocked the wires down we had been unable to telegraph to Lawrence for reinforcements. The fact that their brave chief was himself a captive would increase the wrath of the red men without, and taking even a moderate view of the situation, we were in a hard hole. I, for one, would have gladly bartered our captive and the glory of the capture away for an assurance of seeing the sun rise on the following morning, but I dared not hint such a thing to the captain, much less to the Pawnees.

"The four Pawnees with their prisoner were placed in the coal tank of the locomotive, while the fireman and I occupied our places in the cab and kept the steam up to 140 pounds. If at any time it seemed to me the fight was going against us and the Sioux stood a chance to effect an entrance I was to pull out for Lawrence with the captain and fetch assistance, provided I did not meet a west-bound train and lose my locomotive. I rather liked this arrangement, risky as it was, for it was preferable to remaining in the round house to be roasted alive. Then, again, I disliked fighting—that's what we fed and hauled these soldiers around for. They were so infernally lazy in time of peace that I used almost to pray for trouble that they might be given an opportunity at least once a week to earn their board and keep. Now that the opportunity seemed to be at hand, I had no wish to deprive them of the excitement and glory of being killed in real battle, and so sat nodding in the cab of the old 49 until the flash of the bull's-eye caused me to look ahead.

"The report of the rifles in the hands of the Indians had been answered by a dozen guns from the interior of the building and immediately a shower of lead rained and rattled upon the wooden doors from without. One of the scouts picked the bull's eye lamp up and placed it upon the work bench, training the light upon the double doors immediately in front of my engine. Our men knew how useless it would be to fire into the sand-stuffed sides of the building, and not caring to put themselves into a position where they could fire effectively above the wainstcoting, they very wisely kept close to the ground and allowed the Sioux to empty their guns into the sand.

"Presently, hearing no sound from within, the attacking party ceased firing and began to prowl about the building in search of a weak spot through which they might effect an entrance. The fate of the three early callers who had hogged it under the door kept them from fooling about that trap for the remainder of the evening. In a little while the whole place was as still as the tomb, save for the soft flutter of steam from the safety valve of the 49. Bear Foot knew what was going on. Even though he could see nothing, he knew that his faithful followers were working for his release, and now when all was silent he shouted from the coal tank to his braves to break the door and come in. Before the Pawnee scouts could pound him into a state of quietude he had imparted to his people the particulars of his whereabouts, and immediately the whole band threw themselves against the front of the building.

"The house fairly trembled, the Indians surged from without and the great doors swayed to and fro, threatening at any moment to give way and let the flood of bloodthirsty redskins in upon us.

"'Stand together,' called the captain to his men.

"'Put on the blower and get her hot,' I called to the fireman, for I knew the frail structure could not withstand the strain much longer. As often as the fireman opened the furnace door to rake his fire, the glare of the fire-box lit up the whole interior and showed three dead Sioux near the door. One of them lay across the rail, and I found myself speculating as to whether the pilot of the 49 would throw him off, or whether I must run over him. Now it seemed that the whole band had thrown themselves against the building, and the yelling was deafening. Above it all I heard our captain shout: 'Get ready, Frank.'

"'I am ready,' said I.

"'All right,' said he, 'shoot it to 'em,' and I opened the sand valves and the throttle. I have often thought what a temptation it was for those soldiers to leap upon the engine and make their escape, but, although they all understood perfectly what was going on, not one of them took advantage of this 'last train out.'

"Just as the 'Big Hoss' moved with all her ponderous and almost irresistible weight toward the front of the building the double doors sagged toward me like the head gate of a great reservoir that is overcharged and then I hit 'em. The big doors, being forced from their hinges, fell out upon the redskins and they were caught like rats in a trap. The pilot ploughed through them, maiming and killing a score of them and on went the 49 over the safe switches, which had already been set for her before the fight began. The confusion caused by the awful work of Big Hoss, which they regarded as little less than the devil, was increased when the Indians, who remained unhurt realized that the engine was making away with their chief, for he had told them how he was held a captive 'in the belly of the big horse.'

"All effort for the capture of the round house was instantly abandoned and the Sioux as one man turned and ran after the locomotive. The captain in command of the scouts, taking advantage of the confusion of his foe, and of the fact that his force was in the dark building, while the Sioux were out upon the whitened earth, quickly massed his men at the open door and began to pour a murderously wicked fire into the baffled Sioux, who, like foolish farm dogs, were chasing the 49 out over the switches.

"All the Indians who were crippled by the engine were promptly, and I thought very properly, killed by the Pawnee scouts and the rest were driven away with fearful loss.

"It was a desperately risky run from Smoky Hill to Lawrence, with no running orders and due to collide with a westbound special, or an extra that might be going out to the rescue with a train load of material, but the officials fearing that something might arise which would cause us to want to come in, had very wisely abandoned all trains the moment the wires went down, and so we reached Lawrence just before day without a mishap.

"My first thought was of our captive, Bear Foot, who had made track laying dangerous business for our people for the past three or four weeks, but upon looking about I saw only four Pawnees, and concluded that the fierce fellows had killed the chief and rolled him off.

"'Where's Bear Foot?' I demanded.

"'Here,' said a Pawnee, who was quietly seated upon the manhole of the engine tank, and he pointed down. During the excitement in the round house at Smoky Hill, the Sioux had made a desperate effort to escape, and had been quietly dropped into the tank, where he had remained throughout the entire run.

"Now, it's one thing to stay in a tank that is half filled with water when the engine is in her stall, and quite another thing to inhabit a place of that kind when a locomotive is making a flying run over a new track. After much time and labor had been lost fishing for the chief with a clinker hook, one of the scouts got into the tank, which was now quite empty, and handed Bear Foot out.

"When we had bailed him out and placed him along side the depot where the sun would catch him early, the coroner came and sat on him and pronounced him a good Indian."—Cy Warman, in the Evening Star, Washington.

St. Paul's Rocks.

Almost at the very center of the Atlantic Ocean—only a trifle north of the equator and about half-way between South America and Africa—is a submarine mountain, so high that, in spite of the immense depth of the sea, it thrusts its peak seventy feet above the waves. This peak, startling from its position, forms a labyrinth of islets, the whole not over half a mile in circumference, known as St. Paul's Rocks. So steep is the mountain of which this lonely resting-place of seabirds is the summit, that one mile from these rocks a five-hundred fathom line with which soundings were attempted by Ross on his voyage to the Antarctic failed to touch bottom.

Were the bed of the sea to be suddenly elevated to a level with the dry land, St. Paul's Rocks would be the cloud-capped peak of a mountain rising in sheer ascent in the midst of a broad plain. They are supposed to have been formed by the same disturbance of nature which separated the Cape Verde Islands from Africa.

Treacherous currents make navigation in the vicinity of these rocks dangerous. A Brazilian naval officer, who passed them on an English steamer, tells me that the evening before they expected to sight them he was told by the captain that at 5 o'clock in the morning they would appear about five miles west. At that hour the officer went on deck and looked to the westward—nothing but an expanse of heaving sea. He chanced to turn, and there, five miles to the eastward were—the Rocks. The currents had, in less than twelve hours, carried a full-powered steamer ten miles out of her course.—St. Nicholas.

Doctor Holmes Remembered.

Concerning the genial humor and extraordinary memory of Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, an exchange tells a story which it received from Mr. Bozman Kerr, of Maryland, one of Holmes' classmates.

Mr. Kerr was as aristocratic in his notions as Holmes himself, and was so unusually particular about the spelling of his name that it became a laughing matter with the students.

Twenty years after the class had graduated Mr. John Kerr had occasion to visit Boston, and while there called upon his old classmate, then grown famous.

When Mr. Kerr was ushered into Holmes' study the poet hurried forward, and seizing his old friend with both hands, cried heartily: "Welcome to Boston, J-o-h-n B-o-z-m-a-n K-e-r-r!" as fast as he could spell it.

Might Be Worse.

Howso—A horse ran away with my brother yesterday and he'll be laid up for two months.

Comeso—Yes? Well, I knew a fellow who ran away with a horse yesterday and he'll be laid up for two years.—Exchange.

A good cook is one who can make stewed prunes taste as if she had washed them before cooking them.

DELINQUENT TAX SALE.

LANDS AND TOWN LOTS returned Delinquent for the non-payment of taxes for the year 1895, by the County Treasurer of DeKalb County, Indiana, including the interest and penalty thereon, and also for the taxes for the year 1896.

I, Frank A. Borst, Auditor in and for said County of DeKalb, do hereby, certify that the foregoing is a true and complete list of all the lands and town lots in said county returned delinquent for the taxes for the year 1895, with the delinquent tax, penalty and interest, and also the tax for the year 1896

THE AUBURN COURIER.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana Office as second-class matter.

THURSDAY.....JANUARY 28, 1897

High Taxes.

It is a moving sight to see all the wealthy manufacturers now thronging the lobbies of congress asking for a higher tariff on the things they produce. Government pays $125 a day now, merely to pay the typewriters who take down the opinion and wishes of these wealthy beggars for government protection. But the common people have no lobby and no one at Washington to plead for them and ask that such taxes be removed so the necessities of life may be cheaper for them. A protective tariff is necessarily a help only to those who do not need help, but a disadvantage to those who do need. It would be just as honest to ask government to pay a man's taxes at the court house, as to ask it to give him money in any other way.

Extravagance.

The "Billion Dollar" congress set the pace for extravagance, and up to this time we have had needlessly extravagant appropriations in nearly every department. There has not been a congress in ten years, but could have cut down the expenses ten per cent. Had this been done there would have been no deficit. The revenues of the Wilson bill would have been amply sufficient. Then again, the supreme court knocked out the Income Tax law which would have brought in about 35 millions more and given the treasury a surplus. On the other hand, the McKinley law from which so much is expected, never did produce enough, and probably never will. The deficit began under that law, and before the Wilson bill went into effect the large surplus accumulated by the first Cleveland administration had been swept away, and a deficit had taken its place. The McKinley law was not a revenue law. It was a "protective tariff," only to put more profits into the pockets of those already rich.

Judicial Circuits

If litigation keeps growing in DeKalb county, we shall petition the legislature to make the following judicial circuits:

35th. DeKalb and Steuben counties.
36th. DeKalb and Noble "
37th. DeKalb and Allen "
38th. DeKalb and Whitley "
39th. DeKalb and Huntington "
40th. DeKalb and Wells "
41st. DeKalb and Kosciusko "
42nd. DeKalb and Lagrange "
43d. DeKalb and Elkhart "
44th. DeKalb.

And besides Williams and Defiance counties would be very handy, but we understand we would not be allowed to form a circuit with any territory outside the state.

Freezing Teams.

We have re received this timely note:

Mr. Barns: Is there some way to protect those dumb brutes that stand hitched to their sleds this cold weather, with their blankets under their feet, trembling and shivering with cold? Is there no humane officer in Auburn?

In reply, we are not able to state whether there are humane officers here or not. There was such an organization here a few years ago, but we presume there is none now. But there is no excuse for leaving a team out all day, yet thoughtless people are continually doing so. Men come to town and leave their team out, while they stay about town or at the court room. In case they are to stay long, the team should be in shelter. And in the country, people drive many miles to an evening meeting, and leave their steaming horses stand with little or no shelter for three or four hours.

The Advantages of Prepared Mince Meat should be honestly considered by every housewife. It has great advantages, as one trial of will prove. You will find that it is clean—it could not be more so; that it is convenient—always ready and never spoils on the shelf; that it is economical—a 10c. package makes two large pies, fruit pudding, or delicious fruit cake. Get the genuine—take no substitute.

Send your address, naming this paper, and we will send you free a book,—"Mrs. Parkington's Thanksgiving," by one of the most popular humorous writers of the day.

MERRELL-SOULE CO., Syracuse, N. Y.

Daily For All.

In view of coming trials of various ex-county officials, and other cases that are to come up in court at an early date, it would be well to call attention to the DAILY COURIER. Subscribers in adjoinging towns, and even those in the country who can get mail easy, should make arrangements to get the DAILY during these trials. It costs but ten cents a week, and when it is known just when the trials are to come on, the dimes can be sent with instructions to have the paper started at the right time. This would prove a great satisfaction to those who will not be able to attend as we expect to be present in court wherever it may be, and make a daily report. We make this statement now so all may have time to take advantage of it.

Our Daily

Becoming Popular Among the Citizens of Corunna.

It is a well known fact that the DAILY COURIER is the only paper published at the county seat which is giving an extended account of court proceedings, and other news pertaining to county matters. The paper is becoming quite popular in surrounding towns and in many cases farmers who live near the postoffice are becoming subscribers. Our hustling agent W. J. Cremean at Corunna sends us in a list of twenty-four new subscribers from that town. These gentlemen are tax payers and want to keep posted on the trials of ex-county officials whom they have voted for to handle their money and transact other important business. They are:

Wm Daily, J. A. Gushwa, David Shaffer, Dr. F. Snyder, R. A. Battershell, Samuel Lindsey, John Lipsett, S. B. Brandt, J. I. Chaney, Ed Gushwa, B. Wigent, Josie Booth, F. L. Britton M. H. Loomis, Daniel Thomas, C. H. Willets, R. H. Sherlock, J. H. Knauer, E. Luttman, O. P. Raber, Dr. Rudolph, J. L. McKee, Wm. Dawson, Wm. Lewis.

Mrs Boulton, 222 Crane St. Writes:

Dayton, O., March 12, '96.—"My baby is two months old and from her birth has had severe attacks of wind colic. I tried almost everything, but nothing gave her any relief until I got Dr. Hand's Colic Cure. I have used two bottles and would not do without it. It surely is the best colic medicine ever made." Dr. Hand's Colic Cure and all of Dr Hand's Remedies at Fischler & Son's. 25c. 1

BUTLER.

Mrs. Malinda Stokes is in poor health.

Our grocers are waging a war on coffee. Last Saturday they run the price down to 12½ cents per pound.

A few of our people are attending the bicycle show at Chicago this week.

The old Farnum block at Edgerton, Ohio was destroyed by fire last week. It was occupied by Campbell Fetter's & Co. dry goods, and second floor by the K. of P. Lodge, and the third floor by the Odd Fellows. The fire caught in the b sement and was beyond control when discovered. Every thing in the building from basement to attic went up in smoke. The insurance amounted to about $20,000. Campbell Fetters Co. having $12,000 on stock. The Farnum Estate about $8000 on building. The heat generated was intense breaking all the windows on opposite side and also north and east of building on same side of street. No word has reached us yet as to whether the block will be rebuilt or not. Edgerton like Waterloo has suffered very severly by fires recently.

John Bowman is about to start a sawmill in Butler, a much needed improvement

A number of our people attended the Coffinberry funeral last week.

Mrs. Nancy McElroy, nee. Coffrin has returned to Butler to again make her home here since the death of her husband in Southern Indiana.

One o Butler's editors threw a bomb among some of our society young people last week in his tardy strictures upon the recent lecture and some of his auditors. For a time it looked awful gory over on Oak street. The belligerency of some of the young fellows was only cooled by their inability to pay a fine for a contemplated assault and battery. The end is not yet.

The Lutheran and M. E people are holding union services this week alternating at each church Rev. Disbro one night and Rev. Dustman the next one.

Stiefel Brothers & Co. will open their new dry goods store during this week.

COURT

Tuesday's Daily.

After closing our report of yesterday afternoon, the divorce case of Ray vs Ray of which we made mention, was called up and finished. Mrs. Ray came in on the south bound train and Mr. Ray was present, having come over from Garrett. She gave testimony in substance as we had indicated, to the effect that he had cruelly treated her. Mr. Ray made no attempt to defend his side of the case, and the judge decided that she was entitled to a divorce as prayed for.

The case of Krontz vs VanAuken for possession of the effects of the surveyor's office was called, as that was the last day of the time given to VanAuken to perfect his motion for change of venue to Steuben county. As he failed to appear, the change was not granted and so the case will be tried here at Auburn.

EVENING SESSION.

Judge Watkins arrived at seven had court called, and the case against Joe Pfefferl for violating of the liquor laws was brought up. Prosecutor Davis represented the state, and C. E. Emanuel, D. M. Link and R. D. Tefft, were for defendant. Emanuel moved to quash the indictment on ground of uncertainty in the wording. After argument for and against, this motion was overruled and Emanuel put in a plea of "not guilty." Witnesses for the state were then called, but the Court, Judge Watkins allowed them to wait till the court reporter came. Geo. Henderson could not come on account of sickness and Mae Rose was sent for and sworn in as reporter. Then there was another delay in regard to the ownership of the property where the liquor had been sold. It was claimed it was owned by Mrs. Pfefferl and a part was rented to one party and a part to another. The case was finally continued to next term.

TUESDAY.

The case of Simon and Carnahan vs L. S. Ry. for damages, was called up but R. C. Bell, the attorney for the road was too ill to try it, and it was postponed. The struck jury that had been chosen to try this case was discharged, and the regular talal jury was also discharged for the term. The term closes on Saturday of this week, January 30. On Monday, Feb. 1 court begins in Steuben county. On March 1, it begins again here for the March term, during which it is believed the county cases will be tried.

This morning the Prosecutor called up the cases against Coffinberry, and filed a dismissal of the cases as Coffinberry is dead. This releases the bondsmen who were on his bond for appearance at court. But we suppose the matter charged against him will be investigated in the course of some of the other cases. These will come up next term.

The Jackson township matter came up this forenoon. Judge McClellan for Walter, claimed the latter had bought only such supplies as he honestly believed his towuship needed and that he had paid for them, only a fair price. The other side, represented by Rose & Rose took the opposite view. But there were so many paragraphs to discuss, it would be impossible to give more than the general line of argument. It will evidently be a difficult case to settle.

Anoteer trustee case come up. It was brought up, Freeman Kelley, and Douglas Kelley, to relieve them as bondsmen of James Blake, of any responsibility in such cases as he had exceeded a trustee's authorities. Judge McClellan and Roby were for the Kelleys, and Rose and Rose were opposed As in the Jackson case, it is a hard matter to get right, and there is hard fight, along almost the same lines.

Will Leas and Gen. Blair were over from Waterloo this forenoon. The former while here secured the release from jail of young Luce, who had been sent over from there by Justice Read. It appears they were having a family fight, in which his father was getting the better of his better half. The young man took a hand, and handled his father so roughly, that he was arrested.

Levi Piper asked to have a guardian appointed for Mary Piper, on a claim of unsound mind. It was so ordered.

A fine of $20 each was entered up against Stiefel and Oberlin, of Butler, for running a gambling house.

James W. Platter applies to the court to be released from the official bond of Andrew J. Chapman, trustee of Newville township. Summons was ordered for Chapman, returnable January 30th.

In case of Brandt vs Garrett Electric Light Co. there is an application to have a receiver appointed, but on what points we do not know.

An important case, and also connected with the county cases, is that brought by ex-treasurer Fair, to get an accounting from H. N. Coffinberry, and also to set aside a deed. We understand that Coffinberry had deeded his property to his wife, and Fair wishes this set aside. Since Coffinberry's death, the case will be changed and brought against Mrs. Coffinberry, or rather against an administrator when one is appointed. We understand she says she will not let Coffinberry's bondsmen, those on his bond as Auditor, suffer any loss for any money due the county, if it is possible for her to pay it. This certainly shows a good principle. Judge McClellan is attorney for Fair and Rose & Rose and Daniel Frazier of Fowler, Ind., are for Mrs. Coffinberry.

Wednesday's Daily.

Tuesday afternoon came up the case from Garrett, in which Frank Long sued Warren Webster. It seems that Webster had a case before a justice in Garrett, to garnishee Long, who had been a railway employe, and attach his wages. The suit failed, Webster being beaten. Now Long sues for damages. Judge Lowry was here in the interest of Mr. Long, while Myers and Mountz of Garrett were for Webster, and Judge Penfield occupied the bench. The result was that Long was allowed $15 damages.

Uriah Johnson and Ida Long applied to have Frank Freese sent to the Reform School, because he is an incorrigible. He is now thirteen years old and was sent there till he is twenty-one.

The grand jury were at wark again but had to leave a little of it for the next grand jury, as they could not finish all. They had been in session twenty-four days, the longest session ever held in this county. They were discharged. The court adjourned till Friday when Mr. Brown of Angola, will be here to hear arguments in the Penland case. Some one may also, hear the Platter-Chapman case on Saturday.

Mrs. G. W. Lewis.

Bicksville News.

The News regrets very much to be obliged to chronicle the sad ending of the accident that occurred to Mrs. G. W. Lewis, as related elsewhere in these columns. The broken arm was seemingly doing well until Saturday evening, when it was discovered that blood poisoning had set in. The progress of the trouble was so rapid and the condition of the patient so unfavorable that amputation, which was discussed in council, was considered impossible. In a few short hours the dread disease had made such rapid progress that it was a question of but a short time until death would kindly relieve her. Friends and relatives were hastily summoned and most all were at her bedside in time to bid her a sad farewell. At 1:30, Tuesday morning, the end had come and she had laid the burden of her troubles on her Savior.

Mrs. Lewis was a remarkable woman in her way, and was gifted with a business talent that was surpassed by but few men. She has always been a hard worker and found her dearest pleasures about her own home and fireside. In the farm and door yard she knew and was known by each individual fowl and animal, and it was always her delight to have them run about her skirts and clamor for her well known hands to feed them. She was upright and conscientious in all her transactions, and her advice to young people was to always be the same. While she never spoke of her good deeds, her neighbors warmly testified to her charity, and at the last sad end with many tears they related the receipt of many a kindness in time of need.

She was born in Cayuga count, New York, May 19, 1830, and was but eight years of age when her parents, the late Phillip J. Shell and wife, of Shell's corners, Sciplo township, Allen county, Ind., came into this, then new country. Herself and husband, who survives her, were married in February, 1850, and to them were born two children. Nathan, the elder, died in his young manhood, in 1877, and the daughter, Mrs. Cook Ford, of Auburn, was at her side to do a daughter's last sad duties at her death.

She was aged 66 years, 7 months and 24 days, and had been an honored resident of DeKalb county forty years. She was the greatly beloved aunt of one of the publishers of this paper, and its columns would not contain the many dear and loving things we would willingly contribute to her respected memory. May her reward in the next world be as rich and plenteous as was her good deeds in this.

Attack Prevented

It will be an agreeable surprise to persons subject to attack of bilious colic to learn that prompt relief may be had by taking Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy. In many instances the attack may be prevented by taking this remedy as soon as the first symtoms of the disease appear. 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Davenport the Druggist.

Our Sentiment.

The Garrett Herald of Jan. 21, has a long and friendly article about Mr. Coffinberry. And while it is evidently misinformed as to many facts in the case, we let that pass, and copy with pleasure, an eloquent tribute to the surviving members of the family. The Herald says:

The members of Mr. Coffinberry's family residing in Garrett, who remain to mourn his death consists of his aged mother, his wife and two sons, William and John. Mrs. Coffinberry is one of Garrett's most estimable ladies and is loved by all with whom she comes in contact. While she is essentially a "home person," still she has always found time to pay her duty to society, and no face is ever more welcome at any social gatherings than Mrs. Coffinberry's.

Will, the eldest son, is just entering into manhood, and is our ideal of a perfect young man. He is of a studious disposition, and his business qualifications excellent. He is gentlemanly always, and is highly popular with old and young alike.

John, the younger son, is about 12 years of age, and is among the brightest of Garrett's youthful population.

To the family and relatives who are bereaved by this most tragic death the Herald extends its heartfelt sympathy. We cannot say, we do not know, which is the greatest blessing—life or death. It may be in this instance death gives all of worth in life. If those who press and strain against our hearts could never die, love might wither from the earth. Those who stand with breaking hearts around his grave will find true friends ready to offer sympathy and helping hand, whose religion consists in "help for the living, hope for the dead."

A Peerless Liniment.

As a pain destroyer and cure for rheumatism, Salvation Oil is the peer of all liniments. Mr. Wm. H. Brown, proprietor of Striebinger House, Cleveland, O., writes: "I suffered from rheumatism for twelve years and my last attack kept me in bed, unable to walk. I used Salvation Oil and soon was up and about. As a pain destroyer this liniment has no equal." Salvation Oil is sold everywhere for 25 cents. Try it and be convinced. Sold by F. E. Davenport, Auburn.

Not a Snap

Postmaster Brandon has not such a very soft snap in exchanging postoffice keys just now. There is a "deposit fund" to be sure, but it is so he will have to wait a month or two for it. He has to advance about $60. There was at the first, a deposit made by each key holder of 50 cents. Now, they are returned and then let out again to the same parties on a deposit of 20 cents, which Mr. Brandon has to advance. But the hereafter is also to be considered. If a man breaks or loses his key, the postmaster will have to send to Connecticut for a new one. The factory charges 20 cents for a new key, and the postmaster loses his trouble and stationery used in sending. Some of the ways of Uncle Sam are past finding out.

There is Nothing as Good

There is nothing just as good as Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, so demand it and do not permit the dealer to sell you some substitute. He will not claim there is anything better, but in order to make more profit, he may claim something else to be just as good. You want Dr. King's New Discovery because you know it to be safe and reliable, and guaranteed to do good or money refund d. For Coughs, Colds, Consumption and for all affections of Throat, Chest and Lungs, there is nothing so good as is Dr. King's New Discovery. Trial bottle free at Robbins & McCord's drugstore. Regular size 50 cents and $1.00.

That Hogback.

Every few years the Steuben Republican or some paper of Northern Indiana, digs up that old tale of the "Battle of Hog back Mountain." It is rather a blood curdling story, and shows off "Mad Anthony Wayne," at his best. And the "great Indian leader, Tippecanoe," comes in for no small share of the glory, although he gets badly scooped and had to "retreat," leaving several big stacks of dead on the field, or rathe on the "mountain." Several years ago, we called attention to this wonderful bit of "unwritten history," but unthinking newspapers go right on copying it every few years. The ingenious and fertile mind that first conceived the story got a little careless at the very first. There never was an Indian chief named "Tippecanoe." They probably mean "Tecumseh" who was whipped by Gen. W. H. Harrison, on the "Tippecanoe" river near LaFayette, Ind., on the site of the present village of "Battle Ground." Now let us file away this old battle paper, with the "Ulster County Gazette," of which so many copies are treasured up, to show a "century old paper" two years from now.

—Mr. Greenler of Defiance, is in the city and this morning articles of Incorporation of the new Hoop, Stave and Heading factory were signed and are now on file in the Auditor's office. Mr. Greenler has associated with him two of Auburn's most enterprising and active young men. Messrs. A. C. Robbins of the Farmers Bank, and Chas. McClellan, of the First National Bank. Both these gentlemen are cashiers of the banks they represent. The new factory starts out with plenty of capital to push the business right to the front. Mr. Greenler is an experienced man at the business and Mr. Robbins for several years has been connected with factory work and has an idea of his own in regard to running factories. Mr McClellan has had considerable experience also and his success as a business man proves that he will be a great help to this company. Timber has already been bought and is being hauled to the mill in large quantities. The saw mill is being erected and the machinery for making hoops will also be in soon and the entire plant in working order in about one week or ten days. Lee Robbins is buying timber for the company and finds plenty of it. Perry Muhn has been secured as office man and a sort of general foreman. He and Mr. Robbins will go out tomorrow and scale the elm on about 200 acres of ground. Messrs. Robbins and McClellan should have the encouragement of every citizen of Auburn in establishing this new enterprise. Mr. Greenler has been offered a bonus of $3000 to locate elsewhere, but the ready cash of these gentlemen was what secured this new factory for Auburn, which will give employment to 30 or 40 men, 10 hours a day and 300 days in a year. Who will be the next of our business men to help locate some good factory here?

He is a member of the committee on Benevolent Institutions, and the committee are now out visiting the various places. They were at Logansport to inspect the asylum, and to-day they are at Fort Wayne inspecting the home for Feeble Minded. From there they go to Richmond where they inspect an assylum and finish their wolk at the State Soldiers home at Knightstown.

—Clarence Cook, city editor of the Fort Wayne Sentinel, who fell under a street car a couple of weeks ago and lost an arm was paid $2.500 by the local agent of the Standard Insurance Co. Mr. Cook has carried accident insurance since Dec. 25th, 1896. He lost his arm on Jan. 3d and seventeen days later he received a check for the above amount. H. D. Weaver represents the Standard Co. in Auburn.

Saturday's Daily.

—Dr. Vesta Swarts reports Mrs. Hartle who lives south of town quite sick with pneumonia.

—H L. Fulks, of Waterloo, and James Ervin of Concord were among the COURIER callers Saturday

—A school teacher says the pupils who have access to newspapers at home, are better readers, better spellers, better in punctuation, better grammarians and read more understandingly and obtain a practical knowledge of geography in half the time it requires others. All of which speaks well for the educative powers of the newspapers.

—J. E. Pomeroy has quite a large collection of pictures of prominent statesmen cut from newspapers pasted up in his office. The name of each man is printed underneath the picture and if he is from some state which Mr. Pomeroy can not recall he has the state printed also. It makes quite on attractive display.

—The funeral of Mrs. G. A. Bishop yesterday was largely attended, in spite of the inclement weather. It was indeed a sad funeral. And the funeral of Mrs. Albert Zirwes to-day, was another equally sad. In both instances, the deceased were most worthy women and loving mothers, both leaving little children who greatly need the loving care, they have always received.

—The Lagrange Standard says, "the people seem to have all silver they care to handle. They prefer any additional money in some other form." This is simply ridiculous. Has the Standard asked a single person in regard to the matter? We think not. Our opinion is that he can find plenty of people who will be glad to get silver, at least nine-tenths of them will accept all the silver they can get.

The Albion Democrat, of a recent date, says: Some time ago our friend Frank Clapp, had a horse for sale. He used all the arts and accomplishments possible to sell the horse for $25 but without avail. His wife would frequently enjoy his comfort and refer to the $25 animal. Frank concluded to raise the price to $40 and invested 50 cents in advertising, 25 cents to the New Era and 25 cents to the Democrat Wash Kuhn bought the horse for $40 within one day after the papers were issued. Who says advertising don't pay?

Invented Trollyes

Rochester, Fulton Co., Indiana is the home of the man who invented the trolley system of running cars. His name is Benson Bidwell and he is now trying in the courts to get his rights. Although every step in his great improvements has been patented, unscrupulous corporations are using his patent without as much as saying "Thank you." He is now getting old, and is comparatively poor. It would seem as if he ought to win his battle.

Saw the Point.

"Did you observe," said a merchant to a customer a few evenings since, "the handsome advertisement I have painted on that barn a few miles north of the city?"

"No," replied the customer as he turned on his heel to walk out, but if you will send the barn around to my house I will try and read the announcement. I read the papers and haven't time to run around from place to place to read the bill boards."

Below Zero.

Capt. A. L. Kuhlman of the U. S. Observing Station Gives the Register.

For a day or so the weather had been getting colder, till last night, Sunday, the wind partly ceased and the mercury began going down, and by daylight this morning thermometers showed from 18 to 26 below zero. We may say an average of about 23. Palm leaf fans were at a discount and overcoats came up—to the ears. It is the coldest snap we have had for many a year. L. Bowers, who has a correct, government thermometer, reports 19 beow zero.

U. S. WEATHER BUREAU.

Capt. A. L. Kuhlman says the thermometers at the Observing Station of the U. S. Weather Bureau registered 6 degrees below zero at 5:15 p. m. Sunday, 18 degrees below during last night, 17½ degrees below at 7 a. m. to-day 6½ at 12 o'clock, and 4 degrees below at 1 p. m.

A Timely Suggestion

Dont Ship Your Old Clothing Away When It is Needed at Home.

This zero weather reminds us that there are probably families in our town who have neither sufficient fuel or clothing to keep them warm, and not a great plenty to eat. Let us be charitable to our home people. An exchange offers the following which speaks our sentiments:

"Don't ship a big box of clothing and provisions a thousand miles away when there is a little boy freezing just around the corner probably within a few feet of you. It is right to send help away but take care of the destitute at your own doors before going farther away. Don't hesitate about giving a Presbyterian coat to a Methodist boy, or a Methodist pair of pants to a Lutheran. Give the clothing to the needy regardless of the relatives and you will have done an act that is commendable in the eyes of the Almighty."

Auburn There

The Columbia City Post, speaking of their recent poultry show, says:

"Wm Sheffer of Auburn, and Peter Weaver, of Cedar Creek, were in the city yesterday attending the poultry show. Both are breeders, and the first named has some White Wyandottes on exhibition. They pronounce the show the best they have ever attended, and think the officers of the association made a big mistake in not securing a larger room, as the birds are crowded to much in the present quarters. They attributed the sickness of several birds to the room being kept too warm, and also think some of them were not in a healthy condition when placed on exhibition, a thing which is contrary to the rules of the association.

The Money.

The city of New York, with only a thirty-fifth of the population of the country, has in its banks one fifth of the entire money in circulation. The total money in circulation (that is outside of the treasury,) was officially reported at $1.650,223.400 on the first day of January, 1897, an increase over the first day of January, 1896, of $71,016.676 Of this increase $20,965,682 was in gold, $49,236,885 in greenbacks and $14,730,312 in national bank notes. Although there were many millions of silver dollars coined during the year there was a decrease in circulation of the silver dollars to the amount of $624,108.

—It can be noticed by the print of newspapers that it is pretty cold these days. The type does not show up plain and many places black marks can be seen which is caused by the spaces pulling up. The cold weather makes the ink stiff and that's the cause of the whole trouble.

Navel Oranges.

It has been shown that the tangerine orange, and possibly some other varieties, are formed through the effort of the orange to make a second growth at the apex of the original one, only that it failed to make any original at all. In other words the tangerine orange is a well-developed secondary fruit. How this can be brought about may be readily understood by carefully examining the oranges known in the market as the navel variety. In these cases a small orange can often be found at the apex sometimes of considerable size. When the small one is largely developed and the larger one wholly suppressed, then we have the tangerine.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

PURELY VEGETABLE.

The cheapest, purest and best family medicine in the world! An effectual specific for all diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Spleen. Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common, as a bad breath; and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your appetite, complexion and general health.

CONSTIPATION

should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact, nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache, for the relief of which take Simmons Liver Regulator.

Mrs. Bishop Dead.

Mrs. G. A. Bishop died at her home at 2 o'clock in the morning. She had been unconscious for some time, but before the last unconsciousness she had called the family about her, she spoke of such matters as she wished done, gave them all kind words and a loving farewell. She was a most estimable lady and will be greatly mourned by the entire community, and the family have all our sympathy. The funeral will be at the residence on Sunday, at 1 p. m. and interment in Woodlawn.

Harper's Weekly
In 1897.

With the end of 1896 HARPER'S WEEKLY will have lived forty years. In that time it has participated with all the zeal and power at its command in the great political events of the most interesting and important period in the history of the country, and it has spread before its readers the accomplishments of science, arts, and letters for the instruction of the human mind and the amelioration of human conditions and of manners.

What the WEEKLY has been in its spirit and purpose, as these have been manifested principally in its editorial pages, it will continue to be.

It is impossible to announce with precision all that the WEEKLY will contain during the year 1897. It were as easy to announce what is about to happen in the world. what triumphs for good government are to be won, what advances of the people are to be made, what is to be the outcome of the continuous struggle between the spirits of war and peace, what is to happen in the far East, what is to be the state of Europe twelve months hence, what new marvels of science are to be revealed, or what are to be the achievements of arts and letters, for the WEEKLY is to be a pictorial record of all this.

Cartoons will continue to be a feature.

Serial Stories A New England story by Miss MARY E. WILKINS, will begin in January. A tale of a Greek uprising against the Turks, by Mr. E F. BENSON, the author of "Dodo," will follow. A sequel to "The House-Boat on the Styx," by Mr. JOHN KENDRICK BANGS, illustrated by Mr. PETER NEWELL.

More Short Stories will appear in the WEEKLY than it has been possible to publish during 1896.

Departments: Mr. W. D. HOWELLS's "Life and Letters" have been among the most charming features of periodical literature; Mr. E. S MARTIN, and others will contribute observations of what is going on in "This Busy World;" "Amateur Sport" will remain the most important department of its kind in the country.

The WEEKLY will continue to present to its readers the world's news most interesting to Americans, to make important advances in both the literary and artistic features, and to retain for itself the leading place in the illustrated journalism of the world.

Mrs. Zerwis Dead.

Mrs. Albert Zerwis died suddenly this morning at about 6:00 o'clock. She had apparently been in a hopeful condition a few minutes before her death, when she suddenly grew worse, and soon breathed her last. As noted yesterday, it was found necessary with the hope to save her life, to perform an operation for some sort of tumor. At first it seemed as if it would be successful, and those in charge of the case felt hopeful. The funeral will be at the residence on Monday, January 25th, at 2:30 p. m.

FRUITS.

Possessing Little Nutriment, They Are Yet Valuable Aids to Health.

By most persons fruits are considered wholesome, but the reason of this wholesomeness is not generally known.

Fruits, as a class, are of comparatively slight food value. They are nevertheless wholesome, and from the very fact of their containing little nutriment, they may usually be eaten in considerable quantities without harm. Of course, reference is here made to perfectly ripe fruit—ripe, and not over ripe.

Practically all our cultivated fruits, including the strawberry, the raspberry, the blackberry, the apple, the plum, the peach and the orange, contain large quantities of water, with but a small percentage of nutritive substance. Such nutritive matter as they contain, however, supplies admirably one element of a perfect diet, namely, the carbo-hydrates.

The flavor of fruits, which gives them a pleasant taste, is due to certain volatile oils and to the acids which they contain. Sugar is found in fruits in varying proportions, and is the chief substance which is changed during the fermentation of their juices.

The substance which gives firmness to fruit, and which upon boiling yields the different fruit jellies, is called pectose. Vegetable fibre is found in varying proportions in different fruits. The quantity of oil, albumen and mineral salts in fruits is small, but doubtless they have some slight food value.

It will thus be seen that fruits are chiefly valuable for the water they contain, and for their appetizing nature.

Almost all ripe fruit may be freely allowed to convalescents, their action on the liver and kidneys being favorably rather than otherwise.

Raspberries and strawberries have been especially recommended for biliousness and gout; plums, for gout and articular rheumatism. Dyspeptics should avoid eating hard skin, seeds and hard-fibred fruits.

The best fruits for constipation are fresh apples, figs, prunes, peaches and berries.

Of all fruits the most nutritious are bananas, dates, figs, prunes and grapes, chiefly because of the sugar and starch which they contain.

In general, then, we may conclude that fruits are useful for the nutriment they contain; for the water which they furnish to the system; for their various salts and acids which react favorably upon the blood and the secretions; and also for stimulating the appetite, improving digestion, and giving variety to the diet.—Youth's Companion.

Bebolused, Bedrenched, Beleeched.

He who gave the most medicine was once considered the best physician. This truth—which is not very creditable to the old faculty or to our ancestors, their patients—finds new illustration in a charming article on Miss Frances Davies, which is contributed to Good Words by Rev. S. Baring-Gould. Miss Davies was an English gentlewoman who for eighty-two years survived heroic treatment, and kept a careful record of it.

How thankful her letters make us that we do not live in the first years of this century! For she details how she was obliged to take many a bolus, a pill of the size of a pigeon's egg, not hard, but of putty-like consistency.

How was such a thing got down the throat? Was it sent down with a ramrod, as geese are fed in Alsace so as to give them liver complaint? We can only wonder.

Then came the administration of drenches. Now I am sufficiently old to remember how I was dealt with by my grandmother. She had a pewter spoon, with a hollow handle and a hinged lid to the bowl. This horrible instrument was filled with castor-oil till it could not retain another drop. Then her thumb was applied to the open end of the handle, and so long as it was held there none of the fluid would flow from the spoon.

When my resistance was overcome, the great pewter spoon was rammed into my mouth. I can recall the exertions exercised on my jaws to force my teeth apart to allow of the admission of this spoon. Then, when it rested on my tongue, occupying my mouth wholly, the thumb of my grandmother was lifted, and instantly the whole contents were projected down my throat.

But that is not all.

Frances Davies repeatedly mentions in her letters that whenever she had a bilious headache, at the ages of 80, 81, 82, she had leeches, five and six at a time, applied to her temples. Conceive of such treatment! It is marvelous how any old ladies were left when thus bebolused, bedrenched and beleeched.

There was, however, a fourth horror to which the old lady refers, and with which I in my youth made intimate acquaintance—Gregory's powder—a hideous gray compound, usually administered in red currant or raspberry jam—but sometimes in water.

This is nothing more nor less than calomel; and it is perhaps due to the amount of mercury taken in this form that the teeth of the generation now passing, and of its children, are so liable to decay—for I do not believe that horrible Gregory's powder is to be got out of the systems of Englishmen under two or three generations.

NOW ELECTRIC CABS.

AN ENGLISH COMPANY TO PUT THEM IN USE IN LONDON.

Claimed that Electrical Automobilism Has Been Solved by the Patents Held by the Company—Three Hundred and Fifty Cabs Purchased.

Fast, Cheap, Noiseless.

While French enterprise is expectantly awaiting the perfection of the horseless carriage on the gasoline or gas engine principle before embarking extensive capital in so new a field, the English have found practicable automobolism by the use of electricity as a motive power and have already put it to a practical application. A company has already been formed, known as the London Electrical Cab Company, with a capital of $750,000, and in the course of a few weeks 350 cabs, most of which are already built, will be started in the streets of London.

It is claimed by the projectors of this company that electrical automobilism has been practically solved by the mechanism whose patents they hold, and the amount of the capital these men have invested in the enterprise is certainly the guarantee of the good faith of their claim. The statement will pass without contradiction that, whether or not it really has solved the great problem of the times, the company certainly believes that it has.

Parliament recently passed the road locomotives act, which authorized mechanically driven wheels to pass along the Queen's highways at a rate of speed not to exceed fourteen miles an hour. It was the passage of this act that started the company some months ago upon the scent for a thoroughly practicable automobile cab. They engaged Mr. W. C. Bersey, the well-known English electrical engineer, as their electrical manager, securing with him the right to use his electric vehicles and the sole use of the important horseless carriage patents belonging to the British motor syndicate.

LONDON'S NEW ELECTRIC CAB.

Previous to taking this step the company thoroughly investigated all the autocar inventions in the field. By turn they studied gasoline, petroleum, benzoline, and the various explosive oil and spirit powers, with the result that they discarded them all as powers for use in such crowded thoroughfares as those of London. No choice was then left but electricity, and when the investigators examined the contrivances whose rights they have since purchased they unhesitatingly decided that they had the solution of the vexed problem.

HATFIELDS OF WEST VIRGINIA.

Notorious Family that Has Long Been a Terror in Its Locality.

The pictures herewith presented are reproduced from large photographs which are the first ever taken of a group of Hatfields, of Hatfield-McCoy vendetta notoriety. In the large print here reproduced will be seen Mitchell Hatfield and family, babies included, with one exception, the youngest being too far in front of the baby carriage to be seen. The reader will notice that one of Mitchell's hands has been partly shot away. This was done not far from where the photograph was taken. Seven men attempted to capture him and wounded him thus, as he was dodging along Mate Creek. Mitchell returned their fire and killed one and wounded three. He has not slept in a house in over six years. In the first place, he said, he enjoyed the open air better; secondly, it was not always healthy for a Hatfield to be cooped up in a small hut-like abode with scores of sworn enemies liable to come prowling about. Mitchell said all a Hatfield had to do was to blow a horn and he would be able to muster three hundred Mingo County men at any moment. They have a system of signals that are well understood. That part of West Virginia is very rough, it being impossible to travel it except over certain well-worn paths. The Hatfields live well enough, and always go armed. They are a sober people and all they want, they say, is to be let alone. The three Hatfield youths seen in the illustration are of another family, and like all other Hatfields, each lad owns a good gun and knows how to use it. The boys were found to be bright young chaps and when requested they gave some very clever exhibitions of sharpshooting. When asked if they slept with their weapons within easy reach one of the boys replied, "Well, I reckon." The correspondent also encountered some of the McCoys while en route to Georgia. "Bud" McCoy proved to be a former acquaintance. He used to teach school in Martin County, Kentucky. He had little to say about the war with the Hatfields being again resumed. He had not heard of it. He hoped it was not so, as enough blood had been spilled.

MITCHELL HATFIELD AND FAMILY—HATFIELD SHARPSHOOTERS.

One of Nelson's Captains.

The fifth ship was the Theseus, Captain Ralph Willett Miller. This gentleman, whom after his premature death Nelson styled "the only truly virtuous man I ever knew," was by birth a New-Yorker, whose family had been loyalists during the American Revolution. A letter from him to his wife gives an account of the fight which is at once among the most vivid, and, from the professional standpoint, the most satisfactory, of those which have been transmitted to us. Of the Theseus' entrance into the battle he says:

"In running along the enemy's line in the wake of the Zealous and Goliath, I observed their shot sweep just over us; and, knowing well that at such a moment Frenchmen would not have coolness enough to change their elevation, I closed them suddenly, and, running under the arch of their shot, reserved my fire, every gun being loaded with two and some with three round-shot, until I had the Guerrier's masts in a line and her jibboom about six feet clear of our rigging; we then opened with such effect that a second breath could not be drawn before her main and mizzenmasts were also gone. This was precisely at sunset, or forty-four minutes past 6; then, passing between her and the Zealous, and as close as possible round the off side of the Goliath, we anchored by the stern exactly in a line with her, and abreast the Spartiate. We had not been many minutes in action with the Spartiate when we observed one of our ships (and soon after knew her to be the Vanguard) place herself so directly opposite to us on the outside of her that I desisted firing on her, that I might not do mischief to our friends, and directed every gun before the mainmast on the Aquilon (fourth French), and all abaft it on the Conquerant, giving up my proper bird to the admiral."—Nelson, in the Battle of the Nile," by Captain Mahan, in the Century.

Nursery Picture Screens.

A writer in the Housekeeper describes a picture screen for the nursery. It is made out of the two-armed towel racks which fold up against the wall when not in use. Get them with as long arms as you can. Now take two pieces of bed-ticking or heavy muslin, make it as long as you wish your screen high, having hemmed a two-inch hem in the lower part, and as wide as the arms are long. Hem the sides and sew a little standing ruffle of Swiss or China silk to the top. This will completely hide what will be left of the foundation. Then get your box of advertising cards, calendar pictures, etc., punch tiny holes in each upper corner and tie to the foundation. Place each top of under card beneath the upper one and tie. Nail to the fireplace, window or corner, wherever you wish to put it, and, if wanted out of the way, fold both arms back to the wall. It requires very little work to make a screen like this.

NEW GARB FOR OHIO STATE PRISON CONVICTS.

To the Ohio penitentiary system, which the National Prison Congress has characterized as the "model system of America," is about to be added a new feature that is well worthy the study of reformers in other States. It is the novelty of distinguishing good-conduct prisoners from the others by their dress. Under the new plan the convicts are graded according to their conduct and, accordingly, their desire, confirmed by their conduct, to do right. It makes provisions for giving convicts who are of honest inclination an opportunity to begin life anew outside the prison walls under favorable auspices.

There are three grades of the new prison uniform, and they are pictured in the New York Journal as above. The dress of the best or first grade does not differ greatly from the ordinary dress of working mechanics in the outside world. Every prisoner desirous of mending his life considers it a distinction to wear this superior dress of merit, as it may be called. Reformation is thus encouraged within the prison walls. The second grade uniform is a loud check, and is supposed to act as a check on the prisoner's conduct. It is a very distinguishing badge of the prisoner's behavior, and very few there are who will remain in this class when it is possible to obtain a civilian's suit which carries with it a certificate of a clear prison record. The regulation suit of stripes is worn by the third grade prisoners. In this class the wearer's punishment is ever conspicuous and constantly reminds him of his disgrace and the fact that he is classed among the worst of the prison's inmates.

ORIGIN OF A PHRASE.

How "I Acknowledge the Corn" First Came to Be Used.

Indian corn, the chief product of the Middle West, sometimes attains a great height. The stalks pictured herewith were grown on the farm of D. S. Harper in Henry County, Iowa. They remind a recent writer of the origin of the phrase, "I acknowledge the corn," so much in use by people generally.

A Western man and a son of New England fell into conversation on a railway train. They passed some sturdy-looking corn, and the New England man remarked: "That is fine corn." Whereat the Westerner replied: "That! We don't think much of corn no higher than that out where I live. It may be good corn for New England, but not for the West."

SOME IOWA CORN.

The Eastern man could not believe that corn grew to be more than six feet high in the West. His companion took his name and address and promised to send him a few stalks of big Western corn. A few weeks passed away. The New England man received a long box by express; in it were several stalks of corn more than seven feet high. He wrote to his traveling companion this concise sentence: "I acknowledge the corn."

A Jury Cajoled by Beautiful Women

The jury (in the "Martha Washington" case, a famous trial of forty years ago wherein the captain of the steamboat "Martha Washington" and others were charged with burning the boat to secure insurance) was chosen with difficulty. During their five weeks' service the members of it were assailed on every side by the zealous feminine sympathizers of the accused. By every art possible to youth, beauty, and wit, and the reckless abandon of lives largely spent in the companionship of adventurers, were they approached. "If you do not go into that jury-room and vote 'not guilty,' in an hour you will be a dead man," said the wife of Captain Cummings, confronting an aged juror on the staircase. Sprung from an old and respected Massachusetts family, she was a singularly beautiful, brilliant, dashing woman. As Olive Chapin she had gone in early girlhood to the West, and become enamored of the picturesque river captain. Cummings did not see fit to marry her, and went off to Mexico and opened his gambling-house on the Rio Grande. One day as he sat dealing faro there, his affianced presented herself. Disguised in mans attire and armed with a brace of pistols, she had made her way without detection to the Rio Grande. She was a skilled shot, and could hit a dollar across a room. Levelling a pistol at the recreant lover's head, she said in a short, sharp voice: "Captain Cummings, marry me, or take this in your head." The astonished captain replied, "Why, Ollie, my dear, is that you?" The marriage ceremony was performed that day.—McClure's Magazine.

She—Are you lucky at cards? He—Very lucky. I always win. She (archly)—How about love? He (promptly)—Just as lucky. I always lose.—Puck.

RECORD OF THE WEEK

INDIANA INCIDENTS TERSELY TOLD.

George Blanco, of Anderson, While Crazed, Attempts to Murder His Wife—The Governor Will Not Reorganize Metropolitan Police Boards.

Goes Insane Over Pearl Bryan Case.

George Blanco, of Anderson, was placed under arrest while trying to break a door to get his wife for the purpose of murdering her after the style of Walling and Jackson. He read the Pearl Bryan case from the day it was first published and has become mentally deranged as a result. He has made attempts to kill his wife a la Pearl Bryan twice previously. Friday night she was cornered by him with only a frail door between her and the maniac, who was armed with razors and a butcher knife. He was breaking through the door when the police arrived. He also made a murderous assault upon a neighbor, Mrs. Graham. Blanco has passed his 60th year.

Gov. Mount Not to Wield His Ax.

One of the interesting questions now before the State and the Legislature is what to do with the metropolitan police law, which gives cities of 10,000 or more inhabitants a police board appointed by the Governor. State Senator Charles E. Shively, of Richmond, one of the leaders in the last and the present General Assembly, said: "Gov. Mount authorizes me to say to the Senators and Representatives that he is not in favor of the metropolitan police system as it now stands, but does not feel that he would be warranted in reorganizing the various boards. He said he is of the opinion that if the metropolitan system remains upon the statute books the power should be with the circuit judges. The law needs revision and amendment in many particulars, which will receive proper attention."

Robbed by His Supposed Friends.

In a suit on trial at Anderson it was brought out that Mrs. J. W. Westerfield, wife of the late Dr. Westerfield, president of the Indiana Association, was robbed of a pocketbook containing $2,000 in cash and an Anderson building and loan deposit book, representing $1,040, by people who came to the house during the doctor's illness or funeral. The case on trial is one wherein Mrs. Westerfield sues for the $1,040 held by the loan association, which refuses to give it up, claiming that the book may turn up in the hands of other parties. In her testimony Mrs. Westerfield says the pocketbook and the loan book were in a locker, which was broken into by people coming to the house during his illness, in the guise of friends or followers of his faith.

All Over the State.

William Scott, aged 30, was run down and killed by a fast freight train on the Wabash railroad at Kellers.

Fire in a millinery store under the Grand Hotel at Indianapolis caused a stampede among the guests and employes.

Dora, the 1-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Elsie Brown, living east of La Grange, died from the effects of swallowing chewing gum.

Col. Louis S. Hoyt, aged 72 years, for fifteen years manager of the Grand Central Hotel in Valparaiso, died suddenly. Previous to his coming to Indiana he had been engaged in the hotel business in Rochester, N. Y., and Chicago.

W. P. Ijams has resigned as president of the Indianapolis Belt Railway and Union Stock Yards Company and D. F. Wishall, of Terre Haute, has been elected to fill the position. There will be no other changes. Mr. Ijams has been connected with the company as auditor, general manager and president for twenty years.

Harry Rodgers and Bessie Peterson were married at Jeffersonville Jan. 5, the event having been kept a secret until Wednesday. Rodgers is a pugilist, and has figured in several exciting bouts with persons of his calling, notably Charles Slusher, champion middleweight of Kentucky, in which Rodgers came out victorious. His bride is a captain of the Salvation army, and her home is at St. Augustine, Fla. Rodgers first met his wife during a religious service.

The miners at the Currysville mine quit work at Shelburn. The company posted notices several days ago notifying the miners that a reduction of two cents on clean coal would be made, the district price being 31 cents per ton, which would reduce the clean coal tonnage price to 29 cents per ton, the same as Star City and Shelburn are paying. All machine runners, shooters and loaders, who were formerly on by the day, will be put on by the contract; other labor the same as before.

A phenomenon exists near Salem Centre, Steuben County, where a large section of a road is disappearing into what appears to be a bottomless pit. Several thousand loads of dirt have been dumped on the road, but the immense quantity of dirt gradually sinks into the abyss. The road is one which has been in use for years and the phenomenon cannot be explained. Land in the vicinity of the thoroughfare is also sinking, and general alarm prevails.

George Stottler, Indiana's oldest life prisoner, who was pardoned by retiring Gov. Matthews, has been warned that it would probably be better for him if he did not return to Anderson, the scene of the terrible crime, the murder of the Isanogle boys. Stottler killed the boys thirty years ago by literally hacking them to pieces with a butcher knife. In certain quarters the bitterness against the murderer has not died out. Stottler has passed his fiftieth year now. He is liberated, to find himself friendless, without money and without a home or future and denied the pleasure of returning to the scenes of his boyhood. Generally the pardon is indorsed.

The Midland steel works, Muncie, which have been idle several weeks, resumed operations, giving employment to 1,200 men.

William Meldenkow, aged about 18, called at Muncie police headquarters and said that he had escaped from the Illinois State reformatory a few months ago and wanted to go back. He told Superintendent Fortner that if he did not telegraph the prison officials at Pontiac to come after him at once he would begin ransacking the city of Muncie and steal everything he could carry. The reformatory officials were notified.

At Kokomo, Councilman John Slider threw himself from the roof of his business block and fell fifty feet to the pavement, inflicting fatal injuries. This is his third attempt at self-destruction in a month. He was arrested recently for larceny, and the disgrace unbalanced his mind.

The Porter County Auditor advertised the annual sale of delinquent property, and among the pieces offered are 3,000 lots in the north part of the county sold during the World's Fair by the Porter Manufacturing Company of Chicago to parties residing in Chicago, Cincinnati, St. Louis and other cities. The taxes on the property amount to $20,000.

THE INDIANA SOLONS

As soon as the upper house got back into its own chamber after the joint session had listened to Gov. Matthews' message Friday, Senator Shively of Richmond introduced an anti-trust bill. The bill provides that any company or corporation which joins a trust shall forfeit its right to do business in the State, and provides further that the officers of the company or corporation joining a trust may be fined $500. The attorney general of the State is directed to prosecute all companies or corporations that become members of trusts, and as an incentive it is provided that he shall receive a fee of $500 for every conviction. Prosecuting attorneys are also authorized to begin prosecutions. The House did nothing except to adopt new rules, one of which requires a two-thirds vote to appeal from the chair. Both houses adjourned until Monday to await Gov. Mount's inaugural.

The lower branch of the Legislature Monday, by unanimous vote, passed a concurrent resolution providing for an investigation of the Vandalia Railroad Company. Speaker Petit appointed as the members of the joint committee for the House Representatives Henderson, Sutton and Babcock. Under the provision of the resolution the investigating committee is to be composed of three Representatives, three Senators and the Attorney General of the State, who will be ex-officio chairman of the committee. It is not the first time an Indiana Legislature has undertaken to inquire into the allegation that the railroad company owes the school fund of the State nearly $1,000,000, but former investigations have been fruitless, because the investigators have been taken to Terre Haute and treated so hospitably by the railway interests that they were satisfied there was no indebtedness. Recently there has been a demand from all parts of the State that the company, which is now in the hands of a receiver, shall make good its obligation to the State. When the road was incorporated in 1847 there was inserted in its charter a provision that a certain per cent of its earnings should be turned over into the school fund. It is charged that this provision has been ignored.

Charles W. Fairbanks was elected United States Senator Tuesday to succeed Daniel W. Voorhees, whose term will expire March 4. It was the first time in sixteen years that the Republicans have been able to elect a Senator, and the occasion was made one of rejoicing. Many representatives of the party from all over the State came in to witness the formality. The two houses voted separately. The vote was as follows: Senate—Fairbanks, 33; Voorhees, 16; Templeton, 1. House—Fairbanks, 52; Voorhees, 42; Templeton, 5.

Senator-elect Fairbanks was present at the joint session of the Legislature Wednesday to acknowledge his election. Outlining his policy in the Senate, Mr. Fairbanks said: "I favor upholding the dignity and honor of the government against all comers at any cost; yet I am opposed to any policy which shall tend to involve us in unnecessary international entanglements and possible war. Our people want peace, for it is the mother of prosperity. One of the hopeful, reassuring incidents of the hour is the progress made toward the institution of a high tribunal of arbitration for the settlement of disputes between the great Anglo-Saxon powers. Such a step is in keeping with the demands of our highest and best interests; it is responsive to the imperative requirements of Christianity. The strongest government can well lead the way. Our isolation is such, our resources are so limitless, the virtue and patriotism of our people are so acknowledged that we have, as Bismarck said of the new German empire, no power to fear except the power of Almighty God. We need no frequent display of our prowess. I believe in commercial conquests—those conquests which shall bring the trophies of peace to the homes of our countrymen of low and high degree." The formal vote on Senator in the joint session resulted: Fairbanks, 85; Voorhees, 58; Templeton (Pop.), 6. After the joint session of the Legislature both houses returned to work. The Senate passed the bill prohibiting the shooting of quails in this State for two years. The bill goes to the House with a penalty of $100 for any one violating the law. The Senate also adopted the report of the Judiciary Committee on the anti-cigaret bill. This prohibits the sale of cigarets to any person under 18 years old, and fixes a license of $200 for retailing cigarets and a license of $50 for wholesalers. Any person under 18 years found smoking cigarets is subject to a fine of $10.

The Forget-Me-Not.

Everybody knows the pretty little forget-me-not, and likes the flower more, perhaps, because of its name than its beauty. How was it so called? The Germans account for it by quite a pathetic romance. It seems that once upon a time a knight and a lady were walking by the bank of the Danube when the latter asked her "gallant gay" to pluck for her a tiny flower which she saw growing in the stream. The knight overbalanced himself and fell into the river, and, owing to the slippery nature of the bank and the weight of his armor, was carried away by the current. As he threw the flower ashore to his lady he cried out with his last breath, "Vergiss mein nicht!" (Forget-me-not.) And ever since the flower has been looked upon as the emblem of fidelity.

The Wood of the Cross.

The people of the different countries have their various traditions concerning the wood of which the cross was made. In England the peasants say that it was of elderwood, and that lightning never strikes that tree. Dean French, in a note to his "Sacred Latin Poetry," declares that it was made of the wood of the aspen, and that since the day of the crucifixion the leaves of that tree have never ceased to shudder.

"SHE DRESSES WELL."

BUT HER CLOTHES OFTEN COVER A LIVING DEATH.

Beauty Is the Shrine of Men's Worship, and Women Vie With Each Other to Make Themselves Attractive.

The remark, "She dresses elegantly," is a very common one in this age of wealth and progress.

Women vie with each other in making themselves attractive, for men admire a stylishly dressed woman.

Good clothes add to the charms of the woman in perfect health, but are ill-befitting those who through ignorance or carelessness have suffered the inroads of female diseases to stamp them as physical wrecks. It is unfortunate, but true, that some physicians allow women to suffer needlessly, because man can only work from theory, and at best only patch up, without removing the cause.

Proof is abundant that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound removes the cause, gives strength to the weakened organs, vigorous health to the system, and therefore beauty to the face and form.

Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., gladly answers, free of charge all letters.

Here is one of the results:

"Three months ago, I wrote you a letter describing my troubles, which were inflammation of the womb and bladder. I had not seen a well day since the birth of my second child, 16 years ago. I had spent hundreds of dollars for doctors and medicines.

"Such pains as I endured. My back ached, my feet and limbs were swollen, and it was almost impossible for me to stand; I could not walk any distance. I received your answer to my letter, and followed closely all your advice, and I have been using Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound for three months. Now I can work all day without pain. I have recommended the Compound to many of my friends, and gladly recommend it to all women in any way afflicted with female troubles."—LYDIA BATE, 227 Spring St., Greensburg, Pa.

START THE GIRL RIGHT.

When the girl comes to be a woman—look out. If she starts out in vigorous, womanly health then it is pretty safe to say she will be a healthy, attractive, beautiful woman.

The beginning of womanhood is the real crisis in a woman's life. Nearly always something is wrong then in the distinctly feminine organs. Maybe it isn't very serious—no matter—the time to stop disease is when it starts.

McELREE'S WINE OF CARDUI

will bring girls safely through the crisis. Taken at the first indication of weakness, it never fails. It regulates the monthly periods with perfect precision. Its action is direct upon the feminine organs that above all others, ought to be strong and well.

Start the girl right. Don't expose her to the dangers and tortures of dragging weakness, bearing down pains, nervous prostration and the debilitating drains so common to women.

McElree's Wine of Cardui, is a home treatment. It does away entirely with abhorrent "local examinations."

"Soft" Drink.

She—What makes your friend's nose so red?

He—The sun.

"Oh, he has been drinking in the sunlight?"—Yonkers Statesman.

Forests.

Gericke, the great German forester, writes that the greatest ages to which trees in Germany are positively known to have lived are from 500 to 570 years. For instance, the pine in Bohemia and the pine in Norway and Sweden have lived to the latter age. Next comes the silver fir, which in the Bohemian forests has stood and thrived for upwards of 400 years. In Bavaria, the larch has reached the age of 275 years. Of foliage trees, the oak appears to have survived the longest. The best example is the evergreen oak at Aschoffenburg, which reached the age of 410 years. Other oaks in Germany have lived to be from 315 to 320 years old. At Aschoffenburg the red beech has lived to the age of 245 years, and at other points to the age of 225 years. Of other trees, the highest known are ash, 170 years; birch, 150 to 200 years; aspen, 220 years; mountain maple, 225 years; elm, 130 years, and red alder, 145 years.

His Last.

One of our builders was asked the other day if a house of his erected was his last. "Yes," he said; "my last, but not leased."—Tit-Bits.

Machine-Made Sport.

The news that an inventive genius in Princeton, N. J., has devised a baseball pitching cannon shows to what length science is advancing. The Princeton man's machine can pitch inshoots or outcurves with mathematical precision, and the rate of speed of the ball can be easily regulated by mechanical devices. It is more effective than the most scientific pitcher and it cannot contract the painful malady technically known as a "glass arm."

Here is an interesting suggestion for the future. If there is to be a machine-made pitcher there should be a mechanical catcher. We may yet hear of first basemen made of steel and iron that will catch any sort of a ball and make "double plays" with scientific correctness. And the innovation need not be limited to baseball. Why not have mechanical football teams made of copper and chilled steel and have the game played out by handling levers and touching buttons? Polo, played by tin men upon light, swift-footed aluminum horses, would be delightfully interesting and unaccompanied by the slightest danger. In time even the lazy golfer may find it possible to loll at ease upon a shady hill and through his field glasses watch the progress of a game played with immense skill and animation by handsome bronze men cast after some sculptor's design.

Evidently we are fast approaching the day when man, the physical being, will be reduced to man, the mere lump of intellect, whose "sports" will consist in sitting still and manipulating queer mechanical devices.—Chicago Record.

The X Ray in Law.

The X ray is becoming of more account than its discoverer knew. It has appeared as a witness in a suit for $20,000 damages for malpractice, and there is a picture in this city that would justify a sufferer in proceeding in a similar way. A young man was shot in the hand and a physician pretended to remove the bullet. Indeed, he produced a bullet and carried it around to prove that he had performed a successful operation. As the old wound was troublesome the sufferer went to a young Brooklyn physician, who said that he put the hand under the Crookes tube and see what was the matter. To this the older surgeon objected, declaring that the X ray was a humbug, that no reputable physicians used it, and that sort of thing; and he nearly persuaded the patient to refuse to lend his hand to the experiment. But the younger physician turned on the light and the shadowgraph was made, showing the bullet just where it had lodged, in a joint of the thumb. The older physician was a quack. A second operation was performed, and this time the bullet really was removed. The same young physician has secured other pictures disclosing outrageous malpractice on the part of "natural bone setters" and other such people, and certain men who are practicing without proper warrant will probably leave the delicate branch of surgery alone, however much they may dose their victims with patent medicines and herb teas.—Brooklyn Eagle.

RAPID PROGRESS.

WHAT CAN BE DONE WITH LITTLE MONEY.

From the News, North Liberty, Ind.

Among the most picturesque scenery in Liberty Township, St. Joseph Co., Ind., along the Potato Creek Valley lives a good-hearted and honest old German, who has seen the sunshine and shadow of sixty-six summers and the blustering of as many winters.

Charley Wiseman was born in Mecklenburg, Germany, in 1830. He lived there on a farm attending horses, cattle and sheep, until he was about 31 years of age, when he left his native State to seek his fortune "in the land of the free and the home of the brave."

He arrived at Michigan City, Ind., where he lived for ten years, thence he came to St. Joseph County, where he has lived ever since, being engaged in farming. He married into the Warner family, marrying the third daughter of a large family, of which Mr. David Wagner, of South Bend, Ind., is a member. Mr. Wiseman has one brother who resides on a farm near Sumptian Prairie. About three years ago, while he was loading manure on his farm, in perfect health, in the afternoon of a certain day, he was suddenly stricken with numb paralysis. In the forenoon of that day he was as hearty and well as ever, eating a hearty meal at mid-day, and after dinner he worked as usual when, without a moment's warning he was stricken down as though he were shot. Helpless and limp he was carried to the house, where he was attended with the best of care. The best of medical attendance was secured and he received their attention for a long time, but he still remained in a totally helpless condition, when in the gloom of despondency appeared a "star of hope," "a God-send to suffering humanity." His friends advised him to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and following the suggestion Mr. Wiseman, after a short trial, improved very rapidly, and on continued use of the pills was restored to such a condition that he has since been able to go about his usual business.

Mr. Wiseman speaks of the pills in highest terms of praise, and well he may, for after trying good medical skill and no improvement, while he was helpless as a newborn babe, the pills restored him in so short a time with very little expense. Sufferers who are in need of these pills can secure them by calling on Hoffman Bros., North Liberty, Ind., one of the most reliable drug firms in Northern Indiana. The pills already have a great sale, and as a beam of hope they come to the relief to all who suffer.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

The Wearing of Clothes.

The dress of the thoroughbred man or woman may or may not betray its cost. Its attraction is that it has an indefinable look of simple and distinguished elegance. Every article of dress looks as though selected by one who "knows how"—by a person who is familiar with the world's products and has chosen the best for her purpose, whether it be tweeds or velvets, "picture hat" or Glengarry. An easy refinement shows itself in leather gloves as well as in those of softer kid, and a thick walking boot indicates taste as thoroughly as a Louis XV. slipper.

To Get Out of the Way

When trouble is coming, is obviously the part of common sense. An obstruction of the bowels is a serious obstacle to health. To get this out of the way is an easy matter with the thorough laxative, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which, although it affords relief, never gripes and convulses like a drastic purgative. Dyspepsia, malarial, kidney and rheumatic ailments and nervousness yield to this genial family medicine.

For more than twelve years I suffered from indigestion and nervous dyspepsia. I suffered intensely during that time, and spent large sums of money in the employment of St. Louis most prominent physicians, but the relief afforded was only temporary. I had begun to give up all thoughts of ever being permanently cured, but now my only regret is that a knowledge of Ripans Tabules came to me so late in life."

A Statement.

The Other Side of the Coffinberry Question.

As already often stated, the COURIER desires only to give news and not to take sides in the controvresey that the courts alone can settle, so we give the following statement sent from here to the Fort Wayne Journal and published in that paper in its issue of Tuesday, Jan. 19th. The Journal says:

"When the sudden and tragic death of H. N. Coffinberry, of Garrett, became generally public in Fort Wayne yesterday there was much criticism by a good many of what was regarded by them as undue severity upon the part of W. L. Penfield, of DeKalb circuit court, in his earlier proceedings against Mr. Coffinberry. The Journal telegraphed the fact of this criticism to Judge Penfield last night and asked him to make a statement, if he cared to do so, in the columns of the Journal, setting forth the justification for the severity alleged. Judge Penfield does not himself reply, but the following dispatch explains itself and will be read with interest:

CASE AGAINST COFFINBERRY.

AUBURN, IND., Jan. 19.—Editor of the Fort Wayne Journal: Your telegram requesting the Judge of this court to give reasons for his severity in the Coffinberry case, has been turned over to the prosector's office for answer. The indisputable facts are such as to leave no reasons for any explanation except a reference to his oath of office. As special attorney for the state in these matters, it may not be imprpoer for me to say that Mr. Coffinberry was made the subject of no severity except as it is always severe to prosecute crime. It has not been believed by the attorneys for the state that a powerful criminal whose depredations are extensive, far-reaching and involved large sums of money, is entitled to any other measure of justice than the hungry laborer who takes an article of trifling value to meet his immediate needs.

Every step taken in the Coffinberry case has been taken in strict accordance with law, and in the interests of public justice, without malice and with no undue severity.

Four or five warrnts, based upon indictments duly returned by the grand jury, charging larceny, embezzlement, and forgery, went into the hands of the sheriff Friday afternoon and, notwithstanding that Mr. Coffinberry was at Auburn Friday evening, they were not served until Monday morning, and the sheriff took with him when he served them, are putable and competent physician for the sole purpose of taking such action only as the condition of the defendant and the reasonable requirements of humanity justified.

The state has a large number of county orders forged by Mr. Coffinberry. The defalcation of Treasurer Fair was traced to Mr. Coffinberry. He carried, as we are informed, over $10,000 of life insurance, principally taken within the last two years. The condition of the county finances in DeKalb county has compelled a thorough-going investigation, and that investigation will be conducted upon the principle of allowing no guilty man to escape. The condition is to be deplored and the sad circumstances connected with Mr. Coffinberry's death are regretted by us all. But the responsibility for them must not be made to rest upon any person other than those who have deliberately violated the law and robbed the public.

FRANK S. ROBY,
Special Attorney for the State.

50 lbs. of Coal

A day would keep your rooms warm in winter. But that small stove will burn only twenty-five. Hence, discomfort and misery.

A certain amount of fat, burned daily, would keep your body warm and healthy. But your digestion is bad, and you don't get it from ordinary fat-food. Hence you are chilly, you catch cold easily, you have coughs and shivers; while pneumonia, bronchitis, or consumption finds you with no resistive power.

Do this. Burn better fuel. Use SCOTT'S EMULSION of Cod-liver Oil. Appetite and digestive power will revive; and soon a warm coating of good flesh will protect the vital organs against the cold and the body against disease.

The Funeral.

Thursday's Daily.

We had not time yesterday to make any note of the Coffinberry funeral. A special train was sent from Garrett to meet the Wabash train at the Junction, but the most of the people went over with teams. The attendance was very large, and the sermon by Rev. Mr. Little of Wabash an old friend of the family was very eloquent and able. He had officiated at the wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Coffinberry and had preached on other occasions of family bereavements. He alluded in sensible yet delicate terms to the unfortunate circumstances that had gathered about the deceased and about which he said he had nothing to say. He then addressed his remarks to the surviving members of the family and to his audience in general. We hear many words of praise for him. The services under the masonic orders were conducted by the Kendallville commandery assisted by the brethern from Auburn, Fort Wayne and other places. There were no Knights present from his old Commandery at Constantine, but their ritual was followed out in full, in reference to their wishes. The interment was at the Union Cemetery 2½ miles north-west of the town.

Hurt

Thursday's Daily.

Charles Reesh came near being seriously hurt this morning. He was unloading a wardrobe at G. H. Yesbera's and had got Frank Rush to help him. Frank was at the forward end and Charles was just letting the last end off the dray when it slipped and fell, and a cross piece of the boxing strrck Mr. Reesch on the head and knocked him to the ground. Mr. Rush being in front did not at first know what had happened, but Mr. Reesch soon got up and they got the wardrobe onto the porch. Toward noon Mr. Reesch had to quit work and go home. It came near being a serious thing.

The Hen

The Kendallville Sun say that the Indiana hen, according to Purdue reports, is maintaining an important industry, and it is quite natural that she could cackle with satisfaction over her success. She does not belong to a union, never strikes, does not ask for a raise in pay, but keeps right on producing 30,000,000 eggs per year. At an average of twelve cents a dozen the sum reaches the comfortable amount of $300,000 every twelve months.

NEW FACTORY.

The Greenler Co., Manufacturers of Hoops, Staves and Heading,

Will Locate In Auburn,

In The Old Trentman Building—A Big Boom for Auburn.

We have just been reliably informed that Mr. J. S. Greenler a widely known lumber man of near Defiance, O., has concluded to establish a Hoop, Stave and Heading factory at Auburn. He he has secured the Trentman factory south of the Wabash Railroad.

The company will be known as, "The Greenler Co.," incorporated, and will consist of Mr. Greenler and some of our citizens who have interested themselves with him.

Mr. Greenler has been in the hoop business at Defiance for about 20 years and is well known as a successful business man and has been induced to locate here on account of the immense amount of elm timber near here.

The new factory will empoy from 30 to 40 men in the mill besides teamsters, timber cutters, etc., and when this is considered together with the fact that all of the money paid for material will stay here at home, we can realize what a very great benefit the concern will be to Auburn.

Mr. Greenler will bring several men with him to start the business, but will employ, principally, hands here at home. The factory will require about 100,000 feet of lumber every week or 5,000,000 ft. per year.

They expect to get timber in all directions to a distance of 15 miles and this will draw a great deal of new trade to our town. It will be the means of paying out about $1,000 weekly among our people. The COURIER rejoices to note this addition of Auburn's many industries. It will add that much to our lines of business, cropping out from this as a central point, and giving employment and money into the hands of the people including workingmen, farmers, business men, and last but not least, we hope a good profit to the enterprisng owners.

Another Death

The Silver Dawn.

Mrs. Sarah C. Sloan Winslow passed away at her home in Waterloo, Ind., Wednesday evening, Jan. 20th, 1897, after an illness of several weeks. She was born at Sandusky, O., July 25, 1824

Mrs. Winslow was the widow of the late Dr. J. U. Winslow to whom she was married Feb. 11th, 1847. Two childeren were born to them but both died in infancy. Dr. Winslow died suddenly Sept. 3d. 1887.

Mrs. Winslow was one of the earliest settlers of this town, having come here with her husband in 1859 and has resided here since that time. She was a lady of fine education and attainments, always prominent in good works in the society of this community. She was beloved by all and will be mourned for by a large circle of friends who will miss her kindly ways and ever ready help in everything that pertained to good of this place or its advancement. She was one of the charter members of the Minerva club—the literary society of Waterloo—and a member of the Episcopal church.

The funeral took place Friday at the residence of the deceased at 11 a. m., Revs. Erlougher and Yager officiating.

The COURIER family, who have been intimately acquainted with Mrs. Winslow for 28 years, and cheerfully bear testimony to her worth as stated in above obituary notice. She was a woman of more than ordinary intelligence and of most amiable social qualities. It is with heart-felt sorrow we learn of her death.

"Why, little one!" exclaimed the teacher in astonishment, "is that the way the creek runs?" A smile illumined the little face and the student timidly replied, "Oh, I can't draw a wiggly creek."

Not a few who read what Mr. Robert Rowls, of Hollands, Va. has to say below, will remember their own experience under like circumstances: "Last winter I had lagrippe which left me in a low state of health. I tried numerous remedies, none of which did me any good, until I was induced to try a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. The first bottle of it so far relieved me that I was enabled to attend to my work, and the second bottle effected a cure." For sale at 25 and 50 cents a bottle by F. E. Davenport the Druggist.

Not Here Yet

The Dispatch reluctantly admits that "times have not improved in DeKalb county" since McKinley's election, but "says the advance agent of prosperity will resume business at the old stand March 4." Thanks. We will try and have patience to wait five weeks more. Then if it don't come, we should feel at liberty to say so.

It appears that the Chicago and Eastern Illinois Ry. Co., owes Indiana, $25,000 that being the fee of 1 per cent on their capitol of 25 millions. They refused to file their articles of association with our secretary of state, but went on and continued in business without it. And effort will be made to collect this money. It is also believed that the Vandalia road owes the state a large sum. When they were incorporated, many years ago, they agreed to pay to the state 1 per cent of their earnings. This they have never done, and the legislature is trying to have the matter brought up and a collection made if possible. A million or so would be a handy sum to have at Indianapolis at present.

CASH! WHY? CASH!

We have discovered that we can save our customers money by doing away with our books entirely. Everybody Aants to buy CHEAP and we know we can sell you enough CHEAPER to more than offset the inconvenience (if it is an inconvenience.) We desire to state briefly why we are changing to a STRICTLY CASH BASIS on HARDWARE and cash or notes for farm machinery, wagons and buggies.

1st. Nearly all the other stores in Auburn are doing a cash business and we have to carry more accounts than we can offord to do, at the prices we have been getting.

2d. It takes an extra man to keep books and we proposeto do with one less man and cut the profit that much, thereby SAVING YOU MONEY.

3d. In a busy day we quite frequently forget to charge as afterwards we find out when men come to pay for goods and we have nothing charged to them.

4th. Some few people when they owe an account and have not enough money to pay it and buy the articles they need in our line will go some place else and buy and pay them the cash and still owe us on account.

5th. A few accounts get mixed as for instance J. Jones buys something and it is charged, and when we start out make our colleftions, we wonder whether it is John, Joseph Jacob or Jonathan Jones. We try all of them, get CURSED by most of them, and paid by none of them, sometimes.

6th. We meet all competition in price and now we propose to beat all competition by buying for cash and selling for cash.

7th. We are going to sell at such close margins that we will get the hardware trade because prices will tell.

Come and see us when you want anything in our line and we will explain our system more fully to you.

Very Respectfully Yours,

BROWN, CULBERTSON & BOLAND.

IT WAS GRAND

ABOUT FORTY COUPLES WERE IN ATTENDANCE AT THE MASQUERADE LAST NIGHT.

Many Spectators Present And Some Utterly Surprised When Masks Were Removed.

THE masquerade ball given last night by the young ladies, was a grand success. It is an indisputable fact that ladies of Auburn have no superior when it comes to making a success of a ball or entertainment of any kind. It is not often that the COURIER gets a chance to catch so many snap shots as, on this occasion.

ALL had previously received a postal card invitation to attend a Masquerade Ball, and therefore everybody came with the most horrible looking face that they could procure. The Mexican man, the red man, the Chinaman, the colored man and last the laziest man, Weary Waggles, were all represented.

AT about 8:35 the couples began to form on the floor for the grand march which was led by Frank Rose and Mrs. D. A. Garwood, (so we discovered after masks were removed). There were in about thirty-five couples who participated in the grand march. Mr. Al. Beeler, of Garrett, was floor manager and caller and a better man for the position could not have been chosen.

CONCERNING the music we can only add that it was furnished by the Auburn Mandolin and Guitar Club. Everybody seemed to dance readily and we judge that the music suited the occasion. The club is composed of Messrs. Milo Calkins, Cliff Caldwell, Will Franks, Chas. Prickett, Harry DeWitt, and Mesdames, Frank Dills and Alt Moody and Miss Ettie Prickett.

SOON after the grand march a waltz was announced and then the gay couples moved with ease and gracefulness to the strains of music and so on the remainder of the evening till after midnight was past. And then followed other dances, some we cannot name. They may have been what the poet, Burns speaks of as "Threesome reels and foursome reels strathspeys, etc." But they were all enjoyable to participants and spectators.

ABOUT the costumes and masks there could much be said as there was a large variety. Many of the most ridiculous faces and costume were beyond any description. But few of the many visitors recognized any of the people before they were unmasked. Two heavy weights, though, could not disguise themselves sufficiently and everybody said that's

JAKE RAUT AND FRED BATES.

Of the ladies' costumes there were also many odd makeups. Some wore suits of gingham entire, including sun bonnets, and the following illustration will give the reader an idea how they looked.

Among the guests from out of town we noticed were Miss Della Barger, Sam Cutchall and Carl Rexrath of Montpelier, O., Mr. Hokcett, of Reading, Mich., Mr. Warner, of Oswego, N. Y., Misses Maude Watson and Dot Gibson, of Angola, Mrs. Lee, Misses Grace Cribbs and Mary Paul, and Wilber Colgrove, Ben. Satterfield, Mr. Spencer and Howard Satterfield, of Garrett, and Clarence Swan, of Ft. Wayne.

BATHING IN JANUARY

This is a great country of ours Alaska has little or no summer; Texas, Florida, etc, have little or no winter. At the same hour, a resident of the United States may be enjoying a palm leaf hat and summer clothing. We were led into this philosopical view by a letter received to-day, January 29, from John Pepple, at Hillsboro, Texas. After speaking of their good health, he adds:

Sam and Rose are living in Houston, down near the Gulf. We were all down to Galveston awhile ago, and all four went bathing, in the Gulf. We had a great time ducking each other."

With the best of sleighing in northern Indiana, with ice a foot thick, the mercury down to 20 below, and in some shape below zero for a week or so, it is only our great faith in Sam, John, and their better halves that prevents the above from sounding like a fairy tale.

Free Pills.

Send your address to H. E Bucklen & Co., Chicago, and get a free sample of Dr. King's New Life pills. A trial will convince you of their merits. These pills are easy in action and are particularly effective in the cure of consumption and sick headache. For Malaria and liver troubles they have been proved invaluable. They are guaranted to be perfectly free from every deleterious substance and to be purely vegetable. They do not weaken by their action, but by giving tone to stomach and bowels greatly invigorate the system. Regular size 25c per box. Sold at Robbins & McCord's drug store.

COURT

Hon. W. M. Brown came down from Angola yesterday, to hear argument in the Penland case. There was also an attempt to have the case between Surveyor VanAuken for possession of office effects brought up. But Mr. Roby, one of the attorneys, telephoned from Angola that he could not come, and asked that the case be set down for the first week in March. This was done after Judge McClellan, for Van Auken, and John W. Baxter for Krontz, had each made a statement of the case to the judge. The Penland case was finished and the judge was reading his decision when it came train time and he handed the papers over to the attorneys, so as to catch the train home. To-day, Saturday, we learn that the verdict was that he pay his wife $250.

The matter of bondsmen for Chapmen, the trustee of Newville, came up to-day also. Mr. Platter went off the bond and B. L. Blair took his place. No other change was made. Mr. Brown of Angola was acting as Judge.

MRS. COFFINBERRY

Received $5,000 Insurance on the Death of Her Husband.

Mr. C. B. Fitch general agent of the National Life Insurance Co., and Mr. H. D. Weaver agent for this vicinity, were at Garrett yesterday and delivered Mrs. Coffinberry five thousand dollars ($5,000)the amount of an insurance policy carried by Mr. Coffinberry in the National. Mr. Coffinberry died Jan. 18, and was buried on the 20th, and on the 29th the insurance was paid. The National is the first of several companies to pay, and much credit is due to the hustling agents in preparing proof of death for prompt payment.

The Vandalia

Both Houses of the Legislature have passed a bill, asking the Vandalia road to report all its yearly earnings. It seems that it was first, the "Terre Haute & Richmond" though since then, 1847, it has taken in other lines, and is itself now leased by the Pennsylvania system. Its charter, granted in 1847, says that after paying 15 per cent on its stock, all earnings above that shall go into the state school fund. It is believed by many, that some money can be recovered for the use of the schools.

FROM ARIZONA.

Mrs. Cochran, now at Tucson, Arizona, has paid his subscription up almost to the next century, it is up in January, 1899—pretty close to 1900. We hope we may live long enough to get even with Dave. Our people will remember our item as to the failing health of their daughter, Mary. It seemed to be some lung complaint, and failing to get relief for her, Mr. and Mrs. Cochran, left their home at Ontario, Calif., and took up their residence at Tucson, Arizona, which has a peculiar climate, which is believed to be very favorable to patients so afflicted. It will give our people a better idea to quote a part of Mr. Cochran's letter. He says:

This is a queer old town to live in, and full of quaint buildings and is said by travelers to look much like Jerusalem, at least it reminds me of pictures I have seen of the Holy Land. The houses are nearly all adobe and but one story, the walls are about two feet thick, and some of the oldest houses have only the dirt floors. The climate here is all that could be desired for lung trouble, and Mary is improving faster than we had any hope to expect. She has gained two pounds every week since we have been here and is gaining in strength. There is no dampness here and the altitude is 2,400 feet, so it is the ideal climate for invalids. We expect to remain here for two years with Mary, and hope by that time to see her restored to health.

The population of the place is about 7,000, and abour half are Mexicans and Indians. So, you see, we are living among strange people. Mary and I pass many hours watching their queer ways. They are born to steal, so everything must be kept under lock and key. The houses are all set up to the sidewalk and have high adobe walls at the back of them.

A True Remedy

W. M. Repine, editor Tiskilwa, Ill., "Chief," says: "We wont keep house without Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. Experimented with many others, but never got the true remedy until we used Dr. King's New Discovery. No other remedy can take its place in our home, as in it we have a certain and sure cure for Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, etc." It is idle to experiment with other remedies, even if they are urged on you for just as good as Dr. King's new Discovery. They are not as good, because this remedy has a record for cures; besides is guaranteed. It never fails to satisfy. Trial bottles free at Robbins & McCord's Drug Store.

Horrible! Horrible!

Innocent children by the thousand are constantly dying of diarrhoea whose lives might be saved. How quickly the common works! Flesh speedily wastes away as though subjected to fire. You try change of water, and change of food and change of air. The handiest and quickest and safest thing you can do is to procure at once a bottle of Dr. Hand's Diarrhoea Mixture, at any drug store for 25c. It's wonderful how quickly it brings good results. DOINGS OF THE DAY.

SUMMARY OF THE NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Eventful Happenings in Every Hemisphere—Fires, Accidents, Crimes, Politics, Religion, and Commerce, Sandwiched with Minor Affairs.

GLOVE CONTESTS.

The Law Permitting Them in Nevada Signed by the Governor.

Carson (Nev.) special: Gov. Sadler has signed the bill recently passed by the Nevada State Legislature licensing glove contests.

In an interview the Governor said: "While the bill was in the hands of the Senate and Assembly I refrained from making any comment on the matter. Now that it has passed both houses by a handsome majority I consider it my duty to sign it. It is evident that the citizens of Nevada desire that the measure shall become a law, and there is no valid reason why it should not receive my sanction."

"Will you protect persons who promote fistic encounters in Nevada, should they comply with the law?"

"Yes, they will receive whatever official protection it is in my power to grant."

STEAMER SUNK.

The Engineer Is Drowned and the Rest of the Crew Have Narrow Escapes.

The little steamer Peankishaw, while endeavoring to reach Alice Harbor, in Green River, was sunk by the heavy ice, about six miles above Evansville, Ind. The boat had a barge in tow and the twelve men escaped to it and floated by that city, their cries for help attracting quite a crowd to the levee. The barge was finally landed in the bend of the river below the city and the men escaped to land, half frozen by their terrible experience. William Orr, the engineer of the boat, was drowned. The Peankishaw was owned by Sever Bros., and was run in the Evansville and Hartford trade. The loss will be about $2,000.

Mine Accident.

Edward Balson was instantly killed and ten men were injured, probably fatally, at the Gobiga mine, near Flemmington, W. Va. The mine's mouth is 300 feet above the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad tracks, and the coal is sent down on an incline railway, the gravity of the loaded cars hauling up the empty ones on another track. Thirteen miners were going up in two cars when a loaded car broke loose, jumped the track and crashed into the up-bound train. Balson was in the front car and was crushed to death.

War's Youngest Soldier.

Dr. Abner C. Jones, one of the best-known physicians of Muncie, Ind., died of acute Bright's disease Friday. Dr. Jones laid claim to being the youngest man who served through the late Civil War and was an ex-Commander of Williams Post, G. A. R. At the last G. A. R. State encampment he was a prominent candidate for Commander. He leaves a wife and one daughter, Miss Josie, a violinist.

Horrible Tragedy.

Joseph Boxell, a merchant of Dundee, seven miles north of Hartford City, Ind., shot Ora Brotherton, daughter of the oldest merchant in the village, in the temple, the bullet passing out of the back of her head. Boxell then shot himself in the head, dying instantly. Boxell was 25 years old and his victim 16. The two had been lovers, but Miss Brotherton had discarded Boxell by request of her parents.

A Misplaced Switch.

As a result of a misplaced switch, a switch engine, drawing a train of empty cars, collided with a loaded passenger train on the Brooklyn elevated railway and six persons were injured, two perhaps fatally. The engine and forward car of the loaded train toppled over into the street, twenty feet below. There were but four passengers in the derailed car, three of whom were injured.

Stabbed to the Heart.

John Wingo gave a dance near Greenup, Ky., the other night. While the ball was in progress he and Thomas Bradley quarreled over who should dance the next set with Sally Ann Pennington, one of the prettiest girls present. Bradley whipped out a big knife and stabbed Wingo to the heart, killing him almost instantly. He escaped.

Surgeon General Dead.

Surgeon General McPhartlin, United States army, retired, is dead at Annapolis, Md., at an advanced age. During the late war he was Surgeon General of the Army of the Potomac. He leaves four daughters, one of whom resides in Peru.

To Succeed Weyler.

A dispatch from Madrid says that Lieut. Gen. Azcarraga, the Spanish Minister of War, will, according to report, soon be appointed Governor General of Cuba to succeed Gen. Weyler, who, however, will retain command of the military forces.

Secret Societies Shorn of Power.

The Supreme Court of Indiana has reversed the judgment obtained by the Grand Lodge of Knights of Pythias against Koerner Lodge No. 6 of Indianapolis, depriving it of its property, because it adopted a resolution to secede from the Knights of Pythias and form a lodge, the Indiana Zeitungbund.

Plague in Formosa.

The officials of the Japanese Legation at St. Petersburg confirm the report that the plague has broken out on the island of Formosa.

Town Burning Up.

A private dispatch to the Burlington railroad headquarters at Lincoln, Neb., says the town of Pacific Junction, five miles from Plattsmouth, on the Iowa side of the river, is burning up. Most of the business district has already been destroyed. Plattsmouth was asked for assistance. Particulars are meagre.

Nevada Senatorship.

John P. Jones was re-elected as United States Senator by the Nevada Legislature, both Houses voting separately. In the Senate the vote was: Jones, 12; McMillan, (Rep.,) 2; Fitzgerald, 1. The vote in the Assembly stood: Jones, 23; McMillan, 2.

FIGHT IN CARSON.

Here Is Where Corbett and Fitzsimmons Will Meet.

It is almost a foregone conclusion that the Corbett-Fitzsimmons fight will take place in Nevada, and it is about equally as certain that the ring will be pitched in Carson. Everything points to the verification of this dual prophecy. No opposition to the bill legalizing glove contests was manifested in the Upper House and the vast array of Nevadans who are favorable to the measure voice the opinion that it will go through without a struggle. A number of Carson clergymen will lend their moral support to the opponents of the scheme, but the friends of the bill are not worried over the outlook. They claim that public sentiment is too strong to be combatted, and that a vote in Carson alone would develop the fact that 90 per cent. of the people want the championship of the world to be decided in that section of the country.

Nitroglycerine Explosion.

A terrible nitroglycerine explosion occurred at Cygnet, O., in which two persons were instantly killed and two others injured. The dead are:

W. J. Morrison, Lima, O., field superintendent for the Ohio and Indiana Torpedo Company.

Edward Dennison, Rising Sun, O., an oil shooter.

A man named Henning, who was 400 feet away from the explosion, was badly cut on the head by flying debris.

It is supposed the two men now dead were transferring the deadly glycerine from the magazine when it exploded. Both were blown to atoms. The shock was so severe that every pane of glass in the town was broken, and doors were blown off their hinges. The explosion was heard several miles away.

Burglar Surrenders.

John Stewart, poorly clad, and nearly dead from cold and hunger, entered the Central District Police Station at St. Louis, Mo. He wanted to be locked up. He said he was wanted in Murphysboro, Ill., for burglary. Stewart was so weak he could hardly talk. He said he had had nothing to eat for several days, and had no place to sleep. He preferred going to the penitentiary to dodging the officers and dying from starvation and cold.

Firemen Injured.

Seven firemen and two spectators were badly hurt at a fire which destroyed the Williams Block at 196, 189, 200, 202 Monroe street, Chicago. The fire originated in the basement of the building and spread with great rapidity. After a hard fight the firemen managed to confine the fire to the walls of the Williams Block, but they were unable to save anything in it. The total damage to the building and contents is estimated at $386,000.

Firemen Frozen.

Fire partially destroyed the boys' dormitory of the Christian Home Orphanage at Council Bluffs, Iowa. One hundred boys were sleeping in the building when the fire broke out. All were rescued. The firemen had a terrible combat with the cold. Chief Templeton is badly frozen and Captain Auley and Driver Jones are also laid off by reason of frosting their extremities while attending the fire.

Many Men thrown Out of Work.

Six hundred men were thrown out of work at the Bay View works of the Illinois Steel company, Milwaukee, Wis., by the closing down of the top and bottom mill, the fish-plate mill and the old and new plate mill. No reason is given by the officers of the company for the closing down of the mills and all inquiries in regard to the matter are referred to the Chicago offices of the company.

Blown to Atoms.

A gas explosion occurred in a mine owned by the Shields, Laird & Hurst Coal Company, at Smock Station, Pa., on the Redstone branch of the Pittsburgh, Virginia and Charleston Railroad. Two men were blown to atoms, and seven perhaps fatally injured, and two less seriously. The dead are: Charles McQuister and Peter Hauser.

Ridpath to Edit Arena.

Dr. John Clark Ridpath, the eminent historian of Greencastle, Ind., and late candidate for Congress on the Democratic and Populist ticket, has accepted the position of editor-in-chief of the Arena Magazine of Boston. He will assume his position in that city in a few days.

Two Children Burned.

Fire destroyed one of the Island Coal Company's houses at Linton, Ind., together with everything belonging to the family. Two children, aged respectively 1 and 3 years, who had been left alone in the house by the mother, were burned to death.

Dubois Knocked Out.

Henry Heitfelt, Populist, was elected United States Senator by the Idaho Legislature to succeed Dubois. Heitfelt is 40 years old, a farmer, and represents Nez Perces County in the Senate.

Child Scalded to Death.

A little daughter of John Sandlin, of Crockettsville, Breathitt County, Ky., was scalded to death by falling into a barrel of hot water.

Senator Walcott in Paris.

Senator Walcott of Colorado, who is visiting Europe in the interest of bimetalism, has left London for Paris.

ON FOURTH OF MARCH

M'KINLEY'S INAUGURATION TO SURPASS ALL OTHERS.

The Inaugural Ceremonies to Blaze with Splendor—In the Grand Parade There Will Be 60,000 Men, Including Ex-Confederates, Under Gen. Porter.

The Inauguration.

Washington correspondence:

THE inauguration of President McKinley will be the most elaborate and splendid affair of its kind ever witnessed. Money and effort are not lacking in the preparations now under way and in all the ceremonies, in the street pageant and at the hall there will be evident a finer sense of the artistic and a more intelligent regard for the comfort of the participants than has characterized the lavishly conceived and often crudely and uncomfortably executed inaugural ceremonies of the past. The executive committee in charge of the inaugural ceremonies of 1897 is composed of men who thoroughly grasp the difficulties of the situation that confronts them and who are endeavoring to cope with them in a manner that will make the inauguration of Mr. McKinley the grandest and at the same time the most perfect from the standpoint of good sense and good taste that has ever been witnessed in this country. At the head of this committee is Charles J. Bell.

Gen. Horace Porter, of New York, will be the grand marshal of the parade. He is perhaps the most successful organizer of military parades in the country, the latest example of his genius in this direction being his management of the great sound money parade in New York. On this occasion he succeeded in marching 125,000 men over the entire route, according to arrangements, the rear files reaching the end of the route only seven minutes behind schedule time. Gen. Porter has the able assistance of Col. Corbin, who had general charge of the ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of President Garfield and was adjutant general of the last two inaugural parades.

At Gen. Porter's suggestion it has been decided to condense the exercises at the capitol as much as possible, and the parade will start at once on the conclusion of the inauguration ceremony proper, and will proceed immediately to the end of the route, the usual interruption to allow the outgoing and incoming Presidents to lunch together being avoided. The parade will be dismissed this year at Washington circle, instead of the White House, as formerly, and Gen. Porter expects that the procession will be able to pass at the rate of 12,000 an hour. Twenty-four files of foot will march in close column, and there will be no change in formation en route.

Sixty Thousand Men in Line.

The first division of the procession will be divided into three brigades, the first to be composed of regular United States troops and the National Guard of the District of Columbia, the second of the National Guard of Pennsylvania and the third of the National Guards of other States, headed by their Governors and their staffs, their places in the line being assigned according to the date of their adoption of the constitution in the case of the thirteen original States, and with reference to their admission to the Union. The second grand division will be composed of civic organizations in the order of their establishment. It will be divided into two sub-sections, the first comprising uniformed clubs, the second ununiformed organizations. While it is proposed that the parade shall be of sufficient length and of a character that shall adequately represent all classes of Americans, military, naval and civilian, the committee on the parade are exercising the greatest discrimination in its composition. They have set a general limit of 60,000 men as the total number and believe that they will be able to bring them past a given point in five hours.

A feature will be 200 cavalrymen and 2,000 foot soldiers from Virginia who will march as ex-Confederates. The horsemen, each furnishing his own Virginia horse, will be attired in a uniform combining the blue and the gray. Those who parade on foot will wear long gray mackintoshes lined with blue, and all will wear the old type of gray slouch hat identified with the adherents of the Southern Confederacy, and badges containing portraits of McKinley and Hobart, pendent from blue and gray silk ribbons, with an American flag at the top holding the pin of the badge. The blue and gray ribbon bears the motto, "There shall be no North, no South, no East, no West, but a common country.—Washington."

A novel feature of the decorations will be arches on Pennsylvania avenue, one at the intersection of each street, representing all of the States and the Governors of the States will be asked to decorate and illuminate these.

The inaugural ball will be held at the Pension Office. The President and Mrs. McKinley will occupy the three rooms of the Commissioner of Pensions, on the second floor, and the Vice-President and the diplomatic corps adjoining apartments. The supper rooms will occupy the entire north side of the building. The arrangements for the reception and enjoyment of everyone who attends will be perfect. The dressing rooms will be provided with every necessity of the toilet, and 12,000 hat and cloak boxes will be in charge of a sufficient number of employes of the city postoffice. Seven thousand four hundred and thirty-five tickets were sold to the last inauguration ball, each ticket being represented by a guest. In addition to this immense gathering there were probably 1,500 attendants who were not included in the number of ticket buyers. This great host was handled without crushing or crowding of any serious character. The coming ball will equal the other in numbers and surpass it in brilliancy.

FOR WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

National Convention in Annual Session at Des Moines.

For the first time the annual convention of woman suffragists met in a Western city, Des Moines, Ia., Tuesday.

Susan B. Anthony, Rev. Anna H. Shaw, Rachel Foster Avery, Alice Stone Blackwell, Mary Smith Hayward of Nebraska, Mrs. Mell C. Woods of Idaho, Mary Kennedy Brown of Chicago, Elizabeth Burrill Curtis, Dr. Cora Smith Eaton of Minneapolis, Mrs. J. N. Perkins of New Mexico, M. Louise Hayworth of Decatur, Ill., Miss Laura Clay of Kentucky and other well-known workers in the cause were present.

Rachel Foster Avery, corresponding secretary, declared in her report that she had received over 2,000 articles, published during the last year in nearly seven hundred papers, read by more than one million people in forty-nine States. The national headquarters at Philadelphia did good work during last year. The expense was $1,300. She recommended the removal of the headquarters to New York, to co-operate with the national organization committee.

Susan B. Anthony's address was devoted largely to a statement of the work in California, which she regarded as very satisfactory. She said that the defeat in California is simply victory deferred, for the Legislature is sure to resubmit the amendment, and the women will be victorious in November, 1898. Nevada, Oregon, Washington and Montana are also likely to have a suffrage campaign, and the prospects for success are good. She urged a more thorough local organization for the education of voters.

Laura Clay of Kentucky spoke for that State, telling of satisfactory progress in the recognition of women upon State boards, and in the social legislation asked for by the women, with the prospects much better.

A report from Mrs. Annie L. Diggs of Kansas on "Campaign Conditions" turned out to be one of the sensations of the session. It was mostly devoted to scoring political parties. The convention emphasized its non-partisan policy by refusing to accept the report.

Mr. Henry B. Blackwell, in remembrance of his wife, the late Lucy Stone, submitted a report on presidential suffrage, declaring that not much progress had been made during the last year because of the exciting election. He advised all State associations to begin working with their respective Legislatures for the right of women to vote in presidential elections.

Mrs. Upton gave her report as treasurer, showing the association out of debt and with good prospects.

Mrs. Colby of Nebraska, reported a plan of work for committees, recommending standing committees, as follows: Congressional, Legislation, Platform, Organization, Press, and Plan of Work. It was recommended that work should be pushed in California, Oregon, Washington, Montana and Iowa, and that it should be held back in other States.

A majority of the committee favored dropping the national bulletin in the interest of the suffrage papers. In the afternoon of Wednesday the convention resolved itself into a memorial session for Harriet Beecher Stowe of Connecticut, Mary Grew of Pennsylvania, Sarah Freeman Clark of Georgia, Hannah Tracy Cutler of Mississippi, Sarah B. Cooper of California, Dr. Caroline B. Winslow of District of Columbia, Dr. Hiram Corson of Pennsylvania and Judge Merrick of Louisiana.

In the evening there was a reception tendered the delegates by the Des Moines women's clubs. But the main event was the formal welcome. The large audience room was packed from top to bottom and an overflow meeting was similarly attended. The first address of welcome was made by Gov. Drake. The response was by Miss Anthony. She met with a reception which almost overcame her. Following Miss Anthony, Mrs. Charlotte Perkins Stetson of California made an address on "Duty and Honor." Miss Anthony also addressed the overflow meeting.

REWARDS FOR KILLING.

Trainmen and Messengers Promised $1,000 for a Dead Robber.

Railroad and express managers have sent out their annual letter to trainmen and express messengers, in which cash rewards are offered for effective work in thwarting the attempts of bandits to rob trains and express cars. These letters carry out the idea of ex-Gov. Stone of Missouri, who, in his last message to the Legislature of his State, made the oft-repeated hold-ups at Blue Cut and elsewhere the subject of considerable space, and practically said that the death penalty should be meted out to this class of desperadoes. The trainmen and guards on the American Express trains have received letters, in which they are not only told to shoot to kill persons caught in the act of train robbery, but are offered a reward of $500 for "wounding" and $1,000 for killing a train robber. These offers are kept standing through the year.

In Michigan, where the death penalty is not lawful, and where a train robber need have little fear if he kills any one in the commission of his crime, the messengers and guards are armed to the teeth, and do not lack for instructions as to what to do in the case of a hold-up.

A THOUSAND A DAY

Is the Rate at Which Immigrants Are Coming Into This Country.

Present immigration to the United States amounts to nearly 1,000 a day. In the last fiscal year the total number of immigrants was 343,000 and the rate at which immigration is increasing makes likely a total for this fiscal year of about 365,000, or 1,000 a day, though, of course, immigration is larger in summer than in winter, and varies according to the conditions of the times and climate.

The general impression is that the great bulk of immigrants to the United States find homes "in the great West," notably those from England, Wales, Germany and the Scandinavian countries. The contrary is shown, however, by recent figures to be the case.

The States into which immigrants go by preference are those on the Atlantic seaboard. Of 343,000 immigrants who landed in this country during the last fiscal year covered by the treasury report 27,000 meant to remain in New York State. Some 61,000 others had Pennsylvania for their destination, and 36,000 Massachusetts; so that these three States absorbed about two-thirds of the whole immigration to the United States. Minnesota, long a favorite home among the Scandinavian and German farmers arriving in the United States, got less than half as many as went to Connecticut. For North Dakota the number of immigrants was only 1,080; for South Dakota, 613; for Nebraska, 1,043; for Kansas, 690; for Montana, 920; for Wyoming, 226; for Utah, 206, and for Idaho, 118.

On the other hand, nearly 3,500 immigrants found homes in Maryland, a State which has not been in previous years regarded as offering many inducements to immigrants. Indiana got 1,944 immigrants, and Missouri 2,485. Kentucky attracted only 330, and North Carolina only 87 immigrants. West Virginia absorbed 437, but the number that found homes in Florida was surprisingly large, 7,150. The explanation of this increase is to be found in the fact that consequent upon the hostilities in Cuba, there was an immigration of more than 6,000 Cubans from that country to the United States last year and a large number of them found homes in Florida. A considerable number of Cubans, too, went to Louisiana, the foreign immigration into which was 1,516. The immigration into Mississippi was 85.

Among the States of the West into which there was a considerable movement of foreigners last year was Illinois, which got 22,000. Nearly 5,000 immigrants, many of them Italians, settled in California, and the population of Colorado increased 1,500 by immigration. In only one State of the Union did the number of female immigrants arriving exceed the number of male immigrants. That was New Hampshire. Only 600 immigrants went to Arkansas and 38 to Oklahoma.

Queen Regent of Spain.

Urged of the action by the Duke of Tetuan, her minister of foreign affairs, her Majesty, Maria Christina, Queen Regent of Spain, had intended sending a note to European powers asking them to prevent the United States from interfering in favor of the Cubans. Minister Taylor, however, protested, and the plan was abandoned.

Ordered to Vote for Silver.

The joint resolution in the Nebraska Legislature directing Senator John M. Thurston to vote for any measures favoring free and unlimited coinage of silver at a ratio of 16 to 1 was adopted by a party vote.

WORK OF CONGRESS.

THE WEEK'S DOINGS IN SENATE AND HOUSE.

A Comprehensive Digest of the Proceedings in the Legislative Chambers at Washington—Matters that Concern the People.

Lawmakers at Labor.

In the Senate Monday Mr. Turpie, of Indiana, characterized Capt. Gen. Weyler as the "Herod of Havana, the murderer of women and children," and as an "indescribably diminutive reptile." These bitter words were incident to Mr. Turpie's speech of two hours on the Cameron Cuban resolutions. Mr. Turpie frequently turned aside from his argument to pay a glowing tribute to the insurgent government and its leaders. After 3 o'clock the day was devoted to eulogies on the late ex-Speaker Charles F. Crisp. Early in the day memorials were presented from the presidential electors of Delaware asking for a congressional investigation of alleged fraud and political irregularities in that State. After consuming most of the day in disposing of District of Columbia business the House took up the Indian appropriation bill and made fair progress with it before the hour for adjournment was reached. The bill carries $7,523,791, $366,294 more than the current law and $246,265 more than the estimates. Twenty of the seventy pages of the bill were disposed of. A bill was passed calling on the War Department for an estimate of the cost of a water route from Galveston to Houston, Tex. Mr. Johnston (Rep.) of Indiana took advantage of the latitude allowed in debate to read a speech in favor of an early reform of the banking and currency laws. Mr. Curtis (Rep.) of Kansas offered an amendment to the Indian bill to permit merchants to go into the Kickapoo reservation in Kansas to collect their accounts. It was explained that this year for the first time merchants had been excluded from this reservation. The amendment was adopted.

In the Senate Tuesday Cuba, the proposed international monetary conference and the Nicaragua canal each came in for a share of attention. The Wolcott bill for an international monetary conference was considered for the first time. No final action on the bill was taken. The House amendments to the Senate bill for a survey of a water route from the mouth of the jetties at Galveston, Tex., to Houston, were agreed to and the bill finally passed. The House overrode another of President Cleveland's pension vetoes by a vote of 137 to 52. The bill pensioned Jonathan Scott of the Sixth Iowa cavalry, now living at Oswego, Kan., at the rate of $72 a month. Mr. Cleveland vetoed it on the ground that the disability for which the beneficiary was to be pensioned was not contracted in the service. The rest of the day was devoted to a continuation of the debate on the Indian appropriation bill. About twenty-five pages of the bill were covered. A bill to satisfy a peculiar claim was passed on motion of Mr. Turner (Dem.) of Georgia. It was the claim of John F. McRae, a deputy United States marshal, for keeping thirty-six African slaves, landed by the ship Wanderer at Savannah, Ga., in 1859, until they could be shipped back to their homes, in accordance with the provisions of the laws for the suppression of the slave traffic. The amount was $462.

A crisis in the debate in the Nicaragua canal bill was reached in the Senate Wednesday. It brought out an energetic statement from Senator Sherman, in which he foreshadowed a new treaty by which the United States could build the canal without the intermediation of a private concession. The Senator declared that this governmental execution of the project was the only feasible one, and that all private efforts in that direction had proved failures. Answering Mr. Morgan's recent charge that England inspired opposition to American control of the canal, Mr. Sherman asserted that this was a "bugaboo," wholly without foundation. He added a handsome tribute to England and her institutions. The House adopted the conference report on the immigration bill by a vote of 131 to 118. The principal criticism of the measure agreed on by the conferees in debate was based upon the extension of the educational test to female as well as male immigrants, on the ground that it might divide families, and to the limitation to the ability of an immigrant to read and write the English language or the language of their native country or residence. Mr. Hepburn (Rep., Iowa) closed the debate in support of the report. When he declared that hundreds of thousands of American laborers were to-day walking the streets of the great cities because they had been crowded out by the incoming stream of aliens, the public galleries of the House fairly shook with acclaim.

The House passed the Indian appropriation bill Thursday and entered upon the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill, but all interest in these two measures was overshadowed by two remarkable speeches, one made by Mr. Grosvenor of Ohio, attacking ex-Gov. Altgeld of Illinois, and the other by Mr. Dearmond of Missouri, heaping ridicule on Secretary Morton for the recent issue of a pamphlet entitled "The Farmers' Interest in Finance." Mr. Grosvenor's observations on the Governor of Illinois were called forth by the latter's recent speech, in which he charged that Mr. Bryan had been defeated by fraud and based his charge particularly on the enormous increase of the vote in Ohio, where, he alleged, 90,000 votes were illegally cast. Mr. Grosvenor analyzed the Ohio vote and explained the causes of its increase, calling attention to the fact that the Democratic vote in the State had increased proportionately much more than the Republican. The Senate, by a vote of 41 to 15, confirmed the nomination of William S. Forman of Illinois to be Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Senator Cullom presented to the Senate a number of letters and memorials he had received from Chicago business firms asking for the passage of the Torrey bankruptcy bill.

Telegraphic Brevities.

Three different sections of Texas experienced their first snowstorm for three years.

Secretary and Mrs. Carlisle gave a dinner in Washington to President and Mrs. Cleveland.

The New York Board of Health has placed pulmonary tuberculosis on the list of infectious diseases.

The mother, brother and sister of Arthur Palmer of New York, all of whom he shot, are dead. Palmer cannot be found.

William Clark Noble, a jewelry designer of wide reputation, was arrested at New York on a charge of larceny, brought against him by Julia Adelaide Price, one of his models, who asserts that under a promise of marriage, he, during the latter portion of the year 1895, wheedled $2,000, all her savings, from her.

William Leibold, 17 years old, until recently a messenger boy for a telegraph company at Lancaster, Pa., has spent $4,000 stolen money since last October in gambling and fast living, and to-day is in jail with barely a penny left. He procured the cash through innumerable forgeries of the name of Charles B. Grubb, the well-known iron and furnace master.

THE INDIANA SOLONS

Senator-elect Fairbanks was present at the joint session of the Legislature Wednesday to acknowledge his election. Outlining his policy in the Senate, Mr. Fairbanks said: "I favor upholding the dignity and honor of the government against all comers at any cost; yet I am opposed to any policy which shall tend to involve us in unnecessary international entanglements and possible war. Our people want peace, for it is the mother of prosperity. One of the hopeful, reassuring incidents of the hour is the progress made toward the institution of a high tribunal of arbitration for the settlement of disputes between the great Anglo-Saxon powers. Such a step is in keeping with the demands of our highest and best interests; it is responsive to the imperative requirements of Christianity. The strongest government can well lead the way. Our isolation is such, our resources are so limitless, the virtue and patriotism of our people are so acknowledged that we have, as Bismarck said of the new German empire, no power to fear except the power of Almighty God. We need no frequent display of our prowess. I believe in commercial conquests—those conquests which shall bring the trophies of peace to the homes of our countrymen of low and high degree." The formal vote on Senator in the joint session resulted: Fairbanks, 85; Voorhees, 58; Templeton (Pop.), 6. After the joint session of the Legislature both houses returned to work. The Senate passed the bill prohibiting the shooting of quails in this State for two years. The bill goes to the House with a penalty of $100 for any one violating the law. The Senate also adopted the report of the Judiciary Committee on the anti-cigaret bill. This prohibits the sale of cigarets to any person under 18 years old, and fixes a license of $200 for retailing cigarets and a license of $50 for wholesalers. Any person under 18 years found smoking cigarets is subject to a fine of $10.

The action of the Senate in attempting to kill the investigation of the alleged $2,000,000, which the Vandalia Railroad owes the Indiana school fund, has resulted in placing the House and Senate at loggerheads. When the Senate substitute was reported back to the House Friday morning it was utterly ignored. The House decided at once to carry on the investigation by itself, and a resolution was unanimously passed calling on Attorney General Ketcham to produce all the information he had on the subject, after which a proper form of investigation will be arranged.

Under a resolution of the House of Representatives requiring the Attorney General to report to that body on the status of the claim of the State against the Vandalia Railroad that official Monday reported that the corporation owed the State, as nearly as the amount can be figured without an investigation,

BE TRUE.

Thou must be true thyself,
If thou the truth wouldst teach;
The soul must overflow, if thou
Another's soul wouldst reach;
It needs the overflow of heart
To give the lips full speech.

Think truly, and thy thoughts
Shall the world's famine feed;
Live truly, and each word of thine
Shall be a fruitful seed;
Live truly, and thy life shall be
A great and noble creed.

WHEN GREEK MEETS GREEK.

By Morgan Robertson.

Captain William Belchior was more than a martinet. He was known as "Bucko" Belchior in every port where the English language is spoken, having earned this prefix by the earnest readiness with which, in his days as second and chief mate, he would whirl belaying pins, heavers and hand-spikes about the decks, and by his success in knocking down, tricing up and working up sailors who displeased him. With a blow of his fist he had broken the jaw of a man helplessly ironed in the 'tween deck, and on the same voyage, armed with a simple belaying pin, had sprung alone into a circle of brandishing sheath knives and quelled a mutiny. He was short, broad, beetle-browed and gray-eyed, of undoubted courage, but with the quality of sympathy left out of his nature.

During the ten years in which he had been in command he was relieved of much of the executive work that had made him famous when he stood watch, but was always ready to ratify his reputation as a "Bucko" should friction with the crew occur past the power of his officers to cope with. His ship, the Wilmington, a sky-sail-yard clipper, was rated by sailor men as the "hottest" craft under the American flag, and Captain Belchior himself was spoken of by consuls and commissioners, far and near, as a man particularly unfortunate in his selection of men, for never a passage ended but he was complainant against one or more heavily ironed and badly used up members of his crew.

His officers were, in the language of one of these defendants, "o' the same breed o' dorg." No others could or would sign with him. His crews were invariably put on board in the stream or at anchorage; never at the dock. Drunk when coerced by the boarding masters into signing the ship's articles, kept drunk until delivery, for no sober men able to run would join her, they were driven or hoisted up the side like animals—some in a stupor from drink or drugs, some tied hand and foot, struggling and cursing with returning reason.

Equipped thus, the Wilmington, bound for Melbourne, discharged her tug and pilot off Sandy Hook one summer morning, and with a fresh quartering wind and raising sea, headed for the southeast. The day was spent in getting her sail on, and in the "licking into shape" of the men as fast as they recovered their senses. Oaths and missiles flew about the deck, knock-downs were frequent, and by eight bells in the evening, when the two mates chose the watches—much as boys chose sides in a ball game—the sailors were well convinced that their masters lived aft.

Three men, long-haired fellows, sprawled on the mainhatch, helpless from seasickness, were left to the last in the choosing, and then hustled into the light from the near-by galley door to be examined. They had been dragged from the forecastle at the mate's call for "All hands."

"Call yourselves able seamen, I suppose," he said with an oath, as he glared into their woe-begone faces.

"No, pard," said the tallest and eldest of the three in a weak voice. "We're not seamen; we don't know how we got here, neither."

The mate's answer was a fist blow under the ear that sent the man headlong into the scuppers, where he lay, quiet.

"Say 'sir' when you speak to me, you bandy-legged farmers," he snarled, glowering hard at the other two, as they leaned against the water tank. "I'm pard to none of ye."

They made him no answer and he turned away in contempt. "Mr. Tomm," he called, "want these chaps in your watch?"

"No, sir," said the second mate; "I don't want 'em. They're no more use than a spare pump."

"I'll make 'em useful, 'fore I'm done with 'em. Go forrard—you three. Get the bile out o' yer gizzards 'fore mornin' 'f ye value yer good looks." He delivered a vicious kick at each of the two standing men, bawled out: "Relieve the wheel an' lookout—that'll do the watch," and went aft, while the crew assisted the seasick men to the forecastle and into three bedless bunks—bedless, because sailors must furnish their own, and these men had been "shanghaied."

The wind died away during the night and they awoke in the morning with their seasickness gone, and appetites ravenous. Sombre and ominous was their bearing as they silently ate of the breakfast in the forecastle and stepped out on deck with the rest in answer to the mate's roar: "All hands spread dunnage." Having no dunnage but what they wore, they drew on toward the windlass and conferred together while chests and bags were dragged out on deck and overhauled by the officers for whiskey and sheath knives. What they found of the former they pocketed, and of the latter tossed overboard.

"Where are the canal drivers?" demanded the chief mate, as he raised his head from the last chest; "where are our seasick gentlemen, who sleep all night—what—what," he added, in a stutter of surprise.

He was looking down three 8-inch barrels of three heavy Colt revolvers, cocked and held by three scowling, sunburned men, each of whom was tucking with disengaged left hand the corner of a shirt into a waistband, around which was strapped a belt full of cartridges.

"Hands up!" snapped the tall man; "hands up, every one of ye. Up with 'em—over yer heads. That's right!" The pistols wandered around the heads of the crowd and every hand was elevated.

"What's this? What d'ye mean? Put those pistols down. Give them up. Lay aft, there, some o' ye, and call the captain," blustered the mate with his hands held high. Not a man stirred to obey. The scowling faces looked deadly in earnest.

"Right about, face," commanded the tall man. "March, every man. Back to the other end o' the boat. Laramie, take the other side, and round up anybody ye see. Now, gentlemen, hurry."

Away went the protesting procession, and, joined by the carpenter, sail maker, donkey man and cook, "rounded up" from their sanctums by the man called Laramie, it had reached the main hatch before the captain, pacing the quarter-deck, was aware of the disturbance. With Captain Belchior to think was to act. Springing to the cabin skylight, he shouted: "Steward, bring up my pistols. Bear a hand. Lower your weapons, you scoundrels; this is rank mutiny."

A pistol spoke, and the Captain's hat left his head. "There goes your hat," said a voice, "now for a button." Another bullet sped, which cut from his coat the button nearest his heart. "Come down from there—come down," said the voice he had heard. "Next shot goes home. Start while I count three. One—two—." Captain Belchior descended the steps—"hands up, same as the rest." Up went the Captain's hands. Such markmanship was beyond his philosophy. "Pache," went on the speaker, "go up there and get the guns he wanted." The steward, with two bright revolvers in his hands, was met at the companion hatch by a man with but one; but that one was so big, and the hand which held it was so steady, that it was no matter of surprise that he obeyed the terse command, "Fork over; handles first." The Captain's nickelplated pistols went into the pockets of 'Pache's coat, and the white-faced steward, poked in the back by the muzzle of that big firearm, marched to the main deck and joined the others.

"Go down that place, 'Pache, and chase out any one else ye find," called the leader from behind the crowd. "Bring 'em all down here." 'Pache descended, and reappeared with a frightened cabin boy, whom, with the man at the wheel, he drove before him to the steps. There was no wind, and the ship could spare the helmsman.

"Now, then, gentlemen," said the tall leader, "I reckon we're all here. Keep yer hands up. We'll have a pow wow. 'Pache, stay up there, and you, Laramie, cover 'em from behind. Plug the first man who moves."

He mounted the steps to the quarter-deck, and as he replaced empty shells with cartridges, looked down on them with a serene smile on his not ill looking face. His voice, except when raised in accents of command, had in it the musical, drawling, plaintive tone so peculiar to the native Texan—and so deceptive. The other two, younger and rougher men, looked as they glanced at their victim through the sights of the pistols as though they longed for the word of permission to riddle the ship's company with bullets.

"You'll pay for this, you infernal cutthroats," spluttered the Captain. "This is piracy."

"Don't call any names now," said the tall man; "'tain't healthy. We don't want to hurt ye, but I tell ye seriously, ye never were nearer death than ye are now. It's a risky thing—and a foolish thing, too, gentlemen, to steal three American citizens with guns under their shirts and take 'em so far from land as this. Hangin's the fit and proper punishment for hoss stealin', but man stealin's so great a crime that I'm not right sure what the punishment is. Now, we don't know much about boats and ropes—though we can tie a hangman's knot when necessary—but we do know sumthin' 'bout guns and human natur—here, you, come 'way from that fence." The Captain was edging toward a belaying pin, but the speaker's voice had lost its plaintiveness, and three tubes were looking at him. He drew inboard and the leader resumed.

"Now, first thing, who's foreman o' this outfit? Who's boss?"

"I'm captain, here."

"You are? You are not. I'm captain. Get up on that shanty." The small house over the mizzen hatch was indicated, and Captain Belchior climbed it. The tubes were still looking at him.

"Now, you, there—you man who hit me last night when I was sick, who are you and what?"

"Mate, confound you."

"Up with you and don't cuss. You did a cowardly thing, pardner, an unmanly thing. You don't deserve to live any longer, but my darter back here at school thinks I've killed enough men for one lifetime, and mebbe she's right—mebbe she's right. Any how, she don't like it and that lets you out—though I won't answer for 'Pache and Laramie when my back's turned. You kicked 'em both. But I'll just return the blow. The mate had but straightened up on top of the hatch house when the terrible pistol spat out another red tongue, and his yell followed the report, as he clapped his hand to the ear through which the bullet had torn.

"Hands up, there," thundered the shooter, and the mate obeyed, while a stream of blood ran down inside his shirt collar.

"Any more bosses here?" The second mate did not respond, but 'Pache's pistol sought him out, and under its influence, and his guttural "I know you, get up," he followed his superiors.

"Any more?"

A manly looking fellow stepped out of the group and said: "You've got the captain and two mates. I'm bosun here, and yonder's my mate. We're next, but we're not bosses in the way o' bein' responsible for anything that has happened, or might happen to you. We b'long forrard. There's no call to shoot at the crew, for there's not a man among 'em but what 'ud be glad to see you get ashore, and get there himself."

"Silence, bosun," bawled the Captain. But the voice of authority seemed pitifully ludicrous and incongruous, coupled with the captain's position and attitude, and every face on the deck wore a grin. The leader noticed the silent merriment, and said:

"Laramie, I reckon these men'll stand. You can come up here. I'm gettin' 'long in years and kinder steady-in' down, but I s'pose you and 'Pache want some fun. Start yer whistle and turn loose."

Up the steps bounded Laramie, and with a ringing whoop as a prelude, began whistling a clear, musical trill, while 'Pache, growling out, "Dance dance, ye white-livered coyotes," sent a bullet through the outer edge of the chief mate's boot heel.

"Dance," repeated Laramie between bars of the music. "Crack, crack," went the pistols, while bullets rattled around the feet of the men on the hatch and Laramie's whistle rose and fell on the soft morning air.

The sun, who has looked on many scandalous sights, looked on this, and hid his face under a cloud, refusing to witness. For never before had the ethics of shipboard life been so outrageously violated. A squat Captain and two six-foot officers, nearly black in the face from rage and exertion with hands clasped over their heads hopped and skipped around a narrow stage to the accompaniment of pistol reports harmoniously disposed among the notes of a whistled tune, while bullets grazed their feet, and an unkempt, disfigured and sore-headed crew looked on and chuckled. When the mate, weak from loss of blood, fell and rolled to the deck, the leader stopped the entertainment.

"Now, gentlemen," he said in his serious voice, "I'm called Pecos Tom, and I've had considerable experience in my time, but this is my first with human creatures so weak and thoughtless that they'll drug and steal away three men without takin' their guns away from them. And so on account o' this shiftless improvidence, I reckon this boat will have to turn round and go back."

They rolled and kicked the two mates to the rail, lifted the Captain to his feet and said:

"Give the right and proper order to yer men to turn this boat 'round."

With his face working convulsively, Captain Belchior glanced at his captors—at his eager, waiting crew—at the wheel without a helmsman—at a darkening of the water on the starboard bow to the southward—up aloft and back again to the three frowning muzzles so close to his head.

"One hand to the wheel—square in main and cro'-jack yards," he called. He was conquered.

With a hurrah which indicated the sincerity of these orders, the crew sprang to obey them, and with foreyards braced to starboard and head sheets flat, the ship Wilmington wore around, and bringing the young breeze on the port quarter, steadied down to a course for Sandy Hook, which the Captain, with hands released, but still under the influence of those threatening pistols, worked out from the mate's dead reckoning. Then he was plumped again, but allowed to pace the deck and watch his ship, while the two officers were kept under the rail, sometimes stepped upon or kicked, and often admonished on the evil of their ways.

Early passengers on the East River ferryboats were treated to a novel sight next morning, which they appreciated according to their nautical knowledge. A lofty ship, with skysails and royals hanging in the buntlines and jibs tailing ahead like flags, was charging up the harbor before a humming southerly breeze, followed by an elbowing crowd of puffing, whistling, snub-nosed tugs. It was noticeable that whenever a fresh tug arrived alongside little white clouds left her quarter deck, and that tug suddenly sheered off to take a position in the parade astern. Abreast of Governor's Island topgallant halyards were let go, as were those of the jibs, but no clewing up or hauling down was done, nor were any men seen on her forecastle deck getting ready lines or ground tackle. She passed the Battery and up the East River, craft of all kinds getting out of her way—for it was obvious that something was wrong with her—until, rounding slowly to a starboard wheel, with canvas rattling and running gear in bights, she heded straight for a slip partly filled with canal boats. Then her topsail halyards were let go, and three heavy yards came down by the run, breaking across the caps, and, amid a grinding, creaking and crashing of riven timbers, and a deafening din of applauding tug whistles, she ploughed her way into the nest of canal boats and came to a stop.

Then was a hegira. Down her black sides by ropes and chain plates, to the wrecked and sinking canal boats, some with bags or chests, some without, came sailor men, who climbed to the dock, and, answering no questions of the gathering crowd of dock loungers, scattered into the side streets, while three men appeared on the rail, who shook their fists and swore and shouted for the police, calling particularly for the apprehension of three dark-faced, long-haired fellows with big hats.

In the light of later developments it was known that the police responded, and with the assistance of boarding-house runners, gathered in that day nearly all of this derelict crew—even to a cautious boatswain—who were promptly and severely punished for mutiny and desertion. But the later developments failed to show that the three dark-faced men were ever seen again.—New York Sun.

New Oil Fields.

Indiana is coming to the front as an oil field, and nearly three thousand oil wells were bored in that State during the year 1895. It is asserted that Indiana is likely very soon to rank with Ohio and Pennsylvania in its value as an oil-producing State. An agreeable feature of the oil industry is that during the past year the work has been prosecuted with very few serious accidents.

Enthusiasts declare that Indiana will become famous as an oil State within the next few years. The wells hold out wonderfully. According to figures given, out of 2,700 wells only 750 went dry. This is considered a remarkable showing.

It is proposed to place tablets on the former sites of the World Fair buildings at Chicago.

DELINQUENT TAX SALE.

LANDS AND TOWN LOTS returned Delinquent for the non-payment of taxes for the year 1895, by the County Treasurer of DeKalb County, Indiana, including the interest and penalty thereon, and also for the taxes for the year 1896.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY

JAMES A. HAKNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana Office as second-class matter

THURSDAY.....FEBRUARY 4, 1897

RUN IN THREE SECTIONS

In Order That All Passengers Might be Accommodated.

COW BELLS AND FISH HORNS GALORE

The Sleighing Parties of the Season Were Last Night. Pleasant night, Indeed.

Last evening was the "Red Letter" evening for sleigh rides. The weather was so pleasant and the sleighing so good, that about half the town disappeared, east, west, north and south. Three big loads went to Waterloo, and while driving around to "pick up" the pleasure seekers, they made Auburn howl with their songs, shouts, laughter and fish horns. Arriving at Waterloo they "disembarked" at the popular Locke Hotel, and were at once cared for by mine host, Ab Kelley and wife. The evening was passed in social games and visiting. Then there was a splendid lunch as may well be supposed, and all enjoyed it. They started home at midnight. There were thirty-four in this party, as the following list will show:

SECTION NO. 1.

Mr. and. Mrs. Same Snyder, Mr. and Mrs. Howard McCord, Mr. and Mrs. Will Schaab, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. McClellan, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Raut, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Hartman, Mrs. Eugene Hardendorf.

SECTION NO. 2.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Shull, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Lanning, Mr. and Mrs. Don A. Garwood, Mr. and Mrs. Dr. Buchtel, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Culbertson.

SECTION NO. 3.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed Robbins, Mr. and Mrs. Henry McIntyre, Mr. and Mrs. Ike Zent, Mrs. Sam Hanna.

UNIVERSITY PARTY

The University Club enjoyed a bob sled party to Garrett last night. They were entertained there by Mrs. Crimmins, mother of J. P. Crimmins. Members of the party report a splendid time, and feel grateful to Mrs. Crimmins for her hospitalities. The party consisted of: Dr. Baxter and wife, Cliff Caldwell and wife, and Misses Lila Baker, Elna Davis, Margaret Buckley, Jennie Showalter, Blanche Shilling, Jennie Askew and Messrs. J. P. Crimmins, Frank Baker, Dan Link and Frank Fanning.

SCHOOL MARM'S PARTY.

A number of our teachers in the public schools enjoyed a bob sled party out to S. J. Tarney's in Jackson township last night. This party consisted of the educational representatives of our town and was highly enjoyed by all who participated Those in the party were: Misses, Stella Tarney, Stella Hague, Lydia and Mary Teeters, Nellie Buckly, Bertha Yates, Miss Gratz, Mrs. Richards, Flora Hoffman, and Mrs. Zorah Shafer, Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Merica and, Messrs. Oscar Hoffman and Chas. Hague.

BOARDING HOUSE PARLY.

A bob sled party Monday night furnised no little amusement for the Misses Keerans and their boarders. These accommodating and polite ladies treated their boarders to a ride out in the country to L. D. Nelson's. With them were plenty of good singers and musicians and those who were neither, simply yelled. The party was composed of the Misses Laura and Ellen Keeran, Alda Larimore, Nettie Ernest, Miss Ashton, Sadie Maxwell, Nellie Buckley, Mrs Richard, Mr. and Mrs. L. E Lane, and Art Moore and Frank Nelson.

WILD RUMORS.

Some rumers that are afloat, would not seem to be worthy a denial, did we not see them in nearly every exchange we pick up. It is going over the country that Mr. Coffinberry is not dead, but has escaped to some parts unknown. If these people and these papers would stop and think, they would not be misled. The insurance companies have already begun to pay their losses and that ought to settle it. Mr. Coffinberry died and was buried, as stated in the COURIER. Of that our readers may be assured.

AT THE CAPITAL

Two Auburn Ladies are Giving the Legislature the Benefit of Their Presence.

As noted last week, Mrs. Nusbaum and Mrs. Brown went to Indianapolis to visit their husbands a few days and look in on the legislature and learn the ways of law-making.

To-day, Monday, we are in receipt of a very interesting letter from the former a part of which we publish. It reads:

INDIANAPOLIS, Jan. 30, 1896,

EDITOR COURIER:

The people of the county who are interested in legislation of the prohibition of the manufacture of cigarettes in the state will wish to know what the legislatures is doing about it. The bill was brought before the senate last Thursday providing for the licensing act. The Doctor's vote was the only one recorded against it and he has a bill which he will present this week prohibitting the making of and sale of cigarettes.

Mrs. Brown and myself accompanied the committees on benevolence and education, from the House and Senate to Lafayette to visit and inspect the Soldiers Home and Purdue University, we only had time to visit the Soldiers Home, and what a home it is, so comfortable and pleasant situated about 4½ miles out from the city. We were through all of the buildings and find the inmates generally cheerful and thankful for the benevolence of the state of Indiana.

We had in our party Leutenant Gov. Haggard, and we all spent a very pleasant day.

MRS. W. H. NUSBAUM.

JUDGES MUST PAY FARES

If Senotor Nusbaum's Bill Becomes a Law---Its Provisions.

Indianapolis Journal

Senator Nusbaum is after the judges who secure passes on the railroads either for themselves or families. The bill he introduced Friday afternoon declares any judge who obtains or uses such passes to be guilty of bribery, whether his official acts are affected by the acceptance of the passes or not. Upon conviction the judge will become ineligible to further hold his position and shall pay a fine not exceeding $1,000. Any conductor or agent who shall fail to take up any pass or annual presented by a judge and report the same to the prosecuting attorney of the county in which the pass is taken up is also made liable to a fine of not exceeding $1,000. The bill went to the judiciary committee.

At the request of the lieutenant governor, Senator Nusbaum introduced a bill providing for the creation of the office of public defender, to stand as the opposite of the public prosecutor. Lieutement Governor Haggaad says that the bill was sent to him by Mrs. Clara Foltz, a New York lawyer, with the request that it be introduced. The bill provides that the public defender shall defend persons too poor to employ counsel. He is not to receive a salary, but is to have an allowance made to him by the court for the work actually done. He is to have the same access to police records and documents as is given to the prosecutor. On behalf of her bill the author says that it would prevent the innocent from being railroaded to prison and would prevent unscruplous lawyers who frequent courts from getting hold o prisoners and fleecing them. Senator Shea's bill provides that the county auditors shall name all public highways not already named and furnish an index of them. It also provides that when new roads are established they shall be named Senator Shea says that it is impossible to get information about the roads without going through a lot of records. His scheme is simply a sort of street directory, except that it refers to country roads. A bill to increase the salary of the quartermaster general from $600 to $1,200 a year was introduced by Senator Leich.

sition to that prepared under the direction of State Superintendent Greeting. A number of bills on second reading were advanced a step by being ordered engrossed. One of them was Senator Hawkin's bill, introduced at the request o the State Medical Society regulating the practice of medicine and providing for the information of an examining board. Another was Senator Ellison's bill providing for the care and control of orphans and dependent children. Senator Holler's bill for the appointment of probation officers was also engrossed.

OPERA HOUSE

There are excellent plays every night this week at 15, 20 and 30 cents. Good company. It will pay to come to town, have a sleighride and see a fine play.

GOOD DECISION.

Indiana will gain a good round sum by the recent decision of the telegraph tax cases. In 1893 the legislature passed a law to tax railroad, telephone and telegraph companies, and provided a penalty of 50 per cent. if they failed to pay. The telephone company paid, the sleeping car company paid when sued, but the express and other companies fought it and finally, after being beaten in the Indiana Supreme Court, entered the cases in the U. S. Supreme Court. A few days ago the final decision was reached. It affirms the rights of a state to make such laws and enforce them. Ohio had similar cases that were also decided in the same way. Now, the companies will have to pay three years taxes and the penalty. The total sum to be added to the state income by this decision will be about $200,000. This will help that much to pay the state debt.

CONCORD.

Hugh Watt has returned from his Western visit highly pleased.

Wesley Bachtel will move Thursday to his fathers farm near Waterloo.

Geo. Kinsey and family, of St. Joe, visited his uncle J. D. Johnson and family Sunday.

J. W. May has a bran new sleigh to drive his alvander in. What a shiner James is getting to be in his old days.

Frank Davis and wife, Ernest Hollobaugh, of St. Joe, and Ceda Cline, of here, was guests of Curt and Ross Watt Sunday.

Master Harry Seberts has fully recovered.

I. S. Bone and wife and Mrs. Hennessey visited in the family of L. D. James, of Ft. Wayne, Thursday and Friday.

Mrs. Humberger is quite sick.

A sled load drove over to L. S. Saylars, of Coburntown Sunday evening

Grover Morr is reported better of his rheumatism.

Bert Mochamer is entertaining his cousin and brother, of Lansing, Mich.

Frank and Alice Draggco drove over to Butler Monday the guests of their uncle W. L. Blair.

Cal Hutton and his big load of young people attended church in Auburn Sunday evening.

A social family gathering at the home of Joseph Koch, of Fairview, Thursday evening. Recitations, music and scriptual quotations was the leading event.

HOUSE BILL No. 144.

A Bill For an Act to Regulate the Duties of County Surveyors.

WHEREAS, A large number of County Surveyors throughout the State of Indiana failed, under Section No. 5634 of Burns' Revised Statutes of 1894, to give personal notice to land owners in their respective counties where and at what time said surveyors would hear objections that might be made to the ditch allotments for repairing and cleaning ditches made by him under said law; and,

WHEREAS, The Supreme Court of the State of Indiana have decided that such personal notice is necessary in order to bind the land owner to perform the work given to him by said surveyor under said allotment; and,

WHEREAS, A large number of ditches have been so allotted by the County Surveyors of the State of Indiana throughout the counties of said State at a very great expense to the taxpayers of the various counties; and,

WHEREAS, A reallotment of said ditches by the County Surveyor of said State will make a very large and unnecessary expense to said taxpayers; therefore,

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, that the County Surveyors of the State of Indiana, in all counties where the said County Surveyors failed to give personal notice to the respective landowners throughout the counties, over which the said county surveyors had supervision under said act, and ditch allotments for cleaning and repairing ditches were by them made. The said county surveyors shall, as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, give personal notice to the landowners of the land affected by said allotments for cleaning and repairing ditches in their respecsive counties, the form of notice to be the same as is prescribed in the aforesaid act and for the purpose as therein set out. And if the said landowner shall fail to appear before said surveyor at the time and place prescribed in said notice and present his objections to his said allotments, or if upon presenting his objections the surveyor holds against him and adjudges that his allotments are right and equitable, then his said allotment shall be finally established as previously determined, and he shall be required to perform the work allotted to him the same as though personal notice had been given him in the first event, and as though there were no irregularity therein: provided, however, he shall be entitled to the same right of appeal and in the same manner as is prescribed in aforesaid law under which the said ditch allotments for cleaning and repairing ditches were made and said surveyor was acting.

Section 2. Nothing in this act shall be construed to give the surveyor power and authority to re-allot the repairing and cleaning of ditches and making of records as is prescribed in said act referred to in the preceding section, but that he is only to perform such duties as are required of him after the giving of notice as is prescribed in aforesaid act.

Section 3. Nothing in this act contained shall in any way affect any suit now pending in any court of this State, but the same shall be tried as if this act had not passed.

Section 4. Whereas an emergency exists for the immediate taking effect of this act, it is declared that the same be in effect from and after its passage.

MR. SPEAKER:—

Your Committee on Judiciary, to which was referred House Bill No. 144, introduced by Mr. Brown, has had the same under consideration and begs leave to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the same be passed.

JOHN W. LINCH, Chairman.

They ask the government, says the Helena, Mont., Independent, for special privileges. They will tell the government, the representatives of the people, how to increase revenues from imports by diminishing imports how to raise revenue by bringing in more foreign goods, how to benefit laboring men by keeping out all foreign goods, how to make our people more prosperous and happier by increasing taxation. Their real object is to make Americans pay more for the necessaries of life. How much cheaper it would be to pension these beggars.

Mrs. Simon Dickinson, who has been sick so long, is still lying at death's door, with no hope of recovery.

Mrs. Dr. Bevier made a business trip to Auburn Saturday.

Little Phyllis Askew, of Auburn, was here over Saturday, visiting her relatives, Mr. and Mrs. Plum, who went home with her Sunday.

Our attorneys have been going over to Auburn for a few weeks, now have their attention turned to Angola.

Mrs. Darwin Soule who has been sick so long, is now very low and no prospects for recovery.

Gen. and Mrs. L. J. Blair entertained a number of ladeis from Kendallville last Thursday afternoon. The twelve ladies were members of a social club, and friends of Mrs. Blair. We noticed two gentlemen who had the courage to venture out with a crowd of such jolly ladies as these proved themselves to be. The afternoon was passed very pleasantly in bright conversation and with cards. A fine supper was served at 6 o'clock, and the guests showed their appreciation of the good things provided by partaking heartily of them. There were present: Mr. and Mrs. Smiley, Mr. and Mrs. Scutt, Miss Millie Solliday, and Mesdames Berhalter, Ogle Ward, Crane, Roberts Fetters, Case, Smith and Mrs. J. A. Barns, of Auburn. The party returned on the evening train well pleased with their entertainment.

BUTLER.

—A few of those we meet near the shady places in town—walk with a little firmer tread, and elevate their heads a little higher—since the grand jury are about to close their door and let up on their perambulations with lanterns in the day time.

—J. A. Campell visited the breezy city last week and looked over the great cycle show. and while there had an opportunity to see the ruins caused by the recent big fire on Monroe and Fifth avenue. The block was a massive six story brick and iron structure, that the flames reduced to skeleton and the twenty-four hours playing of a dozen steamers upon the structure, made a literal iceberg of it. The intense cold congealed the streams before they reached half of the way through it and sent up a cloud of spray and mist that filled the streets like dense fog. Many of the windows through which streams of water were thrown were nearly closed with ice, while from the walls and ledges. great festoons of ice hung in all shapes imaginable. The streets were thronged with men and women gazing at the beautiful but expensive show, the loss being hundreds of thousands of dollars and the expression on every side was "Oh! how beautiful!"

—Our people were pained as well as surprised last Thursday to receive the sad news, that Mrs. Alice Stoy, nee Hubbell, wife of Cyrus S. Stoy of Indianapolis was dead. She had been a resident of Butler for a lifetime. Her remains were brought here on Friday and the funeral services were conducted by Rev. Acton, a universalist minister of Indianapolis. The service was solemn and pathetic. She leaves a husband and daughter to mourn her unexpetted death

—James Chambers. identified with Butler people for nearly forty years, quietly crossed the river last Thursday. While he has been in poor health for a year or more, serious illness was but for a day or two. His funeral took place from the M. E. church last Sunday, Rev. Distro officiating, assisted by the local Lodge of Masons, of which order he was a member. His aged wife, one son, one daughter, two brothers and two sisters survive him.

DOGS KILL SHEEP.

Last week two dogs belonging to Jim Beaty got into a flock of sheep belonging to David and Noah Gerrig, who live on the Allen county line, and ran them into the barn. It was about 11 o'clock at night and the boys heard the noise. They got up and with a lantern ran to the barn, shut the door and had both dogs and sheep in safety. One boy held the lantern while the other one with the revolver shot down the two dogs. Six sheep were so wounded that they were killed. Appraisers were appointed and Saturday W. S. Dancer, trustee of Jackson township, settled for the loss. One of the dogs was very large and showed fight and the boys say if it had not been for their revolver the dogs would have tackled them. It was a brave act on the part of the boys.

Honesty and Virtue.

There is more honesty and virtue contained in a bottle of Salvation Oil, than in any other liniment known. "Mrs. A. Fiedler, 2864 Palethorp St., Philadelphia, Pa., confirms this truth: She found Salvation Oil to be an excellent remedy for rheumatism, stiff joints, bruises, etc., and thinks it should always be kept in the house." Don't listen to the dealer's arguments in favor of a substitute. Insist on getting Salvation Oil, it costs only 25 cts.

HER BOUNDLESS FIELD.

You talk about
"A woman's sphere,"
As though it had
A limit
There's not a place
In earth
Or Heaven,
There's not a task
To mankind
Given,
There's not a blessing
Or a woe,
There's not a whisper
Yes or no,
There's not a home,
So we are told,
That's worth a feather's weight

—Allen Weaver, now residing at Oakesdale, Wash., sends the COURIER a big payment ahead, and writes as we are always glad to have our friends do, as to how things are out there. He says the hard times struck them in '93, and as he had bought more property, he had to get up and hustle. He has evidently succeedde, in getting into good shape, which his old friends out here will be pleased to learn.

—Minutes seem like hours when a life is at stake. Croup gives no time to send for a doctor, delay may mean death. One Minute Cough Cure gives instant relief and insures recovery. The only harmless remedy that produces immediate results. Davenport the Druggist.

—An exchange truthfully remarks that the young man who gracefully lifts his hat to every young lady he passes on the street and then goes home and allows his aged mother to split the kindling, bring in the coal and drive up the cows and milk them, does not know the first principle of politeness.

—Chicora, Pa, "Herald:" Richard Vensel reports One Minute Cough Cure the greatest success of medical science. He told us that it cured his family of terrible coughs and colds, after all other so called cures had failed entirely. Mr Vensel said it assisted his children through a very bad siege of measels. One Minute Cough Cure makes expectoration very easy and rapid. Davenport the Druggist.

—Ice is being cut and hauled now in great abundance. It is nearly a foot thick, about ten inches of which is excellent, blue ice, and about two inches is snow ice.

—'Squire Walborn has been appointed administrator of the estate of the late Alfred Hall of Concord township. He gets a great deal of such work, being careful and competent.

—Amos Friend and Henry Lochner are new subscribers to the WEEKLY to-day.

—Frank Roby will move to Auburn from Angola in a few days. The COURIER welcomes Mr. and Mrs. Roby to Auburn.

—Albert Buchanan, of Fairfield was here to-day. He was here on some business matter, one part of which at least, was to pay the COURIER into '98.

—Ex-Commissioner, John Hoffe'der and Mrs. Fred Gfeller, both of DeKalb county, have wedded. As a county official, Mr. Hoffelder must have acted on the square or else he would not have concluded to give his support to that other "feller."—Angola Republican.

—Some young married women of Bloomington are organizing a new club. One of the most important rules of the new club will be when one member is heard or known to have talkked about any person she will be fined fifty cents for the first offense, which must be paid, or she will be expelled from the club in disgrace. A club similar to this should be organized in this city.

—Laporte Argus:—It is costing the government $125 a day to pay the stenographers for writing down the opinions and wishes of the men who go before the tariff hearings committee and ask for a tariff high enough to prevent competition and enable them to demand such prices as they may want to force from customers. The people who are thus forced to submit to the robbery are given no chance to express their wishes. This is the kind of a tariff are fixing up for us. One man a stocking manufacturer, was frank and brutal enough to say the present tariff gives them 50 per cent protection but they want a tariff that will absolutely prohibit all competition and enable them to demand such prices as they want —Twenty-three young ladies and gentlemen, who the Sentinel says, have heretofore been considered of sound mind, started for Auburn Monday night in a sleighing party. Of the twenty-three none reached Auburn as they had two smash-ups and a run-away. The party left Fort Wayne at 8 o'clock. "Seven miles out, just as the cold had begun to penetrate, there was a jolt and the party was ditched. With one runner broken off the sleigh was a wreck. The young people wrapped up in blankets and tramped through the snow to the nearest farm house, where they borrowed a ten foot sled from Farmer Hoffman. Once more they they were serene, but thoroughly chilled, and it was past midnight. When still several miles from Auburn they found it was after 2 o'clock in the morning and decided to return at once. The party thought their troubles were over, but one by one, noses, ears and faces began to turn white, and two cases of frozen feet were soon apparent. It was manifestly impossible for some of them to proceed further. Then there was another crash and the now despondent crowd was unceremoniously dumped into the ditch a second time The sleigh was ruined. This settled the thing for most of them and they struggled through the snow once more, half frozen, to the house of Farmer Sherman who, with his wife, did everything to resuscitate the exhausted young people.

Eight of the crowd, however, were game. So game that they decided to return to Fort Wayne if they perished on the way—and they had a narrow escape. Eight of them procured an old wood sled and hitched the horses to the third vehicle. The rest of the party were left at the farm house in DeKalb county. The driver had his feet frozen and was so benumbed that he could hardly control the horses. All went well, however, until the sleigh was nearing the Spy Run avenue bridge. The driver could support himself no longer. He rolled off his seat into the snow and the horses ran away. The terror stricken young people saw that the frightened animals were making for the embankment overhanging the river, but were too cold and stiff to prevent it. When the party had resigned themselves to their fate a driver of a Centilvre beer wagon saw the danger and averted it. He drove the wagon across the path of the horses and brought them to a standstill."

Friday's Daily.

—Phillip Fluke is still poorly, and has been confined to his home for several weeks.

—Mrs. S. A. Griffith of Corunna, has thanks for recent remittance to the COURIER.

--Lafe Miser, of Waterloo, has thanks for a remittance for the COURIER. He is one of the most prosperous farmers of the county.

—John H. Miller, well known among our young people as well as in business circles, sends in his subscription from his new home in VanWert. We will try and make the direction better so he will get it regularly.

—The reporter "helped" count a large shipment of postage stamsp this afternoon. That is, we were a witness to the count. We say large, the bundle was not large, but there were $1,230 worth of stamps in the little parcel.

—Mrs. Geo. Shugers, who has been at home with her people, Mr. and Mrs. Eckhart four or five weeks, returned yesterday to her home in Coldwater, Mich. Mr. Eckhart has been in poor health all winter.

—John A. Bates of Corunna, was in the city Wednesday, and made this office a call. He is now engaged in collecting delinquent taxes in Richland and Fairfield and succeeding very well He wishes to say to those interested in those townships, that he hopes that they will be ready for him, it being very important that settlement be made soon.

—We publish to-day, House Bill No. 144, introduced by Hon. C. M. Brown, and intended to correct some careless and expensive features in the working of the ditch law. Our members are doing the best they can for their people, but being in the minority much that they undertake is up hill work. The majority seems disposed to take credit for all that is done, or else not allow it to be done. We hope however, that Mr. Brown will get his bill through. Dr. Nusbaum's important bill as to the proper way to conduct county finances, is likely to be sidetracted to make room for a similar bill with a republican member's name attached to it.

—A rather verdant youth stepped into a jewelery store at Columbia City, according to the Post, and after gazing at fraternity pins in the show case, said to the proptietor: "Thim thar Mister." "What kind of a pin would you like to look at?" He pointed to a Masonic pin. "Five dollars, eh? You haven't got any with any saw on it, have you? I'm going to set up as a carpenter and jiner, and I though I would like to have something to wear so folks would know what I was doing. Well, I'll take it, though I would like to have one with a handsaw; but I guess maybe that's plain enough; the compass is to mark out work and a square is to measure after it is marked out, and any goldarned fool knows that "G" stands for gimlet."

Auburn Courier FREE.

Everybody wants the paper now as we give the only extended, True, Authentic, and Reliable Account of the DeKalb County Muddle. The trials of Ex-County Officials will be given in full in the WEEKLY COURIER. Remember we publish a Daily and give an account of the procedure each evening and the cream of all the daily matter appears in the Weekly.

HOW TO GET IT.

Send or bring to this office the names and postoffice address of FOUR (4) new yearly subscribers, and $6, and you will get the paper one year FREE. Work up the list at once before your neighbor beats you.

—John Ludwig at Hayward, California, sends the COURIER his subscription and good wishes. We assure him it is appreciated. We have always felt an interest in the DeKalb people in the distant states, and wish they would now and then send a letter of the strange things they see.

—In these much muddled times, when nearly everything seems to be out of joint, the world over, the person who has steady employment is exceedingly fortunate. Such person should hold on to his place at all hazards. The person who jumps out of a job now will find from five to fifty other persons ready and willing and anxious to take it. The way to hold a place is by displaying a determination that is unmistakable to serve the interests of the employer, to take care of his property, to make him understand that his interests are yours and are being looked after and cared for even better than you care for your own.

"Be regular and punctual in all things" was one of the old maxims, taught long ago. The last is not forgotten, but the first is scarce remembered, so irregular is the life of most people nowadays. The only corrector of this evil is Simmons Liver Regulator, which keeps the liver active and prevents the ills of irregular living; Dyspepsia, Biliousness. Constipation, etc. It also cures these troubles.

—Dr. Stamets and Dr. Casebeer, amputated the small finger of the right hand, for Mrs. John Farver, Saturdry, at the office of the former, in town. The finger had been poisoned by handling green carpet chain or warp, and when it was found impossible to cure it, they had to remove it.

Saturday's Daily.

—Jim Lewis and wife returned today from Pleasant Lake where they were visiting.

—W. H. Brown advanced his subscription to the COURIER to Aug. 18, '97 to-day

—Mrs. Hanah Brown, of Waterloo, was a caller at this office to-day and has thanks for money advanced on her subscription.

—Mercury showed from six to ten below zero this morning. It is pretty "squeaky" weather now-d-days.

—We have two copies of Racine, Wis., dailies, which praise the Frost & Franshawe Co. in highest terms.

—Curtis Shultz, of Franklin township, was here to-day, and called up for a short time. He is now teaching at Franklin Center.

—Phillip Fluke is greatly afflicted with rheumatism and has been for some time. He is barely able to dress himself, in fact has to be helped some. We hope it may not prove serious.

—Charlie Comesky was in town yesterday. He is by no means a stranger in Auburn and DeKalb county, for he can remember when every settler in his part of the township either moved there from outside, or was born there. He has lived there for fifty-four years.

—G. B. Monroe, of Corunna, was a welcome caller at this office to-day and paid us $5 50 on his subscription to January 1, '97. Mr. Monroe has paid his subscription $5.00 at a time since the COURIER has been started.

—A school teacher says that the pupils who have access to newspapers at home are better readers, better spellers, better in punctuation, better grammarians, read more understandingly, and obtain a practical knowledge of geography in half the time it requires others. All of which speaks well for the educational power of newspapers.

—The B. & O. as well as some other roads, is now having trouble over counterfeit tickets. It appears that thousands of dollars worth of these bogus tickets have been worked off onto these roads, as they are so near like the genuine that conductors took them readily.

—It is not often the COURIER has a chance to report the arrival of a eleven pound boy, but we are permitted to do so this evening. Mr. and Mrs. Tom Patterson are the proud parents of an eleven pound boy which arrived this morning. Dr. Sparling reports both mother and child doing nicely.

—The Indiana Legislature has already done an act of outrageous injustice in voting into the state senate a man who was not elected. Rogers the new senator from Laporte, County, had a clear majority of 18 over his republican competitor, Uriah Culbert, and occupied his seat so far. And he has a letter from Culbert, written soon after the election, congratulating him on his election. But when the republican majority got to thinking they might need more hold-over senators in order to elect a U. S. Senator in 1899, they voted Rogers out and Culbert in, Culbert was hissed as he took Roger's seat.

Monday's Daily.

—B. F. Blair, of Newville was in town Saturday.

—Uncle John Pepple made his usual annual and visit to-day, paying up to 1898.

—Chas. Picker and wife, of the Picker Opera Co. were in the city to-day.

—Mrs. E. Snyder has thanks for recent favors in the way of subscription payments.

—We are informed that Penland, is in jail, not being able on willing to pay that $250.

—Dr. Stamets reports a case of paralysis east of town. Uncle John Cobbler, over 81, had a stroke Saturday, completely paralyzing the left side. He has heart trouble, which is being treated also.

—The COURIER is pleased this morning to announce a new arrival at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Garrett. It is a boy and gladdened the hearts of the happy parents yesterday morning.

—Our old-time Waterloo neighbor, Mrs Dr. Bevier was here to-day. She says that though the Doctor is not in the best of health, he still does a great deal in the practice of medicine. He has a wide reputation in treating all kinds of chronic disease.

—There has not been a winter for ever so many years, when the poor have had to receive as much help as is the case this winter. Look at the long list of money raised in every city and town, of any size. Is this the promised era of prosperity named on the big flags hung out last fall?

—The next meeting of the DeKalb Matrimonial Reunion, will be held at Auburn about Aug. 19th.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

PURELY VEGETABLE.

The cheapest, purest and best family medicine in the world! An effectual specific for all diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Spleen. Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever. Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common, as a bad breath; and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your appetite, complexion and general health.

CONSTIPATION

should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact, nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache, for the relief of which take Simmons Liver Regulator.

Cheese.

Cheese, though an important product of our dairy farms, and a reasonably popular article of diet in the United States, has never with us held quite the position accorded it in some European countries.

The English and Germans are far greater consumers of cheese than we, while both are surpassed by the Norwegians. But according to a recent writer, Switzerland is, after all, the land of cheese; and he dwells especially upon the functions, social and sentimental as well as gastronomic, performed by the cheese of Zermatt—that remarkable cheese which is so hard that it has to be scraped with a knife or cleft with an ax.

The patrician rank of a family, he says, is estimated by the age of its cheeses, and the greater the respect due to or the affection for a guest, the older is the cheese set before him. There are said to be families who own cheese that dates back to the time of the first French revolution, but which is only served on solemn occasions, such as christenings, weddings or funerals.

There are in each pantry at least as many cheeses as there are boys and girls in the family, for at the birth of every child a cheese is made, which is named after the newcomer, and which is first cut into on his or her wedding day, on which festive occasion all the guests partake of a piece of the groom's and the bride's cheeses in order to secure for them all earthly thrift and happiness. The rest is served as a token of friendly souvenir and heartfelt mourning after the tomb has closed over his or her mundane career.

Moreover, when a Zermatt youth falls in love and wishes leave to pay court to the girl of his heart, he goes to her father and asks permission to share the family dinner next Sunday. This is always granted if he is respectable, for it would be considered a deadly insult to refuse. He presents himself, therefore, and the meal begins in a friendly and homelike fashion, which does not, however, give assurance that he is acceptable. The anxious question in his mind as he tries his best to make himself agreeable, is all the time, "Will papa bring out the cheese?"

Papa does not usually hurry to relieve his fears, having the family dignity in mind, and wishing to proceed with due deliberation. If he is indeed satisfied with the suitor, he at length rises from his seat, goes solemnly to the cupboard, takes down the oldest piece of cheese, splits it, and hands a piece to the youth and one to the maiden; and from the moment they have tasted it they are betrothed. The remainder is then passed around, to be eaten by the entire family.—Youth's Companion.

HOW TO COLLECT NAMES.

Stealing Newspaper Subscription Lists and Exchanging with Other Rogues.

Persons who get circulars from swindlers often wonder how their names are obtained by the latter. The ways are various. Subscription lists of the city weeklies are bought or stolen, and nearly every swindler exchanges his letters or the addresses of those who have answered his advertisements with other swindlers in similar lines of business. Hence the recognized fact that after a person has once been caught he is much more likely to be swindled again. Nearly all the dealers in objectionable books, those who advertise "your future husband or wife," "fortunes told" and "retired clergymen" sell their letters for 1 cent each or more to the bogus money operators. So it will be seen that some lines of swindling have their branches paying a large percentage on the money invested.

A firm of "sawdust" speculators at one time bought 30,000 letters received by a concern that had realized $50,000 out of a certain bogus sewing machine. This machine was made of cast iron and turned by a small hand wheel. It would sew two pieces of the finest material together, but anything coarser would demolish the whole machine and render it useless. The same enterprising firm bought about 40,000 letters from a woman in Brooklyn who advertised to supply every young man and woman with the date of their marriage and description of their future partners for life. This woman received in nearly every one of these 40,000 letters a 50-cent stamp, and no evidence was given that she had ever sent a single reply. Indeed, so great was the harvest that some fifty or sixty of the letters had not been opened by her, and still contained the 50-cent stamps. They also bought up letters addressed to quack doctors, dealers in objectionable pictures; also letters from lottery-keepers, fortune tellers, etc.

Another firm on Wall street advertised two steel engravings of distinguished persons mailed free on receipt of $1. They received some 20,000 replies, with dollars inclosed, and sent in return two 10-cent stamps of the period. Some advertisers offer "diamond rings," "catalogues," "recipes," "songs," etc., simply to get addresses, and after getting all they can out of the parties replying they find it a profitable business to sell the letters to others.—Philadelphia Times.

Men of High Character.

"The Judges of the United States Courts have, with rare exception, been men of excellent legal ability and of high character," writes ex-President Harrison in the Ladies' Home Journal. "The bar has sometimes complained that judges were arbitrary, and not always as suave and respectful in their treatment of the members of the bar as they ought to be. Perhaps there has been in particular cases ground for such complaints, but the cases have been few. Manifestations of rudeness and passion are inexcusable in a judge. He must be deferential if he expects deference. He should be patient and even-tempered, for the case is sure to go his way in his own court. And, on the other hand, the bar should always give its powerful aid to support the influence of the courts, for the Judicial Department is the keystone of our government, and assaults upon it threaten the whole structure of the stately arch."

Butter, a la Cooking School.

"That is pretty stout butter," declared Mr. Newly, with a frown that was deep for a man who had been married but a month.

"Don't scold, dearie," urged his pretty little wife. "It'll not occur again. I have bought a churn and ordered buttermilk to be delivered regularly. Hereafter we'll have sweet, fresh butter."—Detroit Free Press.

The 20,000,000 men of the United States are wearing an average of twenty buttons each, making 400,000,000 buttons for all, estimated to weigh 25,000,000 pounds.

Politics of the Day

POWER IS WITH THE PEOPLE.

With every temporary Republican party ascendency that happens in this country we have a revival of old and oft-rejected political theories, dug up for personal vanity or class advantage, and paraded as being as good as new before the nation. Just now Senator Proctor brings forward a proposal to amend the Constitution of the United States by making the Presidential term six instead of four years, and the Congressional term three instead of two. He would also forbid Presidents to be re-elected.

This is all nonsense. In a free country short terms of office bring the men in power back face to face with their constituents, and compel them to be on their good behavior against the day of reckoning. The nearer the public officer is to the time when he must account to his constituents, the safer the constituents are that he will obey their will. Four years is long enough for a good President to do a large share of good, and long enough for a bad one to do a vast deal of harm. As to the reelections the people will take care of that, and it will not be necessary to tinker the Constitution to regulate them. And the Representatives in Congress ought to be removed no further than they now are from frequent accountability to their constituents.

Then comes Senator Sewall, of New Jersey, with a proposal to amend the Constitution of his State, so as to hold biennial instead of annual sessions of its Legislature. This is another attempt to remove power further away from the masses of the people. Under plea of economy it would postpone the correction of abuses, and, under the pretence of diminishing the bulk of legislation, it would crowd it into confusion to the advantage of the lobby. There are so many hungry corporations in New Jersey that the people cannot well afford to leave them unwatched by the law-making authority.

It begins to look as though every Republican statesman thought it his duty to advocate some method of taking power from the people.—New York News.

Again for a Democratic Movement.

The plan frequently advocated in these columns that United States Senators be chosen by the people direct instead of by the Legislatures has gained strength in consequence of the selections made in various parts of the country during the past week, and if the question of adopting it could be decided by the voters next month the chances are that there would be a substantial majority in the affirmative.

In New York State the wishes of the Republican voters were undoubtedly carried out by the legislators, but it would have been much more satisfactory if Platt could have been a candidate openly last November. The result would have been the same, but we would have had the satisfaction of knowing earlier that there was no chance for Choate.

In Illinois, on the other hand, the Legislature gave the public a genuine surprise by choosing a story-telling politician known as "Billy" Mason. He might have been elected by the voters in November last had he been nominated by his party, but the chances are that if he had been confronted with the ordeal of a campaign he would not have been selected.

The worst feature of the present system is found in the States in which contests are still going on. In several of the far Western States that are either factional differences, or the membership of the Legislatures is split up among three parties—Republicans, Democrats and Populists—so that neither has a majority. The outcome of a contest under these circumstances is generally the election of some nonentity who has either money or corporation backing, and the interests of all the people are made to suffer in consequence.

Were the Senators elected by popular vote, such demoralizing dead-locks would be avoided, a better class of men would be secured, as a rule, and there would be no danger of a betrayal of the trust of the people by venal legislators—as is so often the case in States in which the Republicans are in a majority, while the real choice of a party would always be sure of getting what he deserves. It would take considerable time, however, to alter the Constitution so that such a result could be achieved.—New York News.

America and Its Money.

It is given out, upon the authority of Senator Walcott, that President-elect McKinley, while not desiring to pose as a silver man, is in favor of international action upon the silver question.

This statement seems like offering husks to a nation which is in financial starvation, owing to the extreme scarcity of money. That the money powers rule the old world is evident. Their influence is felt in the hovel and upon the throne. No relief from that quarter can be expected—not at least for a long time. And yet the demand for more American money is immediate and pressing.

The United States is in a position where it need not consult the powers of Europe in taking any step to add to its own influence or prosperity. The Monroe doctrine is antagonistic to the whole of Europe, and yet it is acknowledged as an American policy which must be respected. All the leading nations of Europe cry out against the American tariff system, and yet we heed them not in framing revenue legislation. The proposed restriction of immigration will likewise prove an offense to the residents of many European sections, and yet America neither consults their wishes nor heeds their opposition.

In its financial policy the United States should exercise the same freedom that it displays with its revenue laws. Let us first meet the conditions of this country before giving thought to the desires of other nations. A change in our financial system—one which will put more money in circulation—is an imperative necessity. The question of politics should not be allowed to figure in the matter.

What the leaders of one side or the other want should have no influence in deciding this question. It should be viewed only in the broadest, the most fair-minded manner. Let us place American interests above those of any foreign clime or section, and unravel the financial tangle as speedily as possible.—Philadelphia Item.

A Bad Selection.

The selection of John Sherman for Secretary of State means that a halt is to be called in diplomatic aggressiveness. Sherman is notoriously conservative in matters affecting our relations with other countries. He may be a patriot in a way, but the acute sense of national honor and the proud sentiment of national pride is lacking in him. He is cold-blooded to clamminess, and there is no reason to believe that he would show either an aggressive or an unyielding spirit in his dealings with other powers. The Dispatch only yesterday called attention to his physical condition, a good reason why he should not be called to so important a trust. To-day we say that he lacks the mental essentials, and that he will prove a failure. In his life he is, or has been, a great statesman, though one with an eye single to his own interests, but he has not been trained to diplomacy. His bent is in another direction altogether.

The indications now are that unless the Cuban war is brought to a close before March 4 nothing will be done for the insurgents after that date. Mr. McKinley's attitude toward them is unknown, and the section of his platform anent Cuba can be easily evaded. Sherman has never been enthusiastic in his advocacy of the Monroe doctrine, and he is known to oppose territorial extension.

Mark Hanna will probably go to the Senate, where he will become the administration's mouthpiece. Two worse things for America, short of war or pestilence, could not happen than the elevation of the ancient Sherman to be prime minister and the Cleveland labor crusher to be Senator. How would Mark Hanna look rattling around in old man Thurman's shoes?—Chicago Dispatch.

About the Next Congress.

There appears to be a tolerable certainty after the choosing of United States Senators last week that the Republicans will be able to pass a new tariff bill in both branches of the next Congress without making concessions to the advocates of the free coinage of silver. This probably also means an extra session immediately after the inauguration of McKinley and some exciting political debates at Washington during the spring and early summer.

The Republicans will be able to muster one-half the membership of the Senate on the side of fresh tariff-tinkering, but it is doubtful whether they can do likewise on any purely financial measure. The chances are that they will not try to meddle with the currency for some time to come. What the country has to contemplate, therefore, just now, is the McKinleyizing of the customs duties once more and a do-nothing policy as to the money question, with all sorts of possibilities in the way of talk about foreign affairs—arbitration with Great Britain and other powers, the recognition of the Cubans, etc.

The prospect is not a very cheerful one, but it would undoubtedly be worse if the Republican majority in the Senate were a working one on financial issues. Then we would undoubtedly have to witness a serious effort to retire the greenbacks and turn over the entire paper currency of the country to the national bankers without consideration for the masses and their interests.

The trusts and monopolies in the manufacturing field will promptly get their reward for aiding in the securing of the Presidency for McKinley. The bankers will not be so fortunate. They will have to wait until the party bosses satisfy themselves as to how much the people will stand in the way of class legislation.

Calamitous Conditions.

A Chicago Republican paper's London correspondent writes:

The only real opportunity for reopening the silver question is offered by the disordered finances and calamitous conditions of India, where the economic situation is growing worse every week. The reopening of the India mints would ease the stringency of the money markets in Bombay, Calcutta and other centers, and by lowering the rates of exchange would tend to reduce the risks of a large export of gold from England. This is a concession which leading financiers of the city may be inclined to recommend in connection with the coinage of 5,000,000 pounds of silver outright in England, and a considerable increase in silver deposits in the Bank of England. Concessions of this nature will not disturb the monetary system of England and will naturally be favored in preference to any engagements for entering a new monetary conference for the resumption of the discussion broken off at Brussels.

There has never been a moment since 1893 when England and the civilized world have not recognized that so far as India itself is concerned the closing of the mints to silver was a bad thing. It will be noticed that this correspondent assumes that the stringency of the money market in Calcutta, Bombay and other Indian cities would be relieved by a return to the old system. It is not expected that any human being of intelligence will deny the fact. Then why not return to it? England consults her own interests, and is not sure that Threadneedle street would be pleased. But even England may be forced to act—not on the broad ground of humanity, but for the sake of saving the Indian goose which has been laying golden eggs for her during two generations.

An image impressed upon the retina of the eye remains there an appreciable time. This is the reason why a torch swung rapidly, seems to be a circular flame.

The Most Picturesque of the Professions

MARY CALKINS JOHNSON

The trained nurse is one of the most attractive flowers of modern civilization. Displaying the dread Sairy Gamp of yesterday, with her inevitable whisky bottle and her unfailing stupidity, the trained nurse has come to comfort and to bless. She is fleet-footed and sure of hand; she is of unflinching courage and unbelievable endurance, and, heaven be praised, she is young, comely and cleanly.

We all know the old nurse, her peculiarities and her limitations. She may not have been quite so frowsy as Mrs. Gamp, her weakness for "just putting the bottle to her lips when she was so disposed" might not have been so marked, and perhaps she did not approve of Mrs. Prig's somewhat abrupt manner of soothing fractious patients, as did Mrs. Gamp, but she was not an attractive figure at best and did little to rob the sickroom of the least of its terrors. She was generally some whimsical, fat and untidy widow who had seen fifty or more hard winters and who had a wealth of uncheering reminiscence to tell about them. Invariably she had taken to nursing because she had had so much sickness in her own family that she got used to it," and because she had no other way of earning a living. That good nursing might require special aptitude or knowledge no one formerly thought of declaring. Was she not a "motherly old soul," who was willing to work cheaply and put up with all sorts of inconveniences?

But what an altogether different person is the new nurse—the trained nurse! She arrives in a cab and asks to have her luggage, which consists of a dress suit case, sent to her room. There she goes herself, and when she reappears she has changed her tailor-made dress for her neat nurse's uniform, of which the prominent features are the spotless white apron, with its crossed straps, the white muslin cap with its prim frills, and the immaculate collar and cuffs. Her trim figure, rosy cheeks and bright eyes make a picture that cannot help but brighten the dullest sick chamber. Thus arrayed she is ready to assume her position as the autocrat of the sickroom. She goes about her work in a prompt, decided, businesslike manner. Nursing as she understands and practices it means work. Instead of making herself comfortable she tries to do as much for the patient. And how many ways she finds of doing this! She arranges the bed so that the light can be let in without hurting his eyes. She hangs up her thermometer and does not rest until she has the temperature of the room just right. She calls for deodorizers and uses them scientifically. She moves about quietly and does her work without noise or confusion.
